NAGPORE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 345 OF 1922.

THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
MURADALI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 72, 76—Risk Note Form B—Carriage of goods—Unreasonable delay in delivery—Damages—Railway Company, liability.

Where a railway company fails to deliver goods consigned to it for carriage within a reasonable time, it is liable for ordinary damages in respect of the delay and such liability is not covered by the Risk Note Form B, the protection afforded by which extends to the exempted or specified cases only.

East Indian Ry. v. Gopi Krishna Kashi Prasad, 77 Ind. Cas. 1046; 45 A. 534 ; 21 A. L. J. 448 ; (1924) A. I. R. (A) 8, relied on.

Case-law discussed.

What is reasonable time within the meaning of the above rule is a question of fact to be decided on the particular circumstances of each case.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated the 11th April 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1922.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent Muradali on 29th June 1920 consigned 40 bags of gum from Katni to be delivered to him at Hatras, another station on the line belonging to the appellant Company. The goods were not delivered at Hatras and consequently after some unsuccessful correspondence with the Company, plaintiff sued the latter, on 22nd December 1920 for damages assessed at Rs. 1,900. The consignment was covered by a risk-note in form B. The last demand in writing which plaintiff made was as per notice, dated 15th November 1920. Ordinarily it takes 10 to 15 days for goods to reach Hatras from Katni, but here no delivery was made of the goods until even the date of the suit. On some pretext or other the defendant Company took nearly 3 months to put in its defence and that too after heavy adjournment costs were awarded against it. On 6th June 1921 the defendant's agent made oral statement admitting that the goods were not delivered till the date of the suit. The claim was, however, contested and liability denied on the basis of the risk-note in form B. The extent of the damages was disputed. It appears that although nearly 1½ months before the date of the statement the goods had been traced and had arrived at Hatras on 27th March 1921, this fact was, however, not brought to the notice of the Court at any of the intermediate hearings until 6th May 1921. The plaintiff in reply admitted that the goods had arrived on 27th March 1921, but submitted that he would not take delivery thereof, as they were damaged during the last 10 months, and particularly, as the market rate of the goods had fallen considerably.

On 14th July 1921, however, the plaintiff through his pleader stated that the delivery of 40 bags was taken on 1st July 1921, but he asserted that the Company was guilty of wilful, culpable negligence inasmuch as they failed to deliver goods within reasonable time, that is within the usual period of 11 or 15 days, whereas the actual delay was of a year. It was further contended that the market rate of gum had gone down from Rs. 20 in June or July 1920, to Rs. 10-12 on the date of the actual delivery, that is 1st July 1921, and that the defendant Company should be made liable to make good the loss, that is the difference in price amounting to Rs. 823-4-0 plus costs of the suit. The defendant Company denied liability for damages for the delay as also for costs and disputed the correctness of the rates stated by the plaintiff. The points for determination, therefore, have been narrowed down. The following issues are material:—

(1) Whether the defendant Company is liable for damages in view of the goods being consigned under risk-note B ?

(2) What was the value of the goods at the date of the consignment and what is their value now ?

The first Court found that the goods were not deteriorated or damaged but that the defendant Company was liable to make good the damage resulting from unreasonable delay in carrying the goods to their destination. The damages were assessed at Rs. 810 and a decree was passed for that sum together with Rs. 69-12-9 on account of interest. Against this decree an appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, by the defendant Company. One of the points urged in appeal was as to the effect of the risk-note, on the defendant Company's liability for delayed delivery. The District Judge held that under section 72 of Indian Railways Act read with the provisions of the Contract Act the defendant Company as a bailee was bound to carry the goods, under ordinary circumstances, within a reasonable time and that 9 months period could not be treated as " reasonable time" for the goods to go from Katni to Hatras in the circumstances of the case. In other words, the risk-note did not expressly or by necessary implication free the Company from the liability on account of the delivery being delayed. The award of damages was considered not excessive and the appeal was accordingly dismissed.

It is contended before me that the risk-note exonerated the Company from all liability to compensate the plaintiff, on the ground that the Company was not an insurer against delay in delivering the goods. I must say that no attempt was made at the stage of pleadings to offer any explanations as to why this inordinate delay in the matter of carrying the goods from Katni to Hatras was caused. I have read the conditions noted on the back of Exhibits P-3, D-1 and D-2. I nowhere find in any of these documents any stipulations to hold the Company harmless and free from all responsibilities for damages to the goods, whatever " by reason of accidental or unavoidable delays in transit or otherwise." Here there is no " loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to the said consignment " so as to bring the case within the protection of the risk-note Exhibit D-2. The learned Munsif was, I think, perfectly right in the interpretation he put on the words " loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment." Relying upon the case of Fazal Ilahi v. The East Indian Railway Company (1), he held plaintiff entitled to recover damages for the delay. As observed in that case, damages to be awarded in such cases are not special damages but damages assessed on general principles. Through the fault of the Company's servants, the goods were delayed in transmission and were not delivered until nearly 6½ months even after this suit was instituted. There is, no doubt, authority for the view that unless the object of the sender of goods was specially brought to the notice of the carrier and unless intimation was given that the goods should reach the destination by a particular date the plaintiff is not entitled to any special damage on the ground of non-realisation of the special profit, the consignor or consignee might have made, if the goods had reached their destination in time. The learned Advocate arguing the case from that point of view urged that this is not the plaintiff's case and, therefore, plaintiff should get nothing. This is true, but it does not mean that plaintiff is not entitled to recover even ordinary damages for the delay. In several cases he is held entitled to recover, as I will presently show, damages for the natural consequences of a failure to deliver goods within a "reasonable time." What is "reasonable time" is always a question of fact, as it depends upon the circumstances of each case. Both the Courts below have held that the delay, in this case, was very unreasonable. Under these circumstances I entertain no doubt whatever that it was due to the neglect of the railway administration that the goods were not carried to their destination within the usual time and that this could not but be "wilful", and that the award of damages as given by the lower Courts is correct. By reason of the absence of the words "damage due to accidental or unavoidable delays in transit or otherwise" in the risk-note form B (Exhibit D-2) the case must, I think, be regarded as if there was no risk-note exempting the Railway Company from liability. I think the case is analogous to the one of this very Company reported in East Indian Railway v. Tulshi Ram (2), and distinguishable from the case reported in Madras Railway Company v. Govinda Rau (3), and on which reliance was placed by the pleader and advocate of the respective parties. In the Allahabad case even 15 days delay was considered "unreasonable." In the Madras case, there was clear exemption from liability on the ground of delay in the contract itselt, which is not the case here. In the absence of any pleadings or proof that there were valid reasons preventing the Company from delivering the goods at a time when they should ordinarily have been delivered, I do not think, there is any force in the contention of the learned Advocate that the Railway Company is not an insurer against delay. In Albuquerque v. The South Indian Railway Company (4), on which reliance is placed for the appellant there was a delay of only 40 days, and in the exceptional circumstances of that case, it was held that although there was "delay" it was not "wilful" because of the want of rolling stock. That case is, therefore, no authority for the present case where absolutely no attempt is made to state much less to prove the reasons for the delay. I am fortified in this view by the recent ruling of the East Indian Railway Company v. Gopi Krishna Kashi (5) which is a case exactly analogous to or on all fours with the present case. There also this very Company claimed protection under risk-note form B as is done in this case. The delay there was of 5 months, and it was held to be "unquestionably unreasonable." The Trial Court had found that, owing to the delay, damage was suffered by the plaintiff, quite independently of any deterioration of goods. The risk-note form B was sought to be so interpreted there, as to give protection to the Railway Company from all claims or damages due to the loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods, or for damage to the consignment, but the protection afforded by the risk-note form B was held to extend to the exempted or specified cases only; and that as the damage in that case was not due to any of these special events against which the Railway was protected by the risk-note, it was held that the case was outside such protection. Relying upon this most recent and direct authority I hold that the claim has been rightly decreed by both the Courts below.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Costs of the Courts below be paid as already ordered.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate—Gift to one of several reversioners—Acceleration—Invalid transfer—Suit by remote reversioner—Daughter or daughter's son alive, effect of.

A surrender of a Hindu widow's estate to be valid must be in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one or all the reversioners nearest in degree if there be more than one.

If the nearest reversionary heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful the next presumable reversioner would be entitled to sue.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that a deed of gift executed by Mt. Dulhma in favour of her daughter Musammat Maharaji is invalid as against the rights of the reversioners. The pedigree of the family to which the parties belong is given in the judgment of the Court below. Musammat Dulhma's husband Ram Adhin was the last survivor of the joint family to which he belonged, and on his death Musammat Dulhma succeeded to a widow's interest in the property. She has three daughters who are all alive and are defendants to the suit, and at the time of the institution of the suit there was also a daughter's son Bachcha who was defendant No. 5. This child has since died.

The gift was in favour of one only of Musammat Dulhma's three daughters. The Courts below have held that it was valid as an acceleration of the widow's life interest. This finding is erroneous. It was held by the Privy Council in Rangasami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan (1) that a surrender to be valid must be in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one or all the reversioners nearest in degree if there be more than one. This decision has been followed in this Court in the recent case of Prag Narain v. Mathura Prasad (2) and by the Bombay High Court in Dodhasappa Ramalingappa Nargund v. Basawaneppa Shivlingappa Sintri (3).

The next question is whether the plaintiff as a remote reversioner had any right to institute the suit. The general rule on the subject was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rani Anand Kunwar v. The Court of Wards (4). The rule is that a suit of this nature must ordinarily be brought by the reversioner nearest in succession at the time. The cases in which a remote reversioner may be entitled to sue are thus stated." If the nearest reversionery heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful the next presumable reversioner would be entitled to sue." In this case the next reversioners entitled to sue are Mt. Maharaji's two sisters Musammat Chandra and Musammat Badra. There was an allegation in the plaint that they were in collusion with the widow, but no issue was framed on the point and no circumstance has been pointed out to us from which an inference of collusion could be drawn. The only fact relied upon by the appellant is that they refrained from suing for a period of some ten years after the gift. There is a conflict of authority on the question whether the fact that the nearest reversioner is a female holding a life-interest is in itself sufficient to give the remote reversioner a right to sue. The cases on both sides are given in a footnote to the 9th edition of Mayne's Hindu Law at page 956. In this case, however, we have to see whether the plaintiff had a good cause of action on the date when he instituted his suit. If he had no cause of action on that date his suit cannot succeed because one or more deaths have taken place during the pendency of the litigation. On the date when the suit was brought there was admittedly a daughter's son of Musammat Dulhma in existence, so that the plaintiff was not even the next reversioner after the death of the daughter's son. In Gumanan v. Jahangira (5) it was held by this Court that in the presence of daughters and a daughter's son, even if the daughter's son be a minor, a remote reversioner is not entitled to sue.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, but as we are deciding the case on a different ground from that on which it was decided by the Court below and overruling its decision on that ground, we think the costs should not include fees on the higher scale, and we direct accordingly.

A suit does not lie for specific performance of an agreement to lend money on mortgage.

Where a mortgagee does not pay the whole of the mortgage-money, the mortgagor cannot sue for the recovery of the balance, but he may obtain compensation or damages for breach of the contract or may redeem the mortgage on payment of the sum due.

Therefore, the right of a mortgagor under an agreement to obtain money on mortgage, being a mere right to sue for damages, cannot be assigned under section 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in A. S. No. 239 of 1920 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Karkal, in O. S. No. 317 of 1919.

Mr. B. Sitaram Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The second defendant executed a mortgage in favour of the first defendant. Out of the consideration, a small portion was not paid. The plaintiff sues for the recovery of that balance on the strength of an assigment made by the third defendant who himself had obtained a similar assignment from the second defendant. The first defendant pleaded that the balance was payable only on the performance of a certain condition. The lower Appellate Court has clearly found that the second defendant made default and that the condition was not fulfilled. On this finding, the plaintiff can have no decree. Apart from this circumstance, it is perfecty clear on the authorities cited Anakaran Kasim v. Saidamadath Avulla (1), Rajagopala Aiyar v. Sheik Davood Rowther (2) and Sheik Galim v. Sadarjan Bibi (3), that the present suit is a suit to enforce an agreement to lend money on a mortgage and that such a suit does not lie. In Anakaran Kasmi v. Saidamadath Avulla (1) this is what the learned Judges say :—

> "The Court ought not to make a decree for specific performance of an agreement to lend money on mortgage. Plaintiffs may obtain compensation or damages in a properly framed suit against the defendant for breach of his contract or they may redeem the mortgage on payment of the sum due."

The English cases on the point are referred to in Sheik Galim v. Sadarjan Bibi (3).

It was open to the mortgagor to sue the mortgagee for damages but a right to obtain damages cannot be transfered. See section 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The Second Appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (V of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment of liability—Acknowledgment written by agent bearing name of principal, whether sufficient—Authority to acknowledge liability.

A letter acknowledging liability for a debt written by the munim of a firm and bearing no other signature than the name of the firm in the heading of the letter is sufficient to come within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act provided the munim was authorised to make the acknowledgment.

Mathura Das v. Babu Lal, 1 A. 683 ; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 477, followed.

The mere fact that the munim used to write letters on behalf of his principals is not sufficient in law to enable the Court to infer that he was an authorised agent for the purpose of making an acknowledgment of liability.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 26th July 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether a certain letter, Ex. 2, is a good acknowledgment of liability so as to extend limitation against the defendant appellant within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. The letter purports to be from the defendant's firm Ram Charan Jagdish Prasad to the plaintiffs' firm Sheo Baksh Sri Narain. As far as the contents of the letter are concerned it contains an acknowledgment of liability sufficient to come within the section. It was written by Piyare Lal the Munim of the defendant. It bears no signature other than the name of the firm in the heading of the letter. Such a signature has, however, been held to be good in Mathura Das v. Babu Lal, (1) and Mohesh Lal v. Busunt Kumaree (2). The question remains, however, whether there is proof that Piyare Lal was authorised to make an acknowledgment on behalf of his principal within the meaning of Explanation 2 of the section. The Court below holds that he was, on the ground of an admission made by the defendant that Piyare Lal used to write letters on behalf of his principal. No evidence was offered by the plaintiffs on this point. No question was put as to whether this particular letter was written by the authority of the principal or as to whether Piyare Lal was authorised to acknowledge debts on behalf of his principal. It was distinctly denied that he was authorised to execute a hundi. We think that the mere fact that the defendant used to write letters on behalf of his principal is not sufficient in law to enable the Court to infer that he was an authorised agent for the purpose of making an acknowledgment of liability. On this ground we allow the appeal and as the suit apart from the acknowledgment was admittedly beyond time we dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Application against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated the 9th November 1923 upholding the order of the Munsif, Fatehpur, dated the 13th March 1923.

Mr. H. Dhian Chandra for Mr. M. A. Khan, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ram Prasad Varma, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Barabanki upholding the award of an arbitrator. The facts of the case are somewhat unusual. The plaintiff filed a suit in the Court of a Munsif for possession of certain trees on payment of Rs. 50 alleging that he had purchased the trees from one Makhdum and was entitled to possession from a prior mortgagee on payment of his mortgage-money. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the grounds that though the plaintiff's sale-deed was genuine the vendor had no property to sell and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to no relief. The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge but instead of allowing the appeal to be heard the parties referred the matter to the arbitration of a certain taluqdar. This gentleman made an award against the plaintiff and the latter filed objections. The objections were heard by the Subordinate Judge and dismissed. Now on the same grounds the plaintitff comes before this Court in revision. Briefly his case is that the award was bad first on the ground that the reference was not in writing and, therefore, contrary to law, secondly that the decision was not based on the points, referred to the arbitrator. I may say at once that the objections relating to misconduct and the improper action of some third party in influencing the decision of the arbitrator are not worthy of consideration in this Court. The first objection that the reference was not in writing is met by the decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Abdul Hamid v. Riaz-ud-din (1). In this case the reference was made by the Ccurt and the parties both appeared and conducted their case before the arbitrator. Under these circumstances a written reference was hardly necessary and I do not think that the award could be set aside on this ground. The second and most serious ground for revision is based on the supposition that the reference to the arbitrator consisted of the points raised in appeal against the decision of the Munsif. Now an arbitrator cannot hear an appeal against a Court and can only decide the points referred to him. According to the order of reference the arbitrator was entrusted with the decision of the case. He was not bound to consider in any way the decision of the Munsif, and as a matter of fact he framed new issues and accepted many pages of written arguments besides recording evidence. The upshot of his inquiry was that he found the sale-deed invalid for want of consideration. Now this was not actually the point raised in the pleadings but there is no question that the sale-deed had been essential to the disposal of the plaintiff's case. It is impossible at this stage of the proceedings to consider whether the arbitrator's decision was right or wrong. He certainly decided a vital point and gave a decision which is the same as the decision of the Munsif's Court although based on different grounds. I cannot hold that the arbitrator went beyond the terms of his reference and there is no question as to misconduct or corruption. Section 15 of Schedule II lays down the reasons on which alone an arbitrator's award can be held to be void and none of those reasons apply to the case before me. Where parties prefer an amateur Court to a professional Court they take the risk that the decision may not be technically perfect. The law is not supposed to assist such persons to get a second decision from a professional Court because they are dissatisfied with the decision of the amateur tribunal which they themselves have chosen. After all I cannot find that the plaintiff has a valid grievance. The Munsif gave the case against him, the arbitrator gave the case against him and the Subordinate Judge was of the same opinion. The arbitrator's methods may have been unlike those of an ordinary Court and his decision is not that of a practised lawyer but I have no reason to suppose that he did not give justice and there is nothing in the grounds for revision which would justify me in setting aside the order of the lower Court. I dismiss the application with costs.

FATEH CHAND v. MURARI LAL

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, the rent being payable by the lessee or 'thekadar' under a written lease bearing date 28th June 1918.

It appears that the Local Government, by notification in the Local Official Gazette, remitted land revenue for a portion of the year (kharif) 1326F. The defendant-lessee claimed in the suit that he should receive an abatement in the rent under section 51 of the Tenancy Act of 1901. The lower Court held that he should and decreed the claim after allowing reduction on account of the contention of the defendant.

In appeal it has been contended by the plaintiff that there is a clear stipulation in the lease that the rent would be payable irrespective of whether there is any drought or flood or any calamity by which there is no produce in the village. We have to construe section 51 of the Tenancy Act and to see whether the provisions of the said section override the contract or whether the contract should prevail. In section 51 the word used is "tenant". Under section 4 of the Tenancy Act the word "tenant", unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, includes a thekadar or lessee. We see nothing in section 51 repugnant to the sense that the word "tenant" should include a lessee. If we look to the principle on which section 51 is based we find that it is owing to there being a want of produce in the village that the Government remits the revenue. If in spite of the Government remitting the revenue, the landlord be allowed to collect the rent, the cultivators would receive no benefit and there would be no meaning in the Government giving up the revenue. Similarly, if in the present case the Zemindar, the plaintiff, be allowed to recover his full amount of rent from the defendant, the result would be that the defendant must try by unfair means to get the rents out of the tenants, the actual cultivators of the soil. We think that there is nothing in section 51 which enables us to take out the case of a lessee, who has agreed to pay rent under all circumstances, from the provisions of section 51 of the Tenancy Act. As for the Statute overriding a contract, it is sufficient to say that in the majority of cases, the rent is fixed as the result of a contract, and yet the law says that the rent would not be paid or would be suspended. Two cases were cited in the Court below and they have been cited here also. They are to be found in Bachan Lal v. Pooran Kunwar. (1) In this case the thekadar was compelled to pay the rent in spite of remission of the land revenue on the ground that he was holding under a special contract from the Zemindar and he may have made substantial profit in fat years. Section 4 of the Tenancy Act was not referred to in that case. This was a decision by a single Judge. The second case is a later one and was decided in 1909. It is reported in Shiam Lal v. Makhan Lal (2). In this case too the thekadar was compelled to pay the rent, but the ground given was entirely different. It was this. Although under section 51 of the Tenancy Act the Local Government remitted or suspended the payment of land revenue there was nothing before the learned Judges to show that there was any order passed to apply to the case of a 'thekadar'. The learned Judges say that they allowed the defendant an opportunity to produce an order that may have been passed by the Collector, but no order was produced before their Lordships. Section 4 of the Tenancy Act was not referred to in this case also. Without expressing any opinion on the correctness or otherwise of this case, we note that, we have in the present case, an express order of the Collector directing that, the rent payable by the defendant-lessee should be remitted to the extent mentioned therein. This document which is called a 'certificate by the Collector' is printed at p. 26 of the record. We should think that the contract between the parties is entirely over-ridden by the express provision of law contained in section 51 of the Tenancy Act. The judgment of the Court below seems to have been correct except in respect of costs, as to which we will pass orders later on. The appeal is otherwise dismissed with proportionate costs to the parties, which will include in this Court Counsels' fees on the higher scale.

There is a cross-objection on behalf of the defendant-respondent. Two points were taken, but only the second one is pressed. It appears that the Court below ordered that the parties should pay their own costs. This portion of the decree has been taken exception to. We see no justification for allowing no costs to the parties. We allow the cross-objection and the appeal in part and order that the parties pay and receive costs in both the Courts in proportion to their respective failure and success. The respondent will receive costs of the cross-objection in proportion to his success. The costs in this Court will include Counsels' fees on the higher scale.

(2) 2 Ind. Cas. 629.

A Court acts without jurisdiction if it modifies an award because it takes a view different from that held by the arbitrator.

Rule against an order, dated the 31st August 1923, in S. C. C. Suit (Register) Nos. 33 and 49 of 1923 of the Court of the Sub. Judge of Nadia exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes.

Babu Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhry (with him Babu Jnan Chandra Roy), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The two suits out of which the present Rules have arisen being Suits Nos. 33 and 49 of 1923 of the Court of Small Causes at Krishnagar were referred to a certain arbitrator. The arbitrator submitted his award on the 17th August 1923. On the 27th of August 1923, the opposite party in these Rules put in a petition challenging the validity and correctness of the award. The petition was headed as one under para. 15 of Schedule. II of the Code of Civil Procedure. It dealt substantially with two sorts of grievances. One was that there was misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, in as much as he had refused to take relevant evidence which the opposite party was ready to adduce before him and the other was that the arbitrator had been misled into coming to certain findings upon calculations which were the result of fraudulent representations made to him on behalf of the petitioner in these Rules. The matter came up before the learned Subordinate Judge on the 31st of August 1923. The learned Judge noted in his judgment that an objection had been taken to the award on the allegation that the arbitrator had been guilty of misconduct in not taking into evidence all that the opposite party was ready to adduce; and he himself went into the account-books and, being of opinion that a certain finding of the arbitrator with regard to the period up to which the Karbar between the parties continued was wrong on the face of the account-books, set aside that finding and made two decrees in the two suits in consonance with his own finding to the effect that the said Karbar went on down to the end of Chaitra 1326, B. S. The learned Judge seems to have held in his judgment not that the awad is fit to be set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in para. 15 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code but that the award should be modified or corrected in accordance with the provisions of para 12 of that schedule. Para. 15 of Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down that no award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds, namely, (a) corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator, (b) either party having been guilty of fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator. It is not necessary for the purposes of the present cases to refer to the other part of this paragraph. The learned Subordinate Judge has recorded no finding to the effect that there was any corruption or misconduct on the part of the arbitrator nor has he found in his judgment that any party has been guilty of fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator. It is clear then that the learned Judge should not have acted under the powers conferred on him by para. 15 of Schedule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Nor did the learned Judge, in my opinion, purport to act under the provisions of that paragraph. He preferred to correct or modify the award in accordance with para 12 of Schedule 11. The provisions therein contained empower the Court to modify or correct an award (I do not quote such part of this paragraph as is not relevant for the present purposes) (b) where the award is imperfect in form or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision; or (c) where the award contains a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission." The mistake into which the arbitrator fell, according to the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be said to be a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission and, therefore, the provisions of sub-para, (c) of para, 12 of Schedule II Code of Civil Procedure need not further be considered. Nor was the error one which made the award either imperfect in form or which could be amended without affecting the decision of the arbitrator. It may be that the learned Subordinate Judge was perfectly justified upon the evidence before him to come to the conclusion as he did to the effect that the arbitrator had taken a wrong view of the evidence and that such a wrong view was palpable or was apparent on the face of the account books. But even then the Court had no power to rectify or correct the award unless the award was imperfect in form or the obvious error was of such a character that it could be amended without affecting the decision of the arbitrator. It is well-settled that a Court acts without jurisdiction if it modifies an award because it takes a view different from that held by the arbitrator. In this connection, reference may be made to the case of Madepalli Venkataswami v. Madepalli Suramma (1), where, after discussing the authorities bearing upon the question, the learned Judges of the Madras High Court have laid down that even in a case where the award is patently illegal in consequence of the arbitrator having taken a wrong view on a pure question of law, the Court has no power to rectify the same under the provisions of para. 12 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, in my opinion, acted entirely without jurisdiction in modifying or correcting the award of the arbitrator and the decision passed by him cannot be upheld in any view of the matter.

The question now arises whether I should send the cases back to the learned Subordinate Judge to deal with the objections which had been taken before him by the Opposite Party in these Rules and which do not appear to have been considered or dealt with by him in the order which he has passed. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the petitioner has drawn my attention to the order-sheet of the learned Subordinate Judge and has asked me to hold that there was no attempt really made by the Opposite Party to prove the allegations which he made in his petition under paragraph 15 of Schedule II of the Code. I have duly considered the matter and it seems to me, regard being had to the fact that the Court itself took a wrong view of the law, that the Opposite Party in these Rules might probably have been misled and I, therefore, do not propose to refuse him an opportunity of substantiating those allegations. It will be for him to prove those facts and, if he succeeds in proving the[illegible] the satisfaction of the Court below, the learned Subordinate Judge will be able on a proper case being made out to deal with the matter on the footing of the provisions contained in para. 15 of Schedule II. If they are not made out then the learned Judge will have to proceed in accordance with the provisions of para. 16 (2) of Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure and pronounce a judgment and pass decrees in accordance with those provisions. The Rules are made absolute as indicated above. Having Messrs. Saila Nath Mukerji and U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and M. A. Aziz, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the Court of first instance a suit was brought for the possession of a house by three brothers, Munna Lal major and Baijnath and Rang Lal minors, under the guardianship of Munna Lal. There were three sets of defendants, Rambilas, Gulab Rai and others and Ramjidas. The plaint allegations were that by collusion between Rambilas and the plaintiffs' cousin Ramjidas, Rambilas was placed in possession of the house, and that subsequently Gulab Rai and others took possession and refused to vacate on notice being issued to them. In 1909 Rambilas sued Ramjidas and the then minors Munna Lal Baijnath and Rang Lal under the guardainship of the Nazir of the Court of suit, for recovery of money due on bahi khata accounts. The defence of Ramjidas was that he had transferred a house worth Rs. 800 and odd to the plaintiff of that suit on condition of the price being set off against the money due. This defence was accepted and the Court passed a decree giving to the defendants credit for that sum if they executed a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff. No such deed was executed and the plaintiff applied for execution of the full amount of the decree. Ramjidas objected and on the litigation being carried up to this Court, the order of this Court was that Rambilas should file a draft sale-deed within two months of the date of the order, which was 1st November 1912. No further action was taken by Rambilas in execution of his decree, which in consequence became inoperative by lapse of time.

The learned District Judge held that Rambilas entered into possession of the house in 1907, that his possession was adverse from that year, that it had perfected into good title when the present suit was instituted in 1920, and that the suit was time-barred because Munna Lal had attained majority more than three years prior to the institution of the suit.

The points argued before us were :—

1. That the possession of Rambilas did not become adverse till 1st November 1912, the date of the order of this Court referred to above.

2. That Gulab Rai was an independent trespasser and the period of his possession cannot be tacked on to the period of possession of Rambilas ; and

3. That even if the suit be barred against Munna Lal, it was not barred against his two brothers who were still minors. Only Baijnath and Rang Lal have appealed and it is not explained why Munna Lal did not appeal if there was any substance in the first two arguments advanced by the appellants' learned Counsel. It is not clear how the order of this Court made any difference to Rambilas's possession and why it should become adverse on that date. It is found by the lower Court as a fact that Rambilas entered into possession by right of ownership in 1907. The appellants' learned Counsel submitted that Rambilas would have said so at the time of his money suit if he had claimed to be owner of the house. In our opinion, he was not required to make such a declaration. He wanted to hold on to the house, recover the full amount due to him and give no set-off for the price of the house. It was not to his interest to disclose the arrangement regarding the house of which he was in possession. The defence in that suit led the Court to recognize the arrangement between Rambilas and Ramjidas. Ramjidas stated as his defence that he had made over possession of the house to Rambilas and was entitled to a reduction of the money claim by the price of that house. The appellants' learned Counsel argued that Ramjidas was colluding with Rambilas and that his clients did not recognise any act of Ramjidas,who was not acting in their behalf. If this is the attitude of the appellants, Rambilas's possession as owner against the wishes of the appellants, was certainly adverse to the appellants at all events, from its very inception, whatever its nature may have been against Ramjidas. The learned Judge of the lower Court was correct in holding that the possession of Rambilas was adverse from the year 1907.

Gulab Rai was not an independent trespasser. He derived his title from Rambilas to whom he paid the price of the house. The appellants' learned Counsel pointed out that there was no sale-deed and that the sale was not valid. This fact does not prevent Gulab Rai from being a successor in interest to Rambilas. When it was definitely put to the learned Counsel by one of us whether there was any authority for the proposition that one trespasser succeeding another can tack his possession on to the former's only in case of a valid transfer, he was unable to cite one. Gulab Rai according to the statements of both himself and Rambilas derived his title from Rambilas and did not commit trespass against both Rambilas and the appellants. Gulab Rai who stepped into the shoes of Rambilas with the latter's consent continued the trespass, which had commenced with the possession of Rambilas. The suit was, therefore, barred by 12 years' limitation.

The learned District Judge has held, though not in clear terms, that the three plaintiffs were members of a joint Hindu family with Munna Lal as manager and that Munna Lal having failed to bring the suit within three years of attaining majority, his brothers were barred from bringing the suit in accordance with the principles of section 7 of the Limitation Act. It was justified in presuming that Munna Lal as the oldest brother and the sole adult member of the family became the manager from the date on which he attained majority. The appellant's learned Counsel quoted Ganga Dayal v. Maniram (1) as an authority against this proposition. In that case, however, the learned Judges did not find any evidence to support the suggestion made at the hearing of that appeal that plaintiff No. 1 of that suit was the manager of the family (see p. 160 of the Report). This ruling was distinguished in the later ruling of Achhaibar Singh v. Ram Sarup Sahu (2). It was held there on the authority of the Full Bench in Hori Lal v. Munwan Kunwar (3) that the managing member of a joint Hindu family can give good receipts on behalf of the family, which will bind the family. These subsequent rulings of this Court enunciate the same principles of law as have been laid down by the Madras and Bombay High Courts in Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Sahwan (4), and Bapu Tatya Desai v. Bala Raoji Desai (5). The finding of the learned District Judge is, therefore, well supported by the case law on the subject.

The appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs on the higher scale.

NAJABULLA JAMADAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 100 (2),—Ex parte decision—Second Appeal, maintainability of.

A Second Appeal against an ex parte decision is maintainable under section 100 (2), Civil Procedure Code, even though there are other remedies open to the appellant.

When a case is decided ex parte, the remedy open to the party affected by the decision is threefold; first, he may apply for restoration of the case; secondly, he may apply for a review of judgment, and thirdly, he may appeal from the decree.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Court, Mymensingh, dated the 27th September 1920 modifying the decree of the Munsif, Additional Court at Kishoreganga, dated the 28th February 1918.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, (with Babu Urukram Das Chakravarthy), for the Appellant :—

This appeal is against an exparte decision of the lower Appellate Court in spite of my client's application for an adjournment on very reasonable grounds. My client got a decree against his tenant in the Trial Court. On appeal by the tenant the decree was confirmed. But again an application for review having been made by the tenant the same was granted. Against this my client preferred an appeal here and sent all his papers to his Vakil. During that time the lower Appellate Court fixed the 25th September peremptorily for rehearing of the appeal. On that date my client applied for an adjournment on the ground that his papers were with his Vakil who was away on the long vacation of the High Court. The Court, however, refused the application on the ground that the case was old and the order fixing the date was a peremptory one and then heard the case ex parte. Now was it not arbitrary and illegal? By all means the case should be reheard in the interests of justice.

Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondent :—

There is no error of law or irregularity of procedure in this case. The lower Appellate Court in the exercise of its discretion refused any further adjournment of the appeal and gave sufficient notice to the parties that the case would be taken up on the 25th September 1921. It has also given good reasons for not granting any further time. The appellant had sufficient time to get the papers from his Vakil in the High Court for the purpose of the hearing of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court. The High Court was closed from September till the middle of November and so the papers could not be required for any hearing in the High Court on the 25th. The learned Vakil's letter shows that he was in Calcutta at the time and that the papers could have been sent to Mymensingh for the hearing of the appeal on the 25th September and sent back to the learned Vakil for use at the hearing in the High Court after reopening in November. The learned Subordinate Judge in view of the fact that the suit had been pending since 1917 and had been the subject of a Review and an appeal to the High Court during that time declined to grant any further time. He exercised his discretion and refused further adjournment. There is no irregularity in this procedure within the meaning of section 100 (c), Civil Procedure Code. I submit that a refusal to grant an adjournment cannot be a ground of second appeal. The remedy of the appellant was to apply to set aside the ex parte decree under O. XLI, r. 21. This Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the decree in second appeal on this ground. Further even if this Court had any discretion in the matter it should not be exercised in favour of the appellant in view of the long period during which this litigation has been dragging on. Even this appeal which was filed in 1921 has not been expedited and it is being heard after 3 years. The other side is the landlord and has a long purse. He is not entitled to a reversal of the decree as of right and should not be shown any indulgence which would give him an opportunity of further harassing the poor tenant.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak in reply—My client made an application for adjournment of the hearing of the appeal and he had no fresh grounds to advance for restoration of it. Therefore, it is incorrect to say that there was any other remedy open to my client which was not tried. Besides, if my friend's contention were true, in each case in which an appeal is preferred to this Court an application for review of judgment of the lower Court should be made. But certainly this is not necessary and binding. Therefore, instead of making an application for restoration of the appeal or for review of the judgment my client thought it better to prefer an appeal directly to this Court, and he was quite within his rights to do it. As to the jurisdiction of this Court, it is wide enough for interfering in a case like the present one. Then again, clause 2 of section 100, Civil Procedure Code expressly provides for an appeal against an appellate decree passed ex parte giving right to the appellant on the one hand and jurisdiction to the Court on the other.

JUDGMENT.—It is an unfortunate case. It was started nearly 7 years ago and had a chequered career. It came to this Court twice. It is not necessary to relate the history of its progress. It is enough for our present purpose to refer to a few dates. The suit was decreed by the first Court and there was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court. There was also an application for review of judgment before the lower Appellate Court which was finally granted on the 20th August 1920. An appeal was preferred to this Court against the order granting review, on the 30th August 1920. On the 4th September 1920, the learned Judge having granted the review, fixed the 25th September peremptorily for the rehearing of the appeal. On the 25th September the appellant before us applied for an adjournment on the ground that he had sent all the papers in connection with the case to his pleader in the High Court in order to file an appeal and as the pleader had left Calcutta during the long vacation he had not been able to get back the papers from him. The learned Judge, however, rejected the application and heard the case ex-parte. His main grounds for refusing the adjournment are, first, that the case was an old one; and secondly, that he had given peremptory notice to the parties that the appeal would be taken up for hearing on the date fixed. We think that the Court below would have acted more wisely in allowing the respondent opportunity to be present at the hearing after the receipt by him of all the necessary papers that were with his pleader in the High Court. It is possible that the application for adjournment made before the lower Appellate Court was groundless. It is possible also that he had sent his papers to his vakil in the High Court because as a matter of fact an appeal was preferred on the 30th August 1920, that being the last day the High Court sat before the long vacation. The case was no doubt an old one but it was restored not even a month before it was heard. In these circumstances we think that the learned Judge would have exercised proper discretion in giving an opportunity to the appellant to appear at the hearing. The result of the rejection of the application was that the ex-parte decision affected not only the present tenant applicant but might affect the other tenants of the estate also. In this view of the matter it seems that this appeal should be reheard.

The respondent opposes this order on the ground that we have no jurisdiction to interfere under section 100, Civil Procedure Code, as appellant has other remedies open to him in the Court below. His contention is that the proper course which should have been adopted by the appellant was to apply to the Court below under O. XLI, r. 21 to restore the appeal to its file and to rehear it in his presence; but he has not adopted this course. It is well known that when a case is decided ex-parte the remedy open to the party affected by the decision is threefold; first he may apply for restoration of the case; secondly, he may apply for a review of judgment, and thirdly, he may appeal from the decree. In this case the appellant has chosen the last recourse. I am not sure that this course was not intentionally adopted for a purpose ; but that is a remedy open to him and I cannot avail him of it. With regard to our jurisdiction under the Code I think that that jurisdiction is wide enough to embrace this. It is not necessary to refer to any provision of the law ; but if any be needed reference may be made to clause (2) of section 100 Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has agreed to pay to the respondent all his costs up to this stage of the litigation. On this undertaking being given, we direct that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the appeal sent back to that Court for rehearing in accordance with law. The respondent will be entitled to costs in all the Courts. The appeal will be reheard by the lower Appellate Court on the appellant depositing the costs of the respondent in the lower Appellate Court within one month after the arrival of the record there and assessment of costs by that Court. On his failure to do so, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Compromise of suit—Agreement to be bound by statement of third party—Admission by nominee of party—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 20, 31.

The plaintiff and the defendant in a suit signed a written statement which said" it has been settled between the parties that G. shall hear our whole affair and that we shall accept any statement that he may make before the Court." G. made a statement on oath against the plaintiff and the Court dismissed the suit. The plaintiff urged in appeal that the statement of G. was not binding and that the Court should have decided the Case on the merits :—

Held (1) that the agreement operated as an adjustment of the suit and was binding on the parties.

(2) that at any rate the statement of G. must be taken to be an admission made in the suit by a nominee of a party thereto, which was as effectual and conclusive as an admission made by the party himself in his witten or oral pleadings.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 4th December 1923.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are connected and arise out of two suits for pre-emption.

On the 22nd February 1922 before the Trial Court the plaintiff and the contesting defendants with the pleaders for both parties signed a written statement to the following effect :

" It has been settled between the parties that Rai Sahib Pt. Gopal Das Sharma, Vakil, shall hear our whole affair and that we shall accept any statement that he may make before the Court."

It is not necessary to refer to the various adjournments in the case, but it may be noted that ultimately the case was under an order of the District Judge transferred from the Court of the learned Munsif to that of another officer. Pt. Gopal Das Sharma, Vakil, made a statement on oath before this latter Court. And the suit was dismissed in accordance with the referee's statement.

On an appeal by the plaintiff to the District Judge that decree has been affirmed.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is strongly contended that the statement referred to above was not a reference to arbitration ; nor did it come under the Oaths Act. It is, accordingly, urged that it is in no way binding on the plaintiff, and that the Courts below should have decided the case on the merits and not on the mere statement of Pt. Gopal Das Sharma.

We are of opinion that the contention of the plaintiff cannot prevail. The case can be looked at from two points of view. To say the least, the statement being duly signed by the plaintiff as well as his pleader amounted to an agreement that he would be bound by the statement that would be made by the referee. The statement made by the referee was clearly a statement made by a person to whom the parties to the suit had expressly referred for information in reference to the matters in dispute, and was a statement within the meaning of section 20 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is true that ordinarily mere admissions are not conclusive as is provided in section 31 ; but admissions of this kind must be taken to be admissions made in a suit by the nominee of a party thereto. Such admissions, therefore, are as conclusive and effectual as admissions made by the parties in their written or oral pleadings. The effect is to prevent each party from resiling from the statement made by such a nominee.

It may also be said that the parties really compromised their dispute in this manner that they agreed that the decree of the Court shall be in accordance with the statement to be made by their nominee hereafter. There is nothing to prevent the parties from compromising the suit and agreeing to a decree being passed in terms to be stated by a person named. Such an agreement, therefore, would be an adjustment of the suit, and it is difficult to see how any party could be allowed to go back on it. The Madras High Court has treated such an agreement as an adjustment of the claim (Vide Chinna Venkatasami Naicken v. Venkatasami Naicken (1) and the earlier cases referred to therein). In the case of Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan v. Muhammad Imtiaz Ali (2) it was held that an agreement by a defendant to a civil suit to be bound by whatever statement that might be made by the plaintiff upon oath was binding on him even though it did not fall under the Oaths Act. A similar view has been expressed by Walsh, J., in the case of Kesho Ram v. Piare Lal (3).

We are satisfied that it is impossible to allow the plaintiff now to go back on the statement. There is no suggestion that there was any fraud or dishonesty or misrepresentation which has prejudiced the plaintiff. We accordingly, dismiss this appeal under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against the order of the Officiating Sub-Judge, Unao, dated the 1st November 1922.

Mr. M. L. Tiwari, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Babu Debi Singh seems to have possessed considerable immoveable property. On his death his sons, Rao Udit Narain Singh and Girja Bakhsh Singh, naturally succeeded to his estate. On the death of Rao Udit Narain Singh, his son, Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh, entered into the possession of the estate of his deceased father. Mt. Raj Kuar is the daughter of Rao Udit Narain Singh. She sued her brother, Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh, for recovery of possession of the estate of her father on the ground that Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh was not the heir of his father for the reason that he had been adopted by his uncle, Girja Bakhsh Singh, and consequently Mt. Raj Kuar was the sole heiress to the estate of her father. Her suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, which was the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore. She appealed against that decree to the High Court of Allahabad. The learned Judges of the last-mentioned Court set aside the decree of the Court of the first instance and decreed the suit of Mt. Raj Kuar against her brother, Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh.

It is admitted that the decision of the High Court mainly rested on the fact that Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh had been adopted by his uncle, Girja Bakhsh Singh. It naturally followed that Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh was not the heir of his father in the estate. In view of this decree Mt. Raj Kuar entered into the possession of the estate and an inquiry was instituted into the claim for mesne profits which she had against her brother, The result of that inquiry was that Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh was held liable for a large sum of money amounting to Rs. 31,340-8-0. Mt. Raj Kuar then proceeded to execute her decree for mesne profits against the properties held by Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh. The plaintiff of the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, is the son of Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh. He prays for a declaration that the properties, which Mt. Raj Kuar has attached in execution of her decree for mesne profits, are not liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of that decree. The broad ground of the claim of the plaintiff is that he and his father formed a joint Hindu family and the properties in suit are the joint ancestral properties of that family. The Court below has dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

We are of opinion that the decree of the lower Court is correct and should be maintained. The only argument advanced in support of the appeal by the learned pleader for the appellant is that the debt for which the decree was passed was either an illegal or immoral debt and consequently under the law of the Mitakshara as now settled the joint family property is not liable for such a debt. It is obvious that this contention is founded on the admission that apart from the question of illegality or immorality of the debt the decree for mesne-profits which Mt. Raj Kuar had obtained against her brother could be executed against the whole of the joint family property. We have mentioned this aspect of the case for the reason that whatever might have been the doubts on that point before to-day they must be taken to have been set at rest by the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Bahadur Raja Brij Nararin Rai v. Mangal Prasad Rai (1). This decision must be taken to be the last word on the subject. Their Lordships laid down five propositions. The present case falls within proposition No. 2, which is as follows :—" If he is the father and the reversioners are the sons, he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose, lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceeding upon a decree for payment of that debt." It is agreed before us that the decree for mesne-profits stands on the same footing as any other ordinary debt incurred by the father. The real question, therefore, which we have to decide in this appeal, is whether this debt can be construed as illegal or immoral.

We are of opinion that it is not possible to so construe this debt. There is a string of decisions of all High Courts in which execution of decrees as against joint family properties has been upheld though such decrees were for mesne profits passed in suits instituted against the father alone. Indeed the Privy Council decision in the case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2), seems to us to be a direct authority on the point. In the case before us, our opinion is strengthened by the peculiar circumstances of it. Rao Chandra Shekhar Bakhsh was defending his position to the estate of his father. No objection can be taken to that act of his and if he eventually failed in the litigation against his sister on questions of fact on which the Court of first instance and the Court of Appeal had differed it is hardly possible to characterise his conduct as immoral or illegal.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Agra, dated the 2nd October 1923.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, and Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the revision of an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Agra granting to the plaintiff-opposite party a decree for Rs. 357-8-0 as damages.

It has been found that the plaintiff booked a number of bags of chillies at Semaria Ghat Station on the B and N. W. Railway for despatch to Agra Fort Station on the East Indian Railway. The goods were despatched on the 5th May 1922 and were not delivered till the 19th of June 1922, 45 days later. It has further been found on the evidence of the Railway Company's own witness that the normal time for the journey is from 11 to 16 days. There was, therefore, in this case a delay of a month, and during this interval the price of chillies dropped from Rs. 24-8-0 a maund to Rs. 21-8-0 a maund, a difference of Rs. 3 a maund.

On behalf of the defendant-applicant it is contended that as the goods were consigned to the Railway Company under a risk-note in Form A, the Company is exempted from all liability for loss occasioned to the consignor by the delay. This Risk-Note is employed in cases where goods tendered for carriage are either already in bad condition or so defectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage or wastage in transit, and in the particular risk-note which has been signed by the consignor in the present case the consignment is described as contained in " bags old, torn and different sizes, contents liable to wastage, damage or shortage in weight in transit." The note goes on to say that the sender "agrees and undertakes to hold Railway administration.....harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same."

The learned Munsif has held that this language clearly shows that the risk-note in form A has no concern whatever with the case of delay. In this view I concur. It is obvious that the special contract contained in this document is merely intended to protect the Railway from responsibility for any loss or damage which will result to the goods from defective packing and consquent leakage or wastage in transit. No evidence appears to have been given by the Company to explain or account for the unusual delay except that when the waggon containing the goods arrived at Gorakhpur on the 7th May it was found to be "panel torn" and the goods were, therefore, transhipped to another waggon on the following day. This explanation, however, fails to account for more than one day out of the month which was spent on the journey in excess of the usual time. It has been held in East Indian Railway v. Indar Man (1) that in the absence of any risk note a Railway Company is bound to deliver goods within a reasonable time, and is liable to pay compensation for loss caused by delay which it is unable to explain. It is true that in the present case there was a risk-note, but it was of a character which did not protect the Company against the consequences of delay. The learned counsel for the defendant-applicant has relied on Ram Kishun Ram v. North Western Railway Company (2), and The Secretary of State v. Jiwan Abdulla (3). These, however, were both cases in which a risk-note in form B was employed and the goods were taken at a reduced rate on conditions quite different to those contained in the contract which is embodied in form A. The case of the East Indian Railway v. Gopi Krishna (4) is similar in many respects to the present case, though in it also the risk-note was in form B. In that case unreasonable delay in transit which resulted in damage to the plaintiff quite independent of any deterioration or loss of the goods consigned was held to give a cause of action to the plaintiff.

In the first ground of appeal reference is made to paragraph 40 the Goods Tariff Regulation. This Regulation, however, was not produced ; nor was this point argued.

The application is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

CIVIL RULE NO. 385 OF 1923.

March 26, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Mukerjee.

JATINDRA CHANDRA CHOWDHURY
—PETITIONER
versus
THE RANGPUR TOBACCO CO. LTD.
AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE-PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code, (V of 1908), s. 73, Cls. (a), (b), (c)—Any property ; meaning of—Decree on the basis of security of moveable property, legality of.

There may be mortgage or hypothecation of movable properties. Such hypothecation or mortgage not accompanied by possession confers a good title upon the person in whose favour it is made and the law recognises the transaction as security and equity gives effect to it.

Srish Chandra v. Mungi Bewa, 9 C. W. N. 14 ; Damodar v. Atmaram, 8 Bom. L. R. 344 ; Haripodo v. Anathnath, 44 Ind. Cas. 211 ; 22 C. W. N. 758; Puninthavelu v. Bhashyam Ayyangar, 25 M. 406; 12 M. L. J. 282.

The words 'any property' used in clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso to section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code as contradistinguished from the words "immoveable property" in clause (c) tend to show that hypothecations of moveables were intended to be included therein. Therefore, a decree based on a security of moveable property cannot be held to be without jurisdiction.

Civil rule in the matter of S. C. C. Execution case No. 548 of 1922 and of claim case No. 19 of 1922 (S. C. C. Suit No. 26 of 1922 of the Court of Sub-Judge-Rangpur).

Babu Rishindranath Sarkar, for the Petitioner.

Babu Phanindra Lal Moitra, for the Opposite-Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this Rule challenges the validity of the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge under section 73 (1), Proviso (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure in respect of the sale-proceeds of some moveable properties which were hypothecated with the opposite parties, the Rungpur Bank Limited and which have been sold in execution of a decree obtainted by the petitioner. The petitioner contends that that proviso is confined in its operation to immoveable properties only as 'mortgage' or 'charge' as defined in sections 58 and 100 respectively of the Transfer of Property Act can only be in respect of such properties. The petitioner further contends that the only form of security for payment of a debt or performance of a promise by the bailment of goods recognised by the Indian Contract Act is 'pledge' as defined in section 172 of that Act, in which transference of possession of the goods to the pawnee is the essential ingredient, and that inasmuch as in the present case the possession of the goods was retained by the pawnor there was no security created, and therefore the decree obtained by the opposite party was a nullity and on the basis thereof no order for rateable distribution can be made.

The words 'mortgage' and 'charge' are not defined in the Code of Civil Procedure. Sections 58 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act relate to 'mortgage' and 'charge' respectively of immoveable properties but that Act is not exhaustive and does not profess to be a complete Code as also appears from its preamble. Satyabadi Behara v. Hirabati (1), Mohammad Shafikul Huq v. Krishna Gobinda Dutta (2). The Indian Contract Act no doubt speaks only of bailment of goods by way of security; but it appears from its preamble that it deals only with a part of the law of Contract applicable to British India. From these, therefore, it by no means follows that there may not be mortgage or hypothecation of moveable properties. Such hypothecation or mortgage not accompanied by possession confers a good title upon the person in whose favour it is made and the law recognises the transaction as security and equity gives effect to it. Srish Chandra Roy v. Mungri Bewa (3), Damodar v. Atmaram (4), Horipada Sadhukhan v. Anathnath Dey (5) and Punintha velu Mudaliar v. Bhashyam Ayyangar (6). The words 'any property' used in clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso as contra-distinguished from 'immoveable property' in clause (c) tend to show that such transactions were intended to be included therein. The decree based on a security of this character cannot, therefore, be held to be without jurisdiction.

The next contention urged, on behalf of the petitioner is that even if the proviso is given effect to the order of the Court below as passed is not right, for it must be ascertained what interest the Bank had in the property sold, inasmuch as the mortgage in their favour comprised other properties as well; and it is contended that to the extent of that interest only proviso, (b) would apply, but with regard to the balance, if any, there should be rateable distribution between the petitioner and the Bank. This contention to my mind is correct, though I am not sure that it would make much practical difference. However, as the order seems to be technically wrong I must make the Rule absolute to that extent, and set aside the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and send the case back to his Court so that it may be ascertained to what extent the Bank was interested in the properties sold, and then to allow the Bank the same interest in the sale proceeds. If any surplus is left after such allowance, then the same should be rateably distributed between the Bank and the petitioner.

The Rule is made absolute to this extent. No order is made as to the costs in this Rule.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 10, 25, cope of—Insolvency petition, dismissal of—Procedure.

ABDUL RAJJAK SIKDUR v. PROMADA SUNDARI DEVI

Sections 10 and 25 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are not to be employed as an excuse for getting rid of troublesome insolvency petitions. It is not enough for the Court simply to say that it is not satisfied that the petitioner is unable to pay his debts and to dismiss his petition. Such a finding must be a finding arrived at like any other finding by a judicial tribunal in which the reason for so holding is stated in such a way that it may be checked against the evidence and weighed in the balance.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 18th August, 1923.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are afraid that it will become necessary to warn Judges that they must not seize on sections 10 and 25 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as an excuse for getting rid of troublesome applications. There seems to be a danger of Provincial Insolvency Courts going from one extreme to the other. The provisions in section 10 and section 25 of the new Act were intended to prevent the abuse of debtors filing their applications as a method of evading liability of arrest, and getting out of payment of their debts. On the other hand it would appear that these sections have been utilised on more than one occasion for getting rid of business before the District Judge, which is certainly not congenial and it gives a great deal of trouble to the Judge. We must press upon the lower Courts, that a finding that a Judge is not satisfied that the appellants are unable to pay their debts must be a finding arrived at like any other finding by a judicial tribunal in which the reason for so holding is stated in such a way that it may be checked against the evidence and weighed in the balance. It is not enough for a Judge to resort to a mere negative and say. "I do not know, you may be able or you may not, but I am not satisfied." As a general rule we should like a Judge to be able to say: "there is one piece of property realizable, there again is another piece of property which may be realized easily, there again is a flourishing business or stock, there again is a sum of money in the bank, and taking these matters into consideration and adding them up together and allowing for the difficulty of realization, I am satisfied that the debtor has liquid assets more than sufficient to pay his creditors". The Courts below must consider the matter from the point of liquid assets. A man may have property tied up either in land or securities, which, owing to the state of the market, he cannot realise and be insolvent although the face, value of his property may be more than his actual liabilities. Putting one's fingers on the weak spot in the judgment, the defect is that the Judge has said that he is "far from being satisfied that the applicants were unable to pay their debts". The statute requires him to be "satisfied that he is able to pay," and the learned Judge has given no reasons for being satisfied on that question of fact. Indeed he has not found it. The case must go back to the lower Court for reconsideration on these lines.

ABDUL RAJJAK SIKDUR AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
PROMADA SUNDARI DEVI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Landlord and Tenant—Payment of rent—Estoppel—English Law.

Mere payment of rent to plaintiff by defendant not made under circumstances which would establish a relationship of landlord and tenant as between the parties would not entitle the plaintiff to a decree for rent nor would it estop the defendant from disproving the plaintiff's title.

According to English Law, if a man takes land from another as his tenant, he is estopped from denying the title of that person. But if he takes land from one person and afterwards pays rent to another believing that other to be the representative of the person from whom he took the land, he is not estopped, in a suit for rent subsequently becoming due, from proving that the person to whom he so paid rent was not the legal representative of the person from whom he took. For example, if a man pays rent to another believing him to be the heir-at-law of his deceased landlord, and afterwards discovers that he is not the heir-at-law, or that the landlord left a will, the tenant, in a suit for subsequent arrears of rent, would not be estopped from showing that he paid the former arrears under a mistake, and that the person to whom he so paid had no title. The admission of a man's representative character by payment of rent to him is not conclusive, although it may amount to prima facie evidence. It is, like all prima facie evidence, liable to be rebutted, and the tenant is not estopped from rebutting it if he can.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises plaintiffs claim rent from the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for their 8½ annas share of a Nim Howla which is subordinate in the remaining 7½ annas share to a Nim Osat taluk belonging to the defendant No. 5 and in the said 8½ share to a pattan miras ijara held by the plaintiffs as dar-pattan miras ijara. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 contested the suit alleging that the dar-pattan miras ijara was fictitious and fraudulent and there was no relationship of landlord and tenant as between the plaintiffs and themselves. The defendant No. 5 also challenged the bona fide character of the dar-pattan miras ijara, denied that the plaintiffs acquired any rights under it, and averred that he having purchased the pattan miras ijara in execution of a decree for arrears of rent thereof, he has become the landlord of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to the extent of the 16 annas share.

The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, but on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the same in favour of the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge held agreeing with the Trial Court that the plaintiffs' dar-pattan miras ijara was a fraudulent and fictitious tenancy created by the holder of the pattan-miras ijara when the latter foresaw that her properties could not be saved as a large amount of arrears of rent had accrued therefor and the document was a benami one created to serve as a protection against such consequences. He held further that the plaintiffs were assignees from the landlords of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and there was no contract between the plaintiffs and the said defendants and the latter were not inducted on the land by the plaintiff and, therefore no estoppel arose on that ground. He, however, further observed as follows :—" When Biseswar Ray Choudhuri (meaning the defendant No. 5) brought a rent suit against him (meaning the tenant defendants or their predecessor), he set up the present plaintiffs' title and also produced rent receipts purporting to have been granted by them. It may be that he entered into this false defence at the instigation of the plaintiffs, but he went much further and produced dakhilas in support of his plea. It is the liability to pay rent which establishes the relation of landlord and tenant but in the case of this defendant actual payment of rent was made and acknowledged. I think that by this conduct this defendant did attorn to the plaintiffs and it is no longer competent to him to deny this title.

In my judgment this decision cannot be supported on any conceivable principle. It awards the plaintiffs a decree for rent after an adjudication held in the presence of and on contest with the defendant No. 5 in which it has been found that the plaintiffs have no title, it ignores the presence of the defendant No. 5 in whose presence a decree for rent cannot be passed on the finding that the Court arrived at it proceeds to make the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 liable on the erroneous supposition that mere payment of rent no matter under what circumstances the same was done amounts to attornment and establishes the relationship of landlord and tenant.

Learned Vakil appearing for the respondents has urged that the present appeal does not lie in view of the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I am clearly of opinion that the decree in plaintiff's favour has decided a question relating to title to land and to some interest in land as between the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 5 who have conflicting claims thereto and, therefore, this objection of the respondents must fail. In fact the position is much stronger here than it was in the case of Mahommad Gauhar Ali v. Samiruddin Sheikh (1) in which the tenant defendant pleaded that the lease granted by the alleged superior landlord in favour of the plaintiff therein was invalid, and the said superior landlord though a party to the suit did not contest it. The respondents further contend that in a simple suit for rent complicated questions of title should not have been gone into and their object in making the defendant No. 5 a party was not to get such questions decided but only to frame the suit as one in conformity with the provisions of section 148-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and in support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the case of Lodai Mollah v. Kally Dass Roy, (2). My only answer to this contention is that it was very unfortunate and I quite sympathise with the respondents; but when this conflicting claim of title was set up it was bound to be decided and has been so decided, and it is too late now to repent. The historic judgment of Field, J., in the case referred to above is no authority for the proposition that when a co-sharer landlord has been brought on the record and a conflicting claim to title is set up it can be at all ignored.

In the case of Baney Madhub Ghose v. Thakur Doss Mandal (3), a full Bench of this Court decided, the judgment being delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. that "According to English law, if a man takes land from another as his tenant, he is estopped from denying the title of that person. But if he takes land from one person and afterwards pays rent to another believing that other to be the representative of the person from whom he took the land, he is not estopped, in a suit for rent subsequently becoming due, from proving that the person to whom he so paid rent was not the legal representative of the person from whom he took. For example, if a man pays rent to another believing him to be the heir-at-law of his deceased landlord, and afterwards discovers that he is not the heir-at-law, or that the landlord left a Will, the tenant, in a suit for subsequent arrears of rent, would not be estopped from showing that he paid the former arrears under a mistake, and that the person to whom he so paid had no title. The admission of a man's representative character by payment of rent to him is not conclusive, although it may amount to prima facie evidence. It is, like all prima facie evidence, liable to be rebutted, and the tenant is not estopped from rebutting it if he can. In a case, very similar to the one now before us, the case of Ranee Tiles Suree Kooer v. Ranee Asmedh Kooer (4), Romesh Chandra Mitter, J., observed as follows:—"One of the tenants we find also raised the same objection, and even if Ranee Ashmed Kooer had not been added as a party to the suit; this question of title must have been tried at the instance of that defendant. But it has been said that the plaintiff has already recovered a decree for rent against the ancestor of that defendant for a previous year, and he is, therefore, estopped from denying the title of the plaintiff who has thus become his Zemindar. This contention I do not think is correct. If the tenant had been installed in possession by the plaintiff, i.e., if his tenancy has been created by her, no doubt he would not have been competent to question his admitted landlord's title. But that is not the present case. There the tenant has been allowed to question the title of the alleged assignee of his admitted landlord, and I do not know of any principle of law which prevents him from doing so. The decree for the rent of the previous year is not conclusive upon this point, and, therefore, cannot estop him."

The cases of Durga Das Hazra v. Samash Akon (5), and Ketu Das v. Surendra Nath Sinha (6) have been cited at the bar, but in my opinion they are not in conflict with the principles laid down in the other cases above referred to. It is quite clear upon the pleadings and the facts found that the payment of rent by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to the plaintiffs were not made under circumstances which would establish a relationship as between the parties which even in the face of the finding as to want of plaintiffs' title would entitle the plaintiffs to a decree. The plaintiffs' title to the rent claimed having been disproved, her Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Second appeal—Misconception of evidence—High Court, whether will interfere.

A finding on an issue of a lower Appellate Court which is based on a misconception of what the evidence is, cannot be accepted in second appeal as a legal finding on it.

Govind, v. Vithal, 20 B. 753 ; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1072, relied on.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 15th July 1922.

Messrs. J. M. Banerji and Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for damages for defamation. The undisputed facts are that the defendant is the mukhia of villageBisalpur. About the 1st or 2nd of October one Ishura Banjara, who had been in the service of the plaintiff, disappeared from the village. Nothing was heard of him for a week or more, and his father was in great distress about him. The mukhia went to the Superintendent of Police and made a report about the disappearance. At the bidding of the Superintendent this report was taken down in writing, and it is in this that the defamation complained of is contained.

The report recited that it was rumoured that Ishura had stolen some gram belonging to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff with two other men had beaten him till he fell down senseless. Since that time Ishura had disappeared, and it was rumoured in the village that he was dead. The mukhia had further been informed that the missing youth's parent had been warned to make no report on peril of a beating. He stated that he himself had made a search in the village, but could find no traces of the missing man, and he asked that enquiry should be made.

The plaintiff brought this suit claiming Rs. 1,000 as special damages.

The Trial Court in a long and careful judgment found that the libel alleged was true in substance, and that the report was made by the defendant in discharge of his duty as mukhia and not maliciously. It further found that no special damages had been proved, and that if the defendant were to be held liable for damages at all they should not exceed Rs. 200.

The lower Appellate Court in a very perfunctory judgment has stated that there is no evidence on the record that Ishura had ever been beaten by the plaintiff and that there is no evidence on the record that there was any rumour that Ishura had fallen down and had been removed, that he was dead. The learned pleader for the appellant contends that both these statements are incorrect, and that the learned Judge's findings though they purport to be findings of fact, for that reason are not binding on this Court in second appeal. He has taken us through part of the record and has shown that, as a matter of fact, there is evidence on the record to prove all these facts referred to. Two witnesses depose to the beating of Ishura by the plaintiff and six to the general rumour in regard to the other matters.

The learned Judge has wound up by stating, " when it is shown that the major portion of the report was false, malice would be implied." Before this can be accepted as correct statement of the law the words " to the knowledge of the person making the report " must be inserted after the word 'false.' It is clear that in arriving at the finding as to the falseness of the report the learned Judge was misled by his failure to realise the existence of evidence as to the rumours referred to by the mukhia in his report. It is to be observed that the mukhia made none of the statements in this report as of his own knowledge but only professed to give information which he had derived from general rumour. As is observed by the Trial Court, it was part of his duty as mukhia to report to the police any mysterious disappearance, and failure to do so would have rendered him liable to punishment.

It has been held in Govind v. Vithal (1) that a finding on an issue of a lower Appellate Court which is based on a misconception of what the evidence is, cannot be accepted in second appeal as a legal finding on it. In the present case it is clear that the lower Appellate Court has completely misconceived the real nature of the evidence. We dissent entirely from its findings and allow the appeal. The plaintiff's suit is accordingly dismissed with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

The wording of O. The Court is not relieved of the necessity of doing its duty or to treat tbe matttr as a mere matter of formality.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Tipperah, dated the 11th February 1921, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 6th Court, Comilla, dated the 21st June 1920.

Babu Girija Prosanna Rai Chaudhury (with him Mr. M. Nurul Huq Chowdhury and Gobinda Chandra De Roy), for the Appellants.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This action was commenced on a plaint purporting to have been filed by fifteen persons on behalf of themselves and for all the villagers of Mouza Netra for a declaration of their customary pasture right to the lands in suit and for a declaration of their right to bury their dead in some portion of the same and also for certain consequential reliefs. The learned Munsif dismissed the suit, and the learned Subordinate Judge, on appeal, made a decree in favour of twelve of the plaintiffs, from which the defendants have preferred this appeal.

The validity of the decree is challenged upon various grounds of which it is necessary to notice only two: The first ground relates to the competency of the suit in view of the provisions of O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code. The second one is based on the contention that the Maharaja of Tippera was a necessary party to the suit, and in his absence the suit could not proceed.

ABDUL HAKIM v. ABDUL GANI

With regard to the first ground the position is this : The plaint purported to have been filed by fifteen persons and to have been verified by them and an application on their behalf asking for the leave of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, necessary for the institution of a representative action was also filed. The Court issued a notice stating that the first plaintiff (who was named) and others (whose names were not given) had instituted the suit and they had been granted the necessary permission and the said notice was duly advertised. It transpired in the course of the suit that three of the said plaintiffs had neither verified nor signed the plaint and, in fact, one of them deposed as a witness on behalf of the defence. The learned Munsif relied upon this, amongst other grounds, for dismissing the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge ordered the names of the said three persons to be struck out from he plaint, and decreed the suit in favour of the remaining twelve persons as I have stated above.

The objection of the appellants in the above circumstances of the case is two-fold. It is urged first that the notice of action that was advertised was not a proper or sufficient one, and secondly that when the permission was given to the fifteen persons collectively, twelve of them, without a fresh and express permission, were not competent to go on with the suit.

With regard to the objection as to notice the respondents contend that its validity was never challenged in the Court below, that all that was objected to in the written statement was as to the proper service thereof and upon that point the Court of first instance recorded a finding in its judgment in these words, "There is sufficient evidence of service of notice under r. 8 of O. I and so I find this point in plaintiff's favour," and this finding was not challenged in the lower Appellate Court. As to the competency of the twelve persons to prosecute the action the respondents rely upon the axiom that the greater always includes the less, and want to rely on it both for the proposition that the twelve persons were competent to avail of the permission that was granted in favour of fifteen and also for the proposition that the twelve persons could get the declarations which were sought for on their own behalf and on behalf of the other three and the rest of the villagers, and even if it held that they are not so entitled, the decree may be modified by granting them such declarations as they may be entitled to on the basis of their individual rights. Now in matters of this description, three classes of suits may easily be imagined. First of all a person may assert a customary right in himself, and may complain that that right has been infringed, violated or disturbed, and relying on that infringement, violation of disturbance as the cause of action, seek for a remedy. That would be an action institution in a purely character. econdly a person may found his claim upon a customary right belonging to all the villagers, and assert it on his own behalf, and basing his cause of action upon an infringement, violation or disturbance thereof so far as he himself is concerned seek for suitable reliefs. This also would be an action instituted in a personal character, though the foundation of the right lies in the fact that it belongs to all the villagers and, therefore, to him also as a member of that body. Thirdly, a person may institute a suit on behalf of himself and of all the other villagers, the customary right belonging to all the villagers, the cause of action affecting all the villagers as a body, and the remedy sought for being for himself and all the other villagers. Such a suit is instituted in a representative character, the success or defeat in the action being binding upon all the villagers, and the question that the rest of the villagers are not personally parties thereto not affecting their position in any way. The reliefs obtainable in such a suit enure to the benefit of all the villagers, it not being a matter of any consequence that they were not before the Court personally, as they must be deemed to have been parties to the action through their representative, who had instituted the suit and gone on with it in his representative capacity. The general rule is that all persons interested in the subject matter of a suit in respect of its object should be made parties, but in cases where there is a large class of individuals having the same interest the Courts for the sake of convenience, allow them to be represented by one or more of the class for himself and the others : Cockburn v. Thompson (1), Chudasama

Sursangji v. Partapsingh Khengarji (2). It is a general rule that all persons interested ought to be made parties to a suit howsoever numerous they may be, so that the Court may be able to do complete justice by deciding upon and settling the right of all persons interested, and that the orders of the Court may be safely executed by those who are completed to obey them, and future litigations may be prevented; also that a person who ought to be, but is not, a party to a proceeding is not ordinarily bound by any decree or order passed therein. The great risk from abatement, and the inconvenience and the expense involved in a great number of persons being parties, led the Courts in Equity to recognise the representative system, as it was not inconsistent with general principles that certain judicial proceedings taken by or against a select number as representing a large class might, if fairly and honestly conducted, bind or benefit thewhole class: Jenkins v. Robertson (3). To this practice which long prevailed in the Equity Courts in England legislative sanction was given by the enactment of a rule, to which, with certain modifications the present r. 8 of O. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code corresponds. This provision of the law has been enacted only for the sake of convenience; it is an enabling one and does not debar certain members of a community, who did not represent the community from suing in their own right: Baiju Lal v. Bulaklal (4). This last mentioned case was relied upon by the respondents as an authority for the proposition that the decree passed in favour of the twelve plaintiffs was a good decree even if it be held that they hâd no right to represent the public. It will be seen, however, that the case is no authority for such a proposition. The facts of that case were that a suit had been instituted by seven Gayawals to restrain the defendant from taking certain action in respect of a masonry platform round a sacred tree in the town of Gaya and the plaintiffs came into Court upon the allegation that they formed a punch or committee which represented the entire Gayawal community, and further that even if that should not be found to be the case, they had the right individually to restrain the defendant from the action complained of. The Munsif found that the plaintiffs did not constitute the punch and, therefore, they could not represent the entire Gayawal community, and therefore they could not sue on their behalf except by leave of the Court as provided by section 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But at the same time he held that they had individually the right to restrain the defendant from the acts complained of and accordingly having found for the plaintiffs on the merits he decreed the suit. The District Judge on appeal did not regard the suit and did not deal with it in any way as a suit broughtt by the plaintiffs in their individual capacities, although he found that each of the plaintiffs had a valuable pecuniary interest and each of them had a cause of action, and being of opinion that they must obtain the necessary permission under section 30 held that the plaintiffs must be cast in the suit. That obviously was wrong; and it was held that section 30 did not forbid the plaintiffs to sue in their own right and it merely said that if they desire to sue on behalf of others, they must obtain the permission of the Court. It was held in that case that Section 30, Civil Procedure Code was an enabling Section and it did not debar the plaintiffs in suing in their own right as they did in that case. It will be seen seen that the suit in that case was one which came under the second class of suits mentioned above; and when it was found that they did not represent the entire Gayawal community there was no reason to refuse them a relief upon the basis of their individual rights which were found in the case. The case of Gulba v. Basanta (5) also upon which reliance has been placed on behalf of the respondents lays down the same principle. In that case the plaintiffs as being two of the members of the Lodh Community, sued for a declaration that the Chaupal with its appurtenant shops were owned and possessed by the plaintiffs and they sued as being owners thereof and sharers therein and for the protection of their own rights. The suit, therefore, came within the second class of suits referred to above. The present suit does not come within that class at all; the plaintiffs have sued not for declaration of their own right but the right of the villagers and they have sued for themselves and the other villagers, the two bodies together comprising the entire body of villagers, and have stood not upon their own individual rights but upon those of the villagers, of which they are a part and the reliefs they have claimed are for the benefit of the entire body of villagers. This suit therefore comes within the third class of suits mentioned above, a class of which Prestney v. Mayor of Colchester (6) is a type. For such a suit, in order that it may be instituted on behalf of the entire body of villagers claiming the right, the necessary leave under O. 1, r. 8, C. P. C., must be obtained. The respondents urge on the strength of the case of Ahmed Ali v. Abdul Majid (7) that want of permision does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit. The case is no authority for the proposition id support of which it was cited, to the effect that even if the permission was not obtained the plaintiffs' suit should not be dismissed and he should get a decree if he has proved all the necessary facts. On a careful review of the earlier authorities it was held in that case that the objection under Section 30 of the Old Civil Procedure Code which corresponds with O. 1, r. 8 of the present Code is not one affecting the jurisdiction of the Court and that permission can be granted subsequent to filing of the suit. It was held also that there is no doubt that the proper course is to obtain permission under O. 1, r. 8 before the suit is instituted, but there is nothing in the rule to show that if it is not so done, it cannot be granted afterwards : and that the suit should not be dismissed merely becausethe permission was not obtained before its institution. These propositions do not really affect the controversy in the present case. They do not profess to lay down that if in a representative suit, the plaintiffs have not been constituted as representatives they may yet get a decree in a representative character or if they fail to get such a decree they can ask the Court to award them a decree in their own personal rights on the basis of a cause of action on which they never sued. Of course the permission need not be express, it is enough if it can be reasonably inferred from the proceedings : Dhanpat Singh v. Parcsh Nath Singh (8), Kalu Khabir v. Janmeah (9).

The principles regulating these representative actions are well-settled. Where one sues he is the sole plaintiff and is dominuslitis until judgment ; he alone can discontinue, compromise, submit to dismissal etc. as he pleases but he must do so with the leave of the court: In Re Calgary and Medicine Hot Land Co. Pigeon v. The Campany (10). If he dies the suit abates. If he becomes bankrupt the action will be dismissed, unless the trustee in bankruptcy elects to continue : Wolff v. Van Boolen (11). But in such events the rights of others of the same class are not affected, they may take proceedings on their own account : Handford v. Storie (12). Where several sue they have like powers, but they must act together : Leathley v. Mc. Andrew (13). After judgment, no further action can be brought by the others: In Re Alpha Co., Ward v. Arpha Co (14), In Re Calgary and Medicine Hot Land Co., Pigeon v. The Company (10), Walker v. Sur. (15). The class of persons sought to be represented must be defined in the pleadings with sufficient clearness. A claim to represent some of the members of a class without defining which members would not be maintainable : Markt v. Knight Steam Ships Co., Ltd. (16). If one of the persons on whose behalf the plaintiff purports to sue objects to the plaintiffs so doing he may apply by summons to have himself added as defendant : Wilson v. Church (17), Watson v. Cave (18); Fraser v. Cooper Hale & Co. (19), May v. Newton (20). class represented by the plaintiff have also adverse interests or desire to stand aloof, he should except these and may if they are few, make them defendants; or if they are numerous sue one or more on behalf of all: Fraser v. Cooper (19), Wilson v. Church (17), Watson v. Cave (18). From a consideration of these cases these principles follow: that the plaintiffs where there are more persons than one as plaintiffs collectively are competent to represent the entire body, that they must act together, that if some of them are dissentient they may apply to be made defendants, that there can be no devolution of their interests as such representatives either on their death or their bankruptcy. It is abundantly clear therefore that when out of the fifteen persons in whose favour permission was granted by the Court three did not join the institution of the suit the remaining twelve were not competent to take upon themselves the capacity with which the fifteen collectively were clothed. The remaining twelve were bound to bring the matter to the notice of the Court and it would have been for the Court to grant them a fresh permission or not, making the dissentient or non-prosecution plaintiffs defendants to the action or taking such other steps as the Conrt thought just, safe and proper. The suit therefore was not maintainable without a fresh order for representation; and this defect cannot be cured by doing what the learned Subordinate Judge has done, viz., by striking ont the names of those three persons and making a decree in favour of the others.

As to the notice, the respondents are right in their contention that the objection was not taken in the Court below and therefore I should not have felt disposed to interfere with the decree on that ground if that ground had stood alone. I may however point out that the issuing of a notice under this Section is not such a mere matter of formality as it is sometimes thought. The persons whose interests are to be represented by the plaintiffs have a right to know who are the persons who are to represent them and they have a right to judge of their competency in order to enable themselves to take such other or further steps as they desire so that their interest may be safe-guarded. Where a person sues or is sued on behalf of himself and others, any decree that may be passed is binding upon all unless that decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion (Section 44 of the Evidence Act, and Section. II Civil Procedure Code. Explanation VI). It is therefore necessary that notice of the suit should be given to all the parties who would be so bound. It is open to a party to apply to be made a party to a representative suit provided he can satisfy the Court that his interest will be prejudiced if he is not allowed to be joined as a party: Vasonji Tricaneji and Co. v. Ismaibhai Shivji (21). The wording of O. I, r. 8 shows that it is the duty of the Court to cause the service of the notice or the publication of the advertisement, on being moved for the purpose. The suit may not be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform its own duty: Mukhlal Singh v. Jagdeo Tewari (22). The Court, in my opinion, is not relieved of the necessity of doing its duty or to treat the matter as a mere matter of formality, the reason of the rule being based on cardinal principles of immense importance. I would follow the dictum of Banerji J. in the case of Kali Kanta Sarma v. Gouri Prosad Sarma (23) where the learned Judge observes as follows:- "It was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs respondents that the parties being numerous, the first Court followed the course laid down in section 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and permitted some of each group of persons interested and who ought to have been made parties, to represent the rest. We have heard the order of the first Court read out to us, and though that order purports to have been passed under section 30, it is clear that the provisions of that section have not at all been properly carried out. Section 30, as we understand it, requires that the Court should exercise a judicial discretion in permitting some definite person or persons to sue or be sued on behalf of all the persons interested, and it further requires the Court to give to the persons interested notice of the institution of the suit which must include a notice of the names of the persons who have been permitted to represent others, so that the persons interested may have an opportunity of knowing who have been selected to represent them. Now in the present case no such thing was done. In the first place the Court did not give permission to any definitely named persons among those interested to represent the rest; and in the second place the notice issued by the Court did not show who the persons were that had been selected to represent the remaining persons interested."

In my opinion, therefore, this ground taken by the appellants in this appeal is well-founded. I therefore set aside the decrees of the Court below and send the case back to the Court of first instance, so that the Court may make a fresh proper representative order in accordance with the provisions of O. 1, r. 8, C. P. C., and in the light of the observations made above.

Before parting with the case I think I must also make a few observations on the second ground taken by the appellant as noticed above. The learned Munsiff held that "there was not the least doubt that the Maharaja of Tipperah was a necessary party." He however gave no reasons for this opinion of his. The learned Subordinate Judge observed that he failed to see how the Maharaja was a necessary party in the sense that the suit was not maintainable in his absence, though in his opinion it would have been better if the suit had been decided in the presence of the Maharaja. The pleadings of the parties have been read out to me and my attention has been drawn to the cases of Durga Charan Sarkar v. Jotindra Mohun Tagore (24) and Jogendra Nath Singh v. Seeeretary of State (25) and I have been invited to decide as to whether the Maharajah of Tipperah is a necessary party to the action and to make suitable orders in accordance with the view that I take of the question. I advisedly refrain from going into the question, as I am not sure what features the pleadings will assume when the suit will be taken up on remand, having regard to the agruments that have been addressed to me on the nature of the rights on which the plaintiffs mean to take their stand.

The costs of this litigation will be borne by the respective parties for themselves, up till now, and all orders as to costs passed heretofore are set aside.

Lala DARBARI LAL—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANT
Lala GOBIND SARAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r.2—Singlec ause of action—Defendant claiming on different grounds—Separate suits, whether maintainable—Hindu Law—Widow—Alienation—Necessity—Consent of reversioners—Deeds, recitals in—Evidential value.

A plaintiff cannot bring separate suits for recovery of different portions of property when his cause of action is one and the same. It is immaterial for him whether the defendant wants to justify his right to continue in possession of the different portions of the property on different grounds. The defence or the nature of it is rmmaterial for the purpose of finding out what is the cause of action of the plaintiff.

Nanda Lal Dhur v. Jagat Kishore Acharajya, 36 Ind. Cas. 420; 44 C. 186; 20 M. L. T. 335; 31 M. L. J. 563; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 336; 4 L. W. 458; 18 Bom. L. R. 868; 14 A. L. J. 1103; 21 C. L. The circumstance that the only reversioners at the time of an alienation by a Hindu widow gave their unqualified consent to it raises a very strong presumption that the alienation was supported by legal necessity. The presumption is, however, a rebuttable one.

A recital in a deed is admissible as good evidence.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 2nd July 1921.

DARBARI LAL v. GOBIND SARAN

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant against the respondent for recovery of property sold to his father Chhuttan Lal on foot of a sale-deed dated the 1st of February 1904 by a lady who has since died, namely Mst. Kul Kunwar,

The appellant claims as a reversioner and the pedigree given below, will explain how he is related to Hoti Lal the last male owner of the property in suit.

It appears that Hoti Lal died, possessed of considerable amount of property, sometime in 1869. Mussmmat Mul Kunwar succeeded to the property as his widow and she died on the 16th of April 1916. On the 31st of October 1897 she executed a simple mortgage with respect to the properties in suit for the sum of Rs. 12,000 in favour of two persons Beni Ram and Janki Prasad. One Budh Sen joined with her in executing the deed. Budh Sen, it will be noticed, is a paternal uncle to the plaintiff-appellant.

A few days before the execution of the deed of mortgage, the plaintiff's father Nanhun Mal had executed a deed by which he gave his consent to the proposed mortgage by Musammat Mul Kunwar and Budh Sen. On the 1st of February 1904 Mul Kunwar alone sold the property to the respondent's father Chhuttan Lal for a sum of Rs. 24,800. The appellant's case was that the mortgage and the sale were made without legal necessity and he is, therefore, entitled to recover the property without any payment. He also asked for mesne profits.

The defence so far as it is relevant for the purposes of this appeal was this. The suit was barred under the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure inasmuch as the plaintiff brought other suits against the defendant and his father for recovery of the property belonging to Hoti Lal, but omitted to ask for any relief with respect to the properties now in suit, and that the transfers were supported by legal necessaity.

The Court below decided the issue involved in the first plea, as noted above, against the respondent, but on the question of necessity it found for him.

In this Court the two points to be considered are what have been stated above.

On the first point it appears to us to be quite clear that the suit is barred under the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That rule of law lays down.

"Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action..... "Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of or intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

By way of illustration it is said that where rent for the whole years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is unpaid if the plaintiff sues in 1908 in respect of the rent of 1906 only he shall not afterwards sue for the rents for the years 1905 or 1907. In this case the plaintiff's cause of action is this. He is the reversioner and rightful heir to Hoti Lal and the property in suit in the possession of the defendant belongs to Hoti Lal. This is his whole cause of action. It is immaterial for him whether the defendant wants to justify his right to continue in possession on different grounds The defence or the nature of it is immaterial for the purposes of finding out what is the cause of action of the plaintiff.

We find that the plaintiff brought at least two suits against the defendant or his father

He brought suit No. 45 of 1917, the plaint of which is printed at p. 103 of the record, for recovery of a portion of Hoti Lal's property from the respondent and his father. In paragraph 11 he said that his cause of action arose on the 15th of April 1916, the date of the death of Musammat Mul Kunwar. He brought again suit No. 282 of 1917, the plaint of which is printed at p. 99 of the record against the respondent and his father. In paragraph 13 of the plaint he said that his cause of action arose on the 15th of April 1916, the day on which Musammat Mul Kunwar died. In paragraph 10 of the plaint of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen he makes the same statement namely his cause of action arose on the 16th of April 1916, the date of the death of Musammat Mul Kunwar. The suit No. 45 of 1917 shows that the property in respect of which it was instituted was the property which had been purchased by Kundan Lal, grandfather of the present defendant. It is clear that when this suit of 1917 was brought the plaintiff could have, if he was so disposed, brought a claim with respect to the properties now in dispute. There is no authority so far as we are aware, to establish that any such suit would have been repugnant to any rule of law. On the other hand, there are numerous authorities to show that a reversioner is entitled to bring a single suit against any number of persons who may be holding different portions of the last male holder's property, though they may be holding under different title deeds, executed at different dates.

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the suit was barred under the provisions of O. 2, r. II of the Code of Civil Procedure and should have been dismissed on that ground alone.

Coming to the question of necessity, we find that so far as the bond of 1897 is concerned there is not much clear evidence. In the bond itself, which is printed at p. 33 of the record, the lady Musammat Mul Kunwar says that she wanted money for the performance of pilgrimage for the benefit of her husband's soul and that Budh Sen stood in need of money for the maintenance of children and for trade. It is not clear what amount of money was required by the lady for the pilgrimage and what amount was wanted by Budh Sen for his own purposes. Before we examine the question of necessity further it will be interesting to note a slight previous history of the family. It appears that on the death of Hoti Lal in 1869 Musammat Mul Kunwar executed a document dated the 23th of May 1869, a copy of which is on the record, but which unfortunately has not been printed, by which the lady stated that she regarded Budh Sen as her adopted son and was appointing him as the sarbarahkar or the manager of her property. She further stated that the manager would have no right to transfer any portion of her property without her consent. It further appears from the statement of Tika Ram who was for some time in the service of Musammat Mul Kunwar and held a general power of attorney from her that both Budh Sen and Nanhun Mal were living with the lady Musammat Mul Kunwar as dependent members of the family. His statement receives entire corroboration from the statement of the plaintiff appellant himself. The plaintiff's father Nanhun Mal, according to the plaintiff himself, had no zamindari property. He did not keep any shop and the appllent did not know if he had any income whatsoever from any source. The support, therefore, of dependent relations in the family would be a part of the family necessity.

Coming back to the actual evidence in the case, we find the recital in the bond already stated. According to the recital which would be admissible as good evidence under the Privy Council case of Nanda Lal Dhur v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (1) and a decision of this Court in Peari Lal v. Sunder Singh (2), the money was needed for pilgrimage and to enable Budh Sen to earn a living of his own. It is true that Tika Ram has said that half the money was required by the lady for pilgrimage and the other half was taken by Budh Sen for the purposes of his trade. But Tika Ram was not in the service of the lady at the time and it is difficult to believe that he could definitely know how the money was disposed of. We have, however, his evidence that the lady did go on pilgrimage and we have the deed of relinquishment executed by the appellant's father showing that the lady contemplated a pilgrimage. It is common ground that Hoti Lal owned a very large amount of property and was a highly respected gentleman of the palace. Spending Rs. 12,000—over pilgrimage and support of the family will not be at all considered an extravagant act. As held in the Privy Council case of Rangasmi Gounden v. Nachiappa Gaunden (3) the circumstance that the only reversioners at the time gave their unqualified consent to the mortgage raised a very strong presumption that the mortgage was supported by legal necessity. In this case there is no evidence which would rebut the presumption raised. There can be no doubt that the presumption is rebuttable as it was found rebutted in the case of Ghisiawan Pande v. Raj Kumari (4). But in this case, as has been stated, there is no evidence whatsoever to show that the consent of the reversioners was not justified. We hold therefore that the mortgage of 1907 was justified by legal necessity.

Coming to the sale-deed of 1904, the case is much easier. We find that the sale consideration is made up of three portions, namely Rs. 20,000 left with the vendee to pay the mortgage-deed of 1897. The sum of Rs.4,500 was obtained to pay land revenue was payable for the instalments for the months of November and December 1903 and the sum of Rs. 300 was taken in cash. We have got the evidence of Tika Ram that a sum of Rs. 300 was needed to meet the expense of the execution and completion of the bond. We have both documentary and oral evidence to prove that the purchaser deposited Rs. 4,700 in the Government Treasury on two dates, namely the 1st of February 1904 and the 4th of February 1904 towards the payment of land revenue due by the lady Musammat Mul Kunwar. Tika Ram says that on account of drought rent could not be realized from tenants and it was feared that the property of Musammat Mul Kunwar would be attached and the revenue would be realized by direct collection to be made by the Collector. There was therefore a pressing necessity to raise the money. We have evidence to show that the vendee had to pay a very large sum of money much exceeding the sum of Rs.20,000 left with him to pay off the decree which was passed on foot of the mortgage-deed of 1907. We hold therefore with the Court below that sale-deed was fully supported by legal necessity.

The result is that the appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs, including Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This is an appeal against a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 10th August, 1921, in a mortgage suit. That decree is based upon three mortgages:

(1) dated the 20th July 1916, for Rs. 1,500

(2) dated the 24th March 1917, for Rs. 33,000 and

(3) dated the 12th November 1917, for Rs. 8,000

The first bond was executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3; the second was executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 4, the defendant No. 4 being son of defendant No. 2; and the third was executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 5, defendant No. 5 being son of defendant No. 1. Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 are subsequent mortgagees. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are minors. Defendant No. 1 is the karta of the joint family of defendants Nos. 1 to 5, defendants, 1 to 3 being brothers. In all the three bonds the properties described in Schedules I to VII attached to the decree are mortgaged, and property No. VIII is mortgaged only in the third bond. The defendant Nos. 1 to 3 did not enter appearance. The suit was resisted by defendants Nos. 4 and 5 only, and upon the pleas taken by them in their written statement the following issues were framed in the Court below:—

1. Is the suit as framed maintainable?
2. Is the suit bad for defect of party?
3. Are the bonds in suit genuine, valid and for consideration?
4. Was the money under the bonds in suit advanced for legal necessity and for the benefit of the family?
5. Were the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 born at the time of execution of the bonds, dated 20th July 1916? Was defendant No. 5 born at the time of the execution of the bond, dated 24th February 1917?
6. Are the rates of interest high and unconscionable? Was there any necessity for such rates of interest?
7. Had the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 authority to mortgage the properties covered by the bond in suit?
8. To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?"

All these issues were decided in favour of the plaintiffs and against the defendants, with the result that the entire claim of the plaintiffs was decreed. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 have come to this Court in appeal.

The appeal is directed against bond No. 2 only. It is urged that the suit is bad on account of two members of the defendant's family, Bootan Pandy and Rambilas Pandey, sons of defendant No. 2 Madho Pandey not having been impleaded in the suit. Their existence came to light in the evidence of Jadu Singh, the last witness on behalf of the defendants, who stated towards the end of his examination-in-chief that Mahno Pandey has got three sons Parmeshwar, Bootan and Rambilas. No doubt, in the written statement it was alleged that the suit was bad for defect of parties, but in what manner this was so was not disclosed. There is no reason why the plaintiffs would not have impleaded the said persons as parties if they had knowledge of their existence. It is, however, immaterial for the purpose of this case whether they were made parties or not, for the suit cannot be dismissed on that ground alone. The bond was executed by the kartas of the family and the suit was obviously for enforcement of the mortgage against the joint family impleading the kartas of the family and other members whose existence was known to the plaintiffs. No doubt all persons whose rights and interest may be adjudicated upon and determined in the suit ought to be added as parties under O. I r. 9 read with O. XXXIV r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, but failure to add one or two persons should not have the effect of defeating the suit if the Court, in their absence, can deal with the matters in controversy so far as regards the right and interests of the parties actually before it. Such was the view taken by this Court in the case of Sital Prasad Ray v. Asho Sing, (1) (Dawson Miller, C.J. and Mullick, J.).

It is then said that the defendant No. 4 was in existence at the time when the first bond was executed and that he should have joined in that bond. Similarly, it is said that defendant No. 5 was in existence at the time when the second bond was executed and he ought to have been joined in the execution of that bond. The bonds were executed by the kartas of the family and were for family necessities ,such as for payment of antecedent debts, etc. It was not necessary to join all the members of the family in the execution of the bonds in question. It is not very clear either upon the finding of the Court below or upon evidence as to whether defendant No. 5 was born before the second bond was executed. The learned Subordinate Judge having seen the boy is of opinion that he was not more than 4 years of age. If his estimate is correct, then he was born subsequent to the execution of the second bond. He has, however, not referred to any evidence in the case. The evidence that has been placed upon the point is not convincing. The horoscope of the boy has not been produced. The witnesses on behalf of the defendants are not quite competent to depose to the date of the birth or the exact age of the boy. It is, therefore, difficult to fix the age of defendant No. 5, and I would leave the matter as it is for, as observed above, nothing hinges upon that matter.

Next it is contended that the rate of interest mentioned in the bond is high and unconscionable, and that there was no necessity for agreeing to such a high rate of interest. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 being the executants of the bond cannot question the rate of interest voluntarily agreed to by them and inserted in the bond in question; but the appellants, defendants Nos. 4 and 5 being minors can question the authority of the karta or head member of the family to enter into a contract with regard to the rate of interest so as to be binding upon them unless it was shown that the high rate of interest agreed upon was necessitated by the circumstances of the family. In other words, they can throw the onus upon the plaintiffs to prove that the rate of interest agreed to was the proper rate of intertst chargeable in the market. There is no evidence on the record as to what was the commercial rate of interest and, therefore, it is contended on behalf of the appellants that the rate of interest mentioned in the bonds should not be allowed. The debts incurred by means of the bonds in question were for the purpose of paying off antecedent debts. Those debts have been detailed in the bonds in question. It would appear from an arithmetical calculation that the debts paid off by the second bond carried interest at the simple rate of interest viz. Rs. 1-2-0 to Rs. 2.per cent. per mensem. It would seem that the rate was rising from 1911, and in or about the years in suit the rate of interest rose to 2 per cent. per mensem. The law on the subject was reviewed by me in the case of Mayadeo Prasad v. Bissessar Prasad (2). It will not be profitable to repeat the reasons advanced by me in that judgment. It will be sufficient to say that when a contract entered into by a head member is sought to be enforced against the other members on the ground of necessity, it must be shown not only that there was necessity to borrow the principal sum but also for the rate of interest agreed upon : in other words, that it was impossible for the karta or head member to obtain loan for family necessity at a rate of interest lower than that agreed upon. The question of necessity is one of fact, and as in the case of principal debt so in the case of interest necessity has to be proved by evidence. In the circumstances of that case and for the reasons given by me I reduced the rate of interest from Rs. 1-4 cent. per mensem with six monthly rests to one per cent, per mensem simple rate of interest vide also Ram Bujhawan Prasad Singh v. Nathu Ram (3).

Therefore, if we were to apply the principle laid down by the Privy Council and referred to above to the facts of the present case, we can at best cut down the compound interest and allow only simple interest at the rate varying from Rs. 1-2 to Rs. 2, probably the latter. But the rate of simple interest of Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem even does not seem to appreciably relieve the defendants of the burden of the debt. The first bond carried interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem with six monthly rests; the second bond carried interest at fourteen annas per cent. per mensem with eight monthly rests and the third bond carried interest at Rs. 1-2 per cent. per mensem with three monthly rests. In this case we are concerned only with the second bond the rate of interest wherein is 14 annas per cent. per mensem with 8 monthly rests. This loan of Rs. 33, 000- was advanced on the 24th March 1917, and on the date of the suit, the 22nd November 1919, the interest came to Rs. 10,165-6-5, and on the due date fixed for payment by the decree the interest amounted to a further sum of Rs. 10,640-1-0 calculated from the date of suit up to the date fixed for payment in the decree. The interest allowed according to the bond rate has worked out at a little over 12 per cent. per annum. This is not a high rate of interest in consideration of what used to be the rate of interest on the previous loans mentioned in the bond. The rate of 14 annas per cent. per mensem with 8 monthly rests does not appear to be excessive, and, therefore, no case is made out for reducing the rate of interest.

It is then contended that the planitiffs have failed to show legal necessity for a portion of the loan advanced under the second bond. These sums are (1) Rs. 2, 130 said to have been paid in cash to the executants at the time the bond was executed, and (2) Rs. 713 received in cash also by the executants subsequently. Now, the bond was executed in order to pay off the debts amounting to Rs. 30, 870, and Rs. 2130 was taken in cash The sum of Rs. 30,000 was left with the mortgagee to pay off the prior debts mentioned in the bond. However, in making actual payments the mortgagee had to pay something more than the sums stated in the bond. The total sum paid by the mortgagee to the creditor is Rs. 22,261 leaving a balance of Rs. 8,609 with him. Out of this he paid to creditor Khub Rai Rs. 700; Rs. 1,025-7-3 to the mortgagors for Tilak ceremony in connection with the marriage of the daughter of defendant No. 1, and Rs. 93-7-8 was taken by them in cash for expenses, leaving a balance of Rs. 6,790 out of which the mortgagors paid Rs. 6,077 towards the decreed debt of Durga Prasad, and Rs. 713 was spent by them.

The learned Subordinate Judge says that the object for which the loan was taken was to pay off the antecedent debts specified in the bond, and the creditor is not required to prove that the money advanced was actually applied for those purposes Therefore, he holds that the appellants are not entitled to call upon the plaintiff to prove the necessity for Rs. 713.

As to the cash amount of Rs. 2,130 taken by the mortgagors at the time of the execution of the bond, the learned Subordinate Judge says that a portion of this money was spent for the price of stamp and scribe's fee. The details of these have not been given by the Subordinate Judge, but this would come to Rs. 300 to Rs. 400. There is certainly no proof of this sum having been taken for family necessity. Mr. Sen on behalf of the respondents relies upon the case of Sinnachami v. Ramasamy Chettiar (4) Nawab Nazir Begum v. Raghunath Singh (5) and (3) Bissonath Prosad Mahta v Brindesri Prosad Singh (6) and (4) Maharaja of Bobbili v. Raja Kaninayani Bangaru (7) and contends that the major portion of the debt has been proved to have been raised for the purporse of paying off antecedent debts and family necessity and the want of proof with respect to a small sum of about Rs. 2,000 will not invalidate the debt so as to exonerate the defendants from the liability of the same. We are, however, relieved from entering into that question, for it appears that the appellants are bound to pay the debts in question incurred by their respective fathers. The personal liability of the executants of the bond still subsists, inasmuch as the suit for personal liability is not barred by limitation. The learned Counsel who appears on behalf of the respondents concedes this point and says that practically there will be no gain to his clients even if it were held that the family necessity with regred to the sums has not been established by the plaintiff. aforesaid points although strenuously urged on behalf of the appellants have towards the close of the case been wholly abandoned for they have seen that no practical good could accrue to them even if those points prevailed. We have, however, thought it desirable to go into those points to give our own decision instead of relying wholly upon the admission of the lawyers appearing on behalf of the appellants. We think that they are perfectly right in the circumstances of the case in having abandoned those points.

The last point urged by the appellants, however, appears to be substantial. This is as regards the frame of the decree. The decree in question has consolidated the amounts due under all the three bonds in suit and has made all the mortgaged properties liable for the same. It must be remembered as observed above at the out-set that the property Nos. 7 and 8 were not at all mortgaged in the first bond but were mortgaged in the second and third bonds. The consolidation of all the debts in the manner that the learned Subordinate Judge has done impedes the right of redemption of the mortgagors. This is contrary to the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 2 and is also contrary to section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is ne specific contract on behalf of the parties with regard to consolidation and in the absence of such a contract the consolidation is illegal. Mr. Sen referred to certain English cases on the point, namely, John Jennings v. Edwin Jordan and John Price (8). This ruling has no application after the Conveyancing Act was passed in England. Section 17 of that Act purports to abolish the consolidation of mortgages. Similarily section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act abolishes the consolidation of mortgages, and we are bound by the Transfer of Property Act in force in this country.

I, therefore, hold that the decree as framed is illegal and not capable of execution. The decree is accordingly set aside and a fresh preliminary decree must be prepared in accordance with law. The rate of interest up to the date of grace fixed in the decree of the Court below will be at the bond rate, and the rate of interest after that will be 6 per cent. per annum on each bond up to the date of realization.

There should be a direction in the decree that the properties Nos. 1 to 6 should be sold first in their serial order and the sale-proceeds thereof should be utilised for satisfaction of the debts due under the several bonds in order of their priority, that is to say, firstly the dues under the first bond, then the dues under the second bond and thereafter the dues under the third bond. The properties Nos. 7 and 8 should be sold last of all, and the sale-proceeds thereof should be utilised for payment of the debt, if any, due under the second and third bonds. If the sale-proceeds of only a few of the aforesaid properties is found to be sufficient to pay off the debts due under the three bonds, the remaining properties will not be sold.

The appeal is, therefore allowed with costs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.:— I agree.

ORDER.—Our attention has been drawn to certain clerical mistakes in the judgment. It appears that properties Nos. 7 and 8 were not at all mortgaged in the first bond but were hypothecated in the two later bonds. It also appears that the share in property No. 2 covered by the second and third bonds is a little less than that mortgaged by the first bond, that is 4 as 3 dams. 0 cowry, 9 bowries, 1 phoury, 16 reories of property No. 2 is mortgaged in the first bond, whereas 4 annas, 2 dams, 15 cowries, 18 bowries, 3 phouries, 4 reories of property No. 2 is mortgaged in the second and third bonds. The share of property No. 3 seems to be larger in the second and third bonds than that hypothected by the first bond. The directions given in the judgment will, therefore, be modified as followed.

Properties Nos. 1 to 6 shall be sold first in their serial order and the sale-proceeds thereof shall be utilised for satisfaction of the debts due under the several bonds in order of their priority, and that the properties Nos. 7 and 8 along with any share of property No. 3 in excess of that covered by the first bond will be sold last of all and the sale-proceeds thereof shall be utilised for payment of the debt, if any due under the second and third bonds in order of priority.

Civil Procedure Code, (V of 1908), ss. 20, 47—Stay of execution proceedings—Costs, order as to—Refusal to set aside order—Appeal whether maintainable—Costs, award of—Discretion of Court.

Under section 2 read with section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure an order passed by the execution Court is a decree only when it determines a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree.

No appeal lies against an order in execution proceedings refusing to set aside an order as to payment of costs, on a stay of the proceedings, as such an order is not one involving a question as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree itself.

Order as to costs is ordinarily a matter in the discretion of the Trial Court and unless some question of principle is involved no appeal can ordinarily be entertained.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bareilly, dated the 27th January 1923.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been filed as an Execution First Appeal from an order dated the 27th of January 1923.

A compromise decree had been passed in favour of the respondent against the appellant under which the respondent was entitled to recover a sum of money. The appellant filed a declaratory suit to avoid this decree as he was a minor. His suit was dismissed and an appeal was filed in this Court. An injunction was issued from this Ccurt restraining the respondent from proceeding with the execution of her decree. On the 9th of August 1922 the Execution Court stayed proceedings and on the 10th of August it passed an order directing that the execution case should be struck off as the appeal might take a long time for disposal. It, however, ordered that the costs were to be borne by the decree-holder. On an application made by the decree-holder the Court modified its order on the 9th of October 1922 and directed that the decree-holder should get her costs but no notice of this application had been served on the present appellant.

On the 13th of October 1922 the present appellant applied for setting aside the order of the 9th of October 1922 on the ground that it had been passed exparte and was not a just and proper order. After notice had been served on the respondent and she had put in objections the Court on the 27th of January 1923 dismissed the application for restoration saying that the previous order was one correcting an obvious error in the earlier order and that the Court could not change the order.

I am of opinion that no appeal really lies from the order dated the 27th of January 1923. Under section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 there was a conflict of opinion whether procedure for setting aside ex-parte decrees could or could not be applied in extenso to applications to set aside orders passed by the Execution Department. By the Amending Act of 1892 an explanation to that section was added saying that the section did not apply to applications for the execution of decrees. In the mean-time an appeal from a judgment of this Court went up to their Lordships, of the Privy Council and Their Lordships independently of the explanation, held that the old section 647 did not apply to applications for execution. Vide Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (1). Accordingly the Legislature has now omitted the explanation for section 141 of the new Code of Civil Procedure as it was unnecessary. It has been held in the case of Bharat Indu v. Asghar Ali Khan (2) that no appeal lies from an order refusing to restore an application in the Execution Department.

What in the present case has happened is that the appellant made an application for setting aside the order, dated the 9th of October 1922 and the Court below has refused to set it aside. I cannot treat this last order dated the 27th of January 1923 as a decree so as to give the appellant a right of appeal. Under section 2 read with section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure an order passed by the execution Court is a decree only when it determines a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree. In the present case the question before the Court was really one of staying proceedings and directing each party to bear costs. It really did not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree itself. No appeal, therefore, lies from this order.

Assuming, however, that an appeal lies, I am of opinion that even on the merits the appeal cannot succeed. It was no fault of the decree-holder that an injunction was issued restraining her from proceeding with the execution of her decree. If the execution is stayed in the interest of the present appellant there is no reason whatsoever why the decree-holder should be made to bear her own costs. Her application was made at a time when no injunction had been issued and the decree-holder was at that time perfectly entitled to apply for execution.

Furthermore, the order as to costs is ordinarily a matter in the discretion of the trial Court and unless some question of principle is involved no appeal can ordinarily be entertained.

This appeal accordingly fails and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXI, r. 72, Sub-rule (2)—Sale-purchase by decree-holder—Set off—Rateable distribution—Receipt of assets—Jurisdiction—Revision,

The jurisdiction of a Court in entertaining an application for rateable distribution of the assets under section 73, Civil Procedure Code depends on the Sine qua non of its being made before the receipt of such assets.

A Court in receiving and disposing of an application under section 73, Civil Procedure Code in defiance of the conditions on the existence of which the jurisdiction rests, exercises its jurisdiction with material irregularity and its order is open to revision.

Where a decree-holder himself is the purchaser and claims a set-off against the price of property purchased which is allowed by the Court, no application for rateable distribution under section 73, Civil Procedure Code can be entertained after the termination of the sale. The Court in such a case obtains constructive seisin over the purchase-money immediately after the conclusion of the sale and the order allowing set-off under O. XXI, r. 72 of the Code is not equivalent to receipt of the assets but a mere disposal thereof.

Obiter : In a case where an application for set-off is made and there are no obstacles to the granting of it, e. g., absence of an application under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, it is doubtful whether there can ever be a 'receipt of assets' by Court within the meaning of section 73, Civil Procedure Code.

Application against the order of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 5th February 1924.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hari Kishnan Dhaon, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The applicant held a simple money decree against one Pirthi Nath and in execution of that decree he attached a house belonging to the Judgment-debtor. The house was afterwards sold on the 22nd September 1923 at an auction sale for a sum of Rs. 858 and purchased by the applicant, Mohan Lal, with the permission of the Court. The price for which the house was sold was exactly equivalent to the amount of the decree. On the 28th September 1923, Mohan Lal applied under O. XXI, r. 72, sub-rule (2) of the Code to the Court executing the decree that the amount due on the decree might be set-off against the purchase-money. He neither deposited the 25 per cent. on the amount of his purchase money under r. 84, sub-rule (1), of O. XXI of the Code nor the full amount of the purchase-money under r. 85 of the same Order. Both under r. 84 and r. 85 the deposit could be dispensed with where a claim to set-off under r. 72 is made as it was done in the present case.

MOHAN LAL v. AMAR NATH

Under an injunction issued by a superior Court the applicant's claim for set-off still awaits decision, so does the confirmation of the sale. On the 29th September 1923 the opposite party, Amar Nath, obtained a decree against the same judgment-debtor and another person for a sum of Rs. 1,304 odd and on the 10th December 1923 he applied for a rateable distribution under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the assets received in execution of Mohan Lal's decree. This application was resisted by Mohan Lal mainly on the ground that Amar Nath's application of the 10th December 1923 was much too late in time. The lower Court however allowed rateable distribution and this application challenges the legality of that order. The ground taken in revision is that the Court below acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by granting the application for rateable distribution. It is argued that Amar ath's application was not made before the "receipt of such assets" and could not consequently be entertained under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There can be no doubt that the exercise of jurisdiction in entertaining an application under section 73 depends on the sine qua non of its being made before the receipt of assets and if the Court below has received and disposed of this application in favour of Amar Nath in defiance of the conditions on the existence of which the jurisdiction rests it has certainly exercised that jurisdiction with material irregularity if not wholly illegally. To establish this contention, the learned Counsel for the applicant argues that either there has never been and can never be 'receipt of assets' by the Court in the circumstance of this case or if there was such a receipt it was not a moment later than the termination of the sale on the 22nd September 1923.

On the statement of the facts stated above, it is perfectly clear that the Court has never received any assets in reality. The only question for consideration is whether it has received such assets constructively and if it has, when? Now since the sale was concluded on the 22nd September 1923, the Court could adopt either of the two methods in the matter of the payment of the purchase-money. Indeed no order was needed by the Court. The obligation resting on the purchaser is stated by the law itself. If he was not the decree-holder, he must deposit the purchase-money in its entirety within 15 days of the sale. If he was the decree-holder, he may not do so and claim the benefit of a set-off under section 72. In either event according to my judgment, the Court obtained constructive seizin over the purchase-money immediately after the conclusion of the sale. The subsequent order of set-off if passed in favour of the decree-holder, would be a disposal and not receipt of the purchase money over which the Court acquired dominion on the date of the sale. I am unable to accept the contention of the learned pleader for the opposite party that an order allowing a set-off under O. XXI, r. 72, is equivalent to receipt of the assets. It is merely an allotment of the purchase-money already received by the Court and that in this case constructively, not actually. It follows that Amar Nath's application for rateable distribution was not made before the receipt of assets. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider and decide the first line of argument advanced by the learned Counsel for the applicant, though I must acknowledge that there is a good deal of force in that argument also. In a case where an application for set-off is made and there are no obstacles to the granting of it, that is to say, no application exists under section 73 for rateable distribution at the time of making the application for set-off, the Court will ordinarily be bound to grant the set-off, and if that is done I doubt very much whether there will ever be a receipt of assets by the Court within the meaning of section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The result is that this application is allowed, the order of the Court below is set aside and Amar Nath's application for rateable distribution is rejected. The applicant will be entitled to his costs in this Court from the opposite party No. 1.

Benami transaction—Suit against benamidar—Real owner, whether bound—Pre-emption suit against benamidar—Pre-emptor not entitled to preference over real vendee—Pre-emption, whether allowable.

A suit against a benamidar binds the benamidar as much as the real purchaser, though the latter may not have been made a party to the suit, but the plaintiff cannot be allowed by keeping the real purchaser out of the record to enforce a right against an ostensible vendee which he would not have been entitled to enforce against the real purchaser, had he been brought on the record.

Where in a pre-emption suit it appears that the ostensible vendee is merely a benamidar the plaintiff cannot succeed if it is found that he is not entitled to any preference as against the real vendee, whom he has omitted to make a party to the suit.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 6th December 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption and two questions arise for consideration. The first is whether a suit for pre-emption brought against an ostensible vendee without impleading the real purchaser is maintainable. The second is whether the plaintiff is entitled to preference as against the vendee real or ostensible. The Court of first instance was of opinion that the suit could not be entertained against an ostensible purchaser without the real purchaser being made a party to the suit. The lower appellate Court was however of opinion that the real vendee could not take advantage of a benami transaction to defeat the claim of the plaintiff, though he was not made a party to the suit. It then proceeded to consider whether the plaintiff was entitled to a preferential right as against the real vendee, and came to the conclusion that he was entitled to such a preference. A decree for pre-emption was accordingly awarded to the plaintiff subject to the payment of a sum of Rs. 300 in respect of each of the sales which form the subject of pre-emption.

It is a well-settled rule that a suit against a benamidar binds the benamidar as much as the real purchaser, even though the latter may not have been made a party to the suit. The purchase in the present instance was made by Jagannath Prasad in the name of his wife Musammat Ram Sakhi Kuar. Musammat Sakhi Kuar pleaded that she was only a benami purchaser and that the purchase had been really made by her husband. The plaintiff took no step to bring her husband on the record. Both the courts below found that her husband was the real purchaser, but while the trial court thought that the plaintiff was not entitled to a preferential right as against him, the lower appellate court thought otherwise.

It is admitted that Musammat Ram Sakhi Kuar the ostensible purchaser, is not a co-sharer in the village in which the property sold is situated, but it is clear from the khewat to which the lower appellate court has referred, that her husband, Jagannath Prasad the real purchaser, is a co-sharer in the patti in which the property in dispute stands. It appears from the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 that the village Sonrupur formed part of two mahals. One of the mahals called mahal Shanker Prasad included a half of the village Sonrupur and another village named Bhartipur, while the other called mahal Thammandas covered the remaining portion of the village Sonrupur. At that time mahal Thammandas was divided into two pattis known as patti Ram Jawakkul and patti Thammandas. The share of Raghunandan Prasad which has since passed to the defendant vendor was situated in Patti Ram Tawakkul. Subsequently in 1883 the village Bhartipur was separated from the former mahal; and the different portions of the village Sonrupur were brought together and divided into two mahals known as mahal Mahesh Lal and mahal Thammandas Shankar Prasad. According to the wajib-ul-arz of 1290 F Mahal Thammandas Shankar Lal was subdivided into two pattis known as patti Thammandas and patti Shankar Prasad. The khewat for 1325 F shows that patti

RAM SAKHI KUAR v. LACHMI NARAIN LAL

Thammandas consisted of land situated in numbers 1 to 46 khewat, out of which khewat numbers 1 to 28 constitute about a 4 as. 4 pies and odd share while numbers 29 to 46 khewat constitute an equal share within the patti. The property in dispute is situated in No. 38 khewat which forms a part of patti Thammandas. The defendant vendor claimed to derive his title from Raghunandan Prasad who was a co-sharer in No. 38 khewat. The plaintiff is also a co-sharer in No. 38 khewat by virtue of a litigation in which a 3 pies share of Raghunandan Prasad was awarded to him. The defendant vendor Musammat Ram Sakhi Kunwar has admittedly no share in the village but her husband Jagannath Prasad, the real purchaser is a co-sharer in other holdings inside the same patti.

The wajib-ul-arz of the village Sonrupur mahal Thammandas provides that the right of pre-emption shall belong in the first instance to near relations who are descended from the same common ancestor and whose names are entered in the khewat, in the second place to nearer co-sharers (hissedar garibi) and in the case of their refusal to co-sharers inside the patti then to the other co-sharers in the mahal and to the co-sharers in other mahals in the order mentioned. The plaintiff claimed to be a nearer co-sharer inside the patti, but it is admitted that he is in no way related by common descent to the defen- and vendor. He merely claims to be a distant relation of Raghunandan Prasad to whom the vendee Jagannath Prasad is also related by a common descent. Neither of them is a relation or hissadar qaribi of the vendor within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz and the plaintiff cannot on that ground claim any preference.

His contention is that the words "hissadar garibi" indicate nearness in space and that as he is a co-sharer in the same sub-division with the vendor, he is entitled to preference. But as the lower appellate court has rightly pointed out the first two categories given in the wajib-ul-arz deal with the relationship, while the last two categories deal with proximity in space. The wajib-ul-arz gives a right of premption to the near relations descended from the common stock then to the other near relations, not so descended, after them to the co-sharers of the same patti then to the other co-sharers of the mahal and then to the co-sharers in the other mahals. There is no preference granted between the co-sharers inside the same patti unless some of them happen to be the kinsmen of the vendor. The lower appellate court was of opinion that since the holding Nos. 1 to 28 in which Jagannath was a co-sharer formed a group of co-sharers distinct from those belonging to the holdings Nos. 29 to 46, in which the vendor and the plaintiff were co-sharers, the plaintiff was entitled to preference. But the copy of the khewat produced clearly shows that the holdings Nos. 1 to 46 belong to the same patti. The plaintiff is not therefore entitled to any preference as against the real vendee who is a co-sharer in the same patti, though not in the same holding. As pointed in Harsaran v. Dilraji (1) the plaintiff cannot be allowed by keeping the real purchaser out of the record to enforce a right against an ostensible vendee which he would have been entitled to enforce against the real purchaser had he been brought on the record.

This appeal must therefore be allowed and the claim of the plaintiff will stand dismissed. As the purchase was made in the name of a person who was not a co-sharer in the village, we do not consider that it would be equitable to award any cost to the other party here or in the courts below. The parties must bear their own costs throughout.

Sajedur Raja Chowdhury v. Gour Mohan Das, 24 C. 418 ; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 946, followed.

A suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code is brought by the plaintiffs on behalf of themselves and the general public.

The decision in a previous suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code would bar a subsequent suit under that section by different plaintiffs uuder section 11, explanation vi of the Code, if the provisions of the explanation are satisfied.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, 24 Parganas, dated the 8th July 1921.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babus Sasudhan Roy, Bimala Charan Deb, Mahesh Chandra Banerji, for Rama Prasad Mukerjee, M. Syed Nausher Ali), for the Appellants.

Babu Sarat Chandra Rai Chowdhury (with him Babu Amarendra Nath Bose for Babu Parma Lal Chatterjee, Babus Santosh Kumar Bose, Radhika Ranjan Guha and Sisu Kumar Ghosal), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of a suit brought by five persons on the allegation that they as worshippers are interested in a Public Charitable Trust which was wakf property and they brought the suit on behalf of the general Musalman community as their representatives. The suit was brought against a number of defendants and the main prayer was that the compromise decree in suit No. 48 of 1910 should be declared to be not binding upon the plaintiffs and the Masulis of the Musjid. The defendants Nos. 1 to 18 are the descendants of one Mir Miran who was said to be the original Mutwali of the Mosque and the wakf property. The defendants Nos. 19 to 27 are purchasers of some of the properties which the plaintiffs alleged were included in the wakf estate; and the defendants Nos. 28 to 42 are the representatives of the plaintiffs who representing the Mahomedan community in general brought the previous suit No. 48 of 1910 under section 92 Civil Procedure Code. The defendants Nos. 43 and 44 also are transferees of certain properties from some of the defendants of Mir Miran, defendants Nos. 1 to 18. The defendants Nos. 19 to 22 are appellants in appeal 168 and defendant No. 44 is the appellant in appeal 212. Defendant No. 26 is a respondent in appeal 168. He appears in this Court and supports the appellants.

Various questions of law have been elaborately discussed before us and a large number of rulings has been the subject of minute criticism' by both the learned vakils apppearing before us, but the main question as it seems to us involved in this case is as to the effect of the decree which was made on compromise in suit No. 48 of 1910. The Subordinate Judge has held that that decree is not binding on the present plaintiffs.

Two questions on this head have been argued on behalf of the appellants before us. The first is, whether the compromise decree in Title Suit 48 of 1910 is binding upon the present plaintiffs, and the next question is whether the Court had jurisdiction to set aside the decree in Suit 48 of 1910. Several other issues were raised before the Subordinate Judge and the most important of which is whether the disputed properties were wakf properties. That issue was decided in favour of the plaintiff and no question has been raised with regard to that point before us, as the argument of the appellants proceeded upon the ground that assuming that the property was valid Wakf property, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in this suit. The suit of 1910 was brought by seven persons as plaintiffs against one defendant originally on the 18th July 1910 under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, with the sanction of the Advocate General. Subsequently there appears to have been an application for amendment of the plaint and the amendment was allowed by the District Judge before whom the case was pending on the 15th December 1910. The amendment was by the addition of a certain number of defendants who were the descendants of Mir Miran, the original defendant being his son's widow. Another amendment was by the addition of a paragraph which was paragraph 16 of the plaint where it was stated that the defendant No. 1 had executed a document in favour of her son defendant No. 2 which was a collusive paper transaction and that the said defendant No. 2 and the other defendants claiming the property mentioned in the schedule was their personal property were taking steps to have them partitioned. The third amendment was the addition of a prayer (f) to the effect that the property in suit be declared wakf property and that the defendants had not any personal interest for a considerable time in Court, and on the 15th September 1911 there was a petition purporting to have been signed by six of the plaintiffs in the suit stating the terms of compromise of the suit. On the 16th September 1911 the presiding Judge made this order "The compromise has now been accepted by all parties to the suit. The terms are set out in the petition filed by the plaintiffs on the 15th September to which a plan is attached". Then the order winds up by saying, "Let a decree be drawn up in terms of the petition, a copy of the plan above referred to will form a part of the decree". A formal decree was drawn up subsequently in the presence of the pleaders of both parties, and it is the case of the appellants that the present suit is bound by the said compromise decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the decree was not binding on the plaintiffs on several grounds. With regard to the question that was raised in the plaint and also in the issues as to whether the compromise decree was obtained by fraud the Subordinate Judge finds that there was no fraud and we agree with this finding. But he has held that the decree is not binding, first on the ground that one of the plaintiffs did not join, secondly that by the amendment of the plaint in the suit which was made under orders of the Court the character of the suit was changed and it ceased to be a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge says "The decree passed on the basis of the amended plaint was illegal and invalid and I may say without jurisdiction". The third point on which the learned Subordinate Judge holds that the decree is not binding is that in the previous suit the Judge was not competent to declare whether any portion of the property was secular or not, and he further holds that the suit brought under section 92, Civil Procedure Code cannot be compromised and the decree, therefore, is not binding on the plaintiffs.

One initial difficulty in the way of the plaintiffs is whether in this subsequent suit the previous decree of 1910 can be questioned on the ground, stated by the Subordinate Judge. There was no want of jurisdiction of the Judge to entertain the suit or to order the amendment as prayed for, or to direct a decree to be made on compromise of the suit. The authorities the learned Subordinate Judge has cited and to which reference has been made by the learned Vakil for the respondents are the cases of Gyanananda Asram v. Kristo Chandra Mukherji (1), and Abdul Karim Abu Ahamad Khan v. Abdus Sobhan Chowdry (2). These cases only show that in a suit brought under section 92, Civil Procedure Code when a petition of compromise is filed it is open to the Judge to say that the compromise is not lawful and he could then refuse to pass an order on the basis of the compromise. But it is another thing to say that a Judge has no jurisdiction to pass a decree on the basis of compromise in a suit brought under section 92, Civil Procedure Code O. XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with adjustment of suits makes no such distinction.

It is also argued that the amendment of the plaint ought to have been made with the consent of the Advocate-General. It is not necessary for us in this case to express any opinion on that question, because assuming that such sanction was necessary it is a matter to be decided by the Judge dealing with the case in the first instance. In other words the grounds that have been stated by the Subordinate Judge and which have been pressed before us by the learned Vakil for the respondents do not show that there was any want of jurisdiction on the part of the Judge making the decree.

With regard to the question of one of the plaintiffs not joining in the petition of compromise we have only to point out that the learned Judge stated in his order that the compromise was accepted by all parties to the suit. This is a question of fact which the learned Judge was competent to decide. It is possible that he made a mistake as regards this question of fact; but it was for the plaintiff who did not join in the compromise to bring it to the notice of the Judge, and the compromise could only be set aside by an application for review of the judgment or by appeal or such other procedure provided by the law. That a judgment passed by a competent Court having jurisdiction cannot be assailed in a subsequent suit on any ground of mistake is a proposition which has been well settled. We need only refer to one of the cases decided by the Privy Council Rajwant Prosad Pandey v. Ram Ratan Gir (3) in which Lord Shaw in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council says:—"It is said that the Court below decided objections wrongly and that the decree was erroneous. Their Lordships think it is very trite and very familiar that a challenge of the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court can never in law justify a denial of the existence of such jurisdiction. The former has reference to the merits of the case, and the merits of this case have been in all points directly and substantially determined between the same parties as are now in contention at their Lordships Bar. The familiar principle is laid down in a series of cases of which the judgment of Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjan v. Narhari (4) is not, a very remote example. Their Lordships cannot countenance the laying aside of all that has happened in previous litigations, the allowing of a process to become final, and the institution of a fresh suit, the object of which is to declare that although in terms it was applicable to a particular subject of the King who was a party to the proceedings, still upon a new application to Courts of justice, a different result should be reached, and it should be decided that the proceedings and decree did not apply to him."

The decree therefore in suit No. 48 of 1910 cannot be attacked in the present suit on any of the grounds set forth by the Subordinate Judge. In this view it is not necessary for us to consider one of the points which was very elaborately argued as to whether to amendments of the plaint mentioned above take the case out of the provisions of section 92 C. P. C. We may state however that the decision in the case of Sajedur Raja Chowdhury v. Gour Mohan Das (5) is against the contention of the respondents that section 92 does not contemplate a suit against a stranger and we are bound by that decision. Although that decision appears to have been dissented from in the case of Budh Singh Dudhuria v.

Nirad Baran Roy by Mr. Justice Mookerjee that learned Judge stated that the particuar case before him could be decided upon another ground, and he therefore referred the question to a Full Bench for decision. We are however in agreement with the decision in Sajedur Raja v. Gour Mohan Das (6) and are of opinion that if a suit is brought under section 92 of the Code with the sanction of the Advocate General the addition of a stranger as defendant does not render the suit bad.

The question then remains whether the present plaintiffs are bound by the decree in the previous suit. The previous suit as we have already stated wss under section 92 Civil Procedure Code. Such a suit as it has been held in numerous cases is a suit brought by the plaintiffs for themselves and as representives of the general public. We need only refer to the case of Anand Rao v. Ramdas Daduram, (7) decided by the Privy Council. If that is so then under section 11 Explanation vi the plaintiffs would be bound by the decision of the previous suit if the provisions of the explanation are satisfied. Explanation vi runs thus:—"Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating". Then the question is whether the plaintiffs in the previous suit were litigating bona fide in respect of a public right. It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that they were not doing so, and it seems to us that the question of litigating bona fide and the question of fraud were somewhat mixed up in the pleadings of the plaintiffs. What was argued before us is that one Imdad Ali Khan who happens to be a pleader, although he does not practise as a pleader, usually appeared in the suit of 1910 on behalf of some of the defendants on the day when the plaint was amended. This Imdad Ali and his spiritual director who is called Pir Brafiat Ali had afterwards purchased by separate conveyances portions of the disputed property themselves. It is urged that Imdad Ali appeared on the scene by reason of a prearranged conspiracy that the plaint should be amended and a compromise be effected by which a portion of the property should be declared to be trust and a portion of personal property of the defendants ; that this arrangement was carried out by the compromise, and then subsequently the purchases were made. This circumstance may at most raise some sort of suspicion but it cannot be said in the absence of any other evidence that there was a conspiracy to defraud a public endowment. As a matter of fact Imdad Ali Khan was one of the two pleaders for the defendants who accepted the vakalatnama, that after Imdad Ali Khan had accepted the vakalatnama the case was pending in the Court for about 10 months and the first purchase that was made by Pir Barkat Ali was in Agust 1912, that is, about 11 months after the compromise decree. From the various Kabalas to which our attention has been drawn by the learned Vakil for the respondents it does not appear that they paid low prices for these properties. We are therefore unable to hold on the materials before us that Imdad Ali Khan appeared on the scene with any preconceived plan having been settled between the plaintiffs and the defendandants in the suit of 1910. It may very well be that the plaintiffs in that suit were not quite sure whether they would be able to establish that the whole of the property was a public charitable trust. There was a considerable amount of money in deposit in the Collectorate on account of the acquisition of the portion of the land under the Land Acquisition Act, and it is quite possible that the plaintiffs in the previous suit thought that the compromise by which the Mosque and the money in deposit were declared to be public property was sufficient gain on their part in order that they might give up the claim with regard to the tenanted lands. It appears from the evidence also that after the compromise the mosque which was in a dilapidated condition has been rebuilt at the expense of the public and it may be that on account of the compromise the Mahomedan public became assured that the mosque was public property and thought it to be a fit subject of their generosity and spent money for its improvement. There is no question that when the plaintiffs had brought the suit they had brought it bona fide with the object of benefitting the public. The only question that arises is whether the compromise was bona fide or not, and as we hold that there is nothing on the record to show that the plaintiffs were not acting bona fide in the matter the present plaintiffs are barred by the rule of res judicata.

There was one question raised on behalf of the appellants as to whether the present suit is competent without the sanction required by section 92 Civil Procedure Code. It does not appear that this question was argued in the lower Court, although we are informed that it was. The learned Subordinate Judge has not discussed the question at all The learned Vakil for the respondents has cited a number of cases in support of his contention that the present suit is maintainable by the plaintiff alone, although they described themselves as representatives of the Musalman Community. We entertain considerable doubt as to the maintainability of such a suit as this without the sanction of the Advocate General under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure having regard to sub-section 2 which has been added to the corresponding section 539 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. It is, however, unnecessary for us to give any decided opinion having regard to the decree we are going to make.

With regard to appeal No. 112 in which defendant No. 44 is the appellant the point in addition to the questions argued in the other appeal raised was that in the plaint the plaintiffs did not ask for any injunction against this particular defendant who purchased pendente lite from defendant No. 43. In the plaint no prayer was made for injunction against the defendant No. 43, but the learned Judge has made a decree against this defendant also. In our opinion without amendment of the plaint such a decree could not have been made against that defendant.

Having regard to the observations we have made both the appeals must be decreed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs of both Courts against the plaintiffs who are the contesting respondents here. The respondents other than the plaintiffs will bear their own costs in both Courts.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD, SITAPUR—RESPONDENT.

U. P. Municipalities Act (Act of 1916), s. 162—Tax on Salary of municipal servant—Absence from duty on account of leave—Right to refund.

A municipal servant is not entitled to refund of the tax assessed on his Salary under municipal bye-laws during any period in which he is absent from the Municipality.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Sitapur, under section 162, Municipal Act of 1915.

Order.—The District Magistrate of Sitapur has referred under section 162 of Municipal Act the following question for the decision of this Court :—

"Is a Municipal servant entitled to refund of the tax assessed on his salary under Municipal Bye-laws during any period in which he is absent from the Municipality ?"

The answer must be in the negative. The income on which the tax is assessed is earned by the assessee for work done by him in the Municipality, whether he is actually performing his duties or is absent on leave. The District Magistrate has submitted the question apparently because he is of opinion that it is of importance to every Government servant. I am unable to see any parallel between the case of a Municipal Secretary who is paid by the Municipality for work done for a municipality and that of a Government servant, e. g. a District Magistrate who draws his pay as such without any reference to his place of residence in or outside a Municipality. With regard to the particular case on which the reference is based the appellant did not appear before the District Magistrate or before this Court and under the rules he is not entitled to any refund. His appeal, therefore, should be dismissed.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 335-B OF 1922.

March 29, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.

RAMJI AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDERS —APPELLANTS

ZIBLAJI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR— RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 141' 144, 151, scope of—Money decree—Execution—Attachment of standing crops—Crops delivered to decree-holder for safe custody—Decree-holder, position of—Security Bond—Decree, satisfaction of—Restitution of crops, application for—Executing Court, Jurisdiction of—Separate suit, whether necessary.

An executing Court, which entrusts to a party to the decree or to a third person as a depository or supratdar property taken by it under attachment or in execution of its process, has, either acting on its own motion or at the instance of a party to the decree power.

(1) to order him to produce it for sale if necessary, or even to return it to the judgment-debtor or to the objector or any other person from whose possession it was attached or taken, upon the decree being satisfied or objection being allowed or upon the termination of any proceedings in execution, or for any cause whatever, and also if necessary.

(2) to visit him with any penalty for his default in obeying its orders by proceeding against him in a summary manner, in order to prevent the abuse of its own process and for shortening the litigation or for the ends of justice.

The mere fact that the decree-holder becomes a depositary of the property taken in execution of a decree does not make him a stranger to the decree, so as to prevent the Court from exercising its jurisdiction over him.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code gives ample jurisdiction to a Court to pass orders for the restoration of or for the proclamation of the withdrawal of attachment of moveable property also.

The word 'decree' in section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code covers on 'order' and the word 'Court' includes Courts of every grade.

Section 244 of the old Civil Procedure Code corresponding to section 47 of the new Civil Procedure Code is meant to provide "a cheap and expeditious remedy" by empowering the Court executing a decree to determine questions that may arise in execution proceedings, without requiring the parties to bring a separate suit in respect of any questions that may arise between them in such proceedings.

Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, 19 C. 683 ; 19 I. A. 166 ; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 209 ; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 898 (P. C.), followed.

The surety bond which the supratdar has to execute, should be drawn up in such form as to clearly bring home to him the nature of his liability.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Kinkhede, A. J. C.—In Civil Suit No. 69 of 1919 one Barkaji obtained a money-decree against Ziblaji on 9th February 1920 for Rs. 600. He took out execution of the decree and attached the judgment-debtor's standing crops on 28th October 1920. The crops attached were entrusted on 28th October 1920 to the decree-holder for safe custody and a security bond popularly known as Supratnama or Jimmepatrak was taken from him under that date. The judgment-debtor on 16th November 1920 deposited the decretal amount and costs into Court and prayed for the attached property being re-delivered to him from the possession of the custodian. The Executing Court passed the following order on 16th November 1920. "The judgment-debtor has deposited full claim in Court this day. His property be released from attachment". On 26th November 1920 which was the date fixed for hearing in the case, the parties remained absent and the Judge recorded an order striking the case off as fully satisfied. The decree-holder returned to the judgment-debtor only $2\frac{1}{4}$ Khandis 1 Pasari of cotton on 2nd December 1920 but failed to return the rest of the crops which came to his possession as custodian. The Judgment-debtor thereupon made an application on 31st January 1924 purporting to be one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and prayed that the decree-holder be ordered to pay him Rs. 416 on account of the value of the undelivered crops, and in the alternative, if this prayer could not be granted on the execution side, that the application may be treated as a plaint in a suit and a decree may be passed in his favour for Rs. 416 claimed by him. This application was, however, dismissed in default and was therefore followed by another similar application under date 12th April 1921. It was heard ex parte by the Sub-Judge of Morsi who after going through the evidence as to the value of the property which came into the possession of the decree holder as custodian ordered Rs. 300 to be paid to the judgment-debtor ; in doing so he purported to act under section 145 read with section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Against this order an appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge Amraoti by the decree-holder contending that the application was not maintainable. It was held that the custodian in the present case was not a third person but the decree-holder himself, and that under the terms of the security bond given by him he was liable as a surety under section 145 clause (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, and on the analogy of a case where the decree-holder himself is the auction purchaser it was held that proceedings could be taken for the recovery of the property or its value on the execution side. He accordingly held that there was no necessity for filing a separate suit and dismissed the appeal.

The decree holder has now come up in second appeal to this Court and has urged on the authority of the ruling of Mittra, A. J. C. in Khetsidas Radhakisan Marwari v. Harba Marathe (1), which followed an earlier ruling of Sir Stanley Ismay, J. C. in Joshi Powar v. Jiwraj Hazarimal (2) in which that learned Judicial Commissioner dissented from the view taken by Obbard, J. C., in Nathoo Ram v. Kamal Ram (3), that the judgment-debtor's remedy lay in a regular suit and not in a proceeding under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Courts below ought to have followed the reported decisions of this Court and held that section 145 did not apply to this case.

(3) 12 C. P. L. R. 149.

With a view to find out for myself how the security bond taken in the case decided by Mittra, A. J. C. was worded and whether the Supratdar was a party to the decree either as decree-holder or as judgment-debtor or a third person, I caused the record of the original Court to be sent for, and asked the Deputy Registrar to put up any precedents in this connection. He has brought to my notice that Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, J. C. in his letter No. 4060|1-39-15|11 dated the 29th November 1911, to all Divisional Judges, pointed out that it is " more than doubtful whether section 145 Civil Procedure Code is applicable. But section 151 may not unfairly be regarded as supplying the authority the existence of which Mr. S. Ismay, late Judicial Commissioner doubted in Joshi Powar v. Jiwraj Hazarimal (2) ; until the point is judicially decided with reference to the provisions of the present Code, the Courts would do well to act on the view expressed by Mr. Obbard, Judicial Commissioner, in Nathoo Ram v. Kamal Ram (3)" and that latterly the question of the failure of the custodians who are either parties to the decree or strangers has been the subject of some correspondence in office by reason of several complaints having been brought to the notice of some of the District Judges by their subordinate Courts. It is pointed out that the custodian if he happens to be the decree-holder, generally when his execution is struck off in default or when an objection preferred in respect of the attached property is allowed, evades delivery of the property entrusted to him with a view to ensure re-attachment of the same without any further trouble, or to prevent the objector from getting it back. Similarly if the custodian happens to be either a judgment-debtor or his fast friend, the entrusting of the attached property to them has resulted in a practical release of the said property because of their failure to produce them for sale when so ordered by the Court. It also appears that the forms of the security bonds taken do not in many instances contain a clause entitling the Executing Court to execute its own order for production by realising the value of the property by issuing a warrant of arrest or attachment against the custodian or his property, on the execution side. Other instances in which a decree-holder may not take interest in the welfare of the live-stock or proper care of the attached property or may claim heavy charges for fodder or expenses of management so as practically to reduce the value of the attached property to nothing have also arisen in several Courts.

It stands to common sense that a Court which entrusted the property to the custodian should have jurisdiction to cause its production when ordered or to penalise any failure or neglect to obey the order, by effecting recovery of its price from the defaulter. It is, however, a debatable point: firstly, whether the remedy of a party to the decree as against the custodian lies in a proceeding under section 47 Civil Procedure Code or in a proceeding under section 145 read with section 47 Civil Procedure Code 'or in a separate suit, and whether it makes any difference if the custodian happens to be either a decree-holder, or a judgment-debtor, to the enforcement of the liability on the execution side; secondly, whether the executing Court which entrusts a custodian with property under attachment, should or should not have any power, either under section 144 read with section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, or under the inherent jurisdiction given by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the ends of justice and in order to prevent abuse of its own process and to shorten litigation, to order a person put in charge by it to produce it for sale thereof, or to return it to the judgment-debtor upon the decree being satisfied or upon the termination of the execution proceedings for any cause whatsoever, and, also, if necessary, to visit the penalty on the defaulting custodian, by proceeding, in a summary manner, against him, in the same execution proceedings.

In view of the apparent conflict of view that prevailed in this Court under the old and the new Code, and of the tendency on the part of the custodians to set at naught the authority of the executing Court, and of the general importance of the question, I think an authoritative decision by a Bench of this Court is necessary. The record is, therefore, submitted to the Judicial Commissioner for referring the case to a Bench of two Judges. Pending the reference I put off my decision of this second appeal.

The question of law raised in this second appeal was in view of the general importance referred for decision to a Bench by one of us and as the facts of this case are set out in full detail in the order of reference we need not recapitulate them here. We will, therefore, proceed to give our decision on the point referred to us. The point for consideration, is:— whether any executing Court, which entrusts, to a party to the decree or to a third person as a depositary or supratdar, property taken by it under attachment or in execution of its process, has, either acting on its own motion or at the instance of a party to the decree, any power, under any of the sections 47, 141, 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.—

(1) to order him to produce it for sale if necessary, or even to return it to the judgment-debtor or to the objector or any other person from whose possession it was attached or taken, upon the decree being satisfied or objection being allowed or upon the termination of any proceedings in execution, or for any cause whatever, and also if necessary,

(2) to visit him with any penalty for his default in obeying its orders by proceeding against him in a summary manner, in order to prevent the abuse of its own process and for shortening the litigation or for the ends of justice.

We have had the advantage of hearing the arguments on both sides and of discussing the pros and cons of the question or the respective advantages or disadvantages of enforcing the remedy against the depository by a summary proceeding or by a regular suit, and we are of opinion that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court that the remedy can be enforced in a summary manner in the execution proceedings, is correct, and that it accords not only with common sense but has ample support in law, and that the case of Khetsidas v. Harba (1), which held the contrary view was incorrectly decided.

In the case before us the depository is a party to the decree being the decree-holder himself. The mere fact that he becomes a depository of the property taken in execution of a decree does not make him a stranger to the decree so as to prevent the Court from exercising its jurisdiction over him. Moreover in this case the decree having been satisfied by a payment, and the Court having, therefore, ordered that the property be released from attachment as it was bound to do and order restitution, the decree-holder had no business to retain the property or any portion thereof, after such satisfaction or order for restoration. It is this withholding of the property which has led to the judgment-debtor's application to the executing Court for an order to the depository to put him back into possession of the property so withheld or for payment of its money value. O. XXI, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code, provides for the withdrawal of attachment being proclaimed in the case of immoveable property; it does not in so many words deal with a similar question regarding moveables. We know, however, that as a matter of practice an order is issued to the Nazir to restore back moveable property to the person from whose possession the same is attached, or at any rate to notify the release. We think section 151 gives ample jurisdiction to a Court to pass similar orders for the restoration of or for the proclamation of the withdrawal of attachment of moveable property also. The power of ordering restitution of property taken under colour of its process must, for obvious reasons, be recognised as existing in every executing Court. Section 145 clause (b) Civil Procedure Code recognises the authority of an executing Court to proceed summarily against a person who has, by a contract of suretyship, rendered himself liable for the restitution of property taken in execution of the decree. The authority of a Court to order restitution exists even apart from express contract; that it can be exercised when a decree is reversed or superseded or varied is contemplated by section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. Even where the wording of section 144 may not expressly cover any particular case, the principle underlying that section has also been made applicable, and restitution has been ordered by Courts. In Radha v. Sakhu (4), Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, J. C., recognised the force of an argument advanced on these lines, and held that a Court has inherent power to order restitution in cases not covered by section 144, Civil Procedure Code. The following observations are very instructive. They are at page 64 of the report: "The obvious reason is that the Court having by its temporary injunction deprived the respondent Sakhu of what she was legally entitled to, should ex debito justitiae restore her to the possession which she had thus lost and also compensate her for the profits which she had been precluded from earning." In that case both the Courts below had held that while section 144 was not in terms applicable, the applicant Sakhu "had an equitable right to the compensation claimed and that the Court had inherent power to grant her this relief without relegating her to a separate suit." If authority is wanted for the view that the word "decree" in section 144 covers an "order" and the word "Court" in the said section includes Courts of every grade, it is to be found in Tangtur Subbarayudu v. Yerram Setti Seshasani (5), Shivbai Babya Swami v. Yesu Cheoo Nayakin (6) and Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (7). Their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down at page 16 the duty of every Court in this respect, in the following words of Cairns, L. C. in Rodger v. Camptoir d'Escompte de Paris (8). "One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors and when the expression 'the act of the Court,' is used, it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court, or of any intermediate Court of Appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case." They have further made this very clear by their own following observations "It is the duty of the Court, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, to place the parties in the position which they would have occupied, but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed ". Nor indeed does this duty or jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly according to the circumstances towards all parties involved. In our opinion, the words " according to circumstances towards all parties involved " are very wide and cover all sorts of cases, whether of parties or of third persons involved in each particular case.

Looking at the case from a still another point of view and regarding the property attached as being in custodia legis we say that the depository or custodian having been entrusted with it by the order of the Court, it is in the fitness of things that he should be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, and also to be legally compellable to produce it whenever ordered by it to do so, as if he were an officer of the Court. If he owes his position, as also his authority to possess the said property to the authority which created him or delegated that authority to him, it stands to reason that he should not be permitted to ignore any order for production or redelivery, issuing from that very authority, and set it at naught and thus drive it to the necessity of filing a regular suit against him for that purpose, or of authorising any of the parties to the decree, or its officer such as the Nazir, or if an objection be preferred and allowed, the objector, from whose possession the property was attached and in whose favour it was released, or any other person who may be interested in its recovery to file such a suit. There is no logic in the obstructive attitude of the depository. He being constituted a bailee, under the order of the Court, of the property attached or taken in execution of the decree, is under law bound to restore the property so bailed with him, to or to the order of, the bailor namely the Court. The underlying idea of appointing a Supratdar is to facilitate the execution of the decree by keeping the property in the custody of the Court so that it may be readily available for sale etc. in execution of the decree. It could never have been the intention of law, to authorise, a person appointed by the Executing Court for taking charge of the property, to put obstacles in the way of the execution of the decree, and, in case of obstruction, to compel the Executing Court to say to the claimant that it had the power to do a wrong to him but had no power to undo the effect of that wrong, and that if he has any grievance he should seek his remedy in a regular suit. It may have to put off even the execution of the decree in some cases until the disposal of the regular suit against the depository for the recovery of the property so made over. To countenance such a wrongful with-holding of property by a depository would militate against the very essence or principle of section 244 of the old or 47 of the new Civil Procedure Code, as laid down by the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar Sunyal v. Kalidas (9), which as we understand it is as under:—

Section 244 of the old Civil Procedure Code corresponding to section 47 of the new Civil Procedure Code is meant to provide " a cheap and expeditious remedy " by empowering the Court executing a decree to determine questions that may arise in execution proceedings, without requiring the parties to bring a separate suit in respect of any questions that may arise between them in such proceedings. This section has been enacted for the beneficial purpose of checking needless litigation and it is for this reason that its benefit is made available even to a third party—auction-purchaser—if he seeks it.

We take this opportunity to point out that the surety bond or security bond, which the Supratdar has to execute, should be drawn up in such form as to clearly bring home to him the nature of his liability. He must know that his obligation both contractual and legal is to restore the property to or to the order of the Court, which entrusted it to him, and that any neglect or failure on his part, to obey any orders of that Court or of the Court whose duty it will be to pass them or carry them out would render him liable to the summary jurisdiction of the Executing Court, in addition to any other steps which the Court may think fit to take against him for his contumacious conduct. Much of the difficulty that is at present experienced in resorting to summary remedies against the Supratdar will thus be obviated. We also suggest that if the person selected as the depository or custodian is also appointed a Receiver under O. XL of the Civil Procedure Code, the further procedure of the Court will be rendered easier than it at present appears to be.

We have already adverted to the case which is expressly covered by section 145 Civil Procedure Code which lays down that in a case where a person whether he be a party or a stranger to the decree, has "become liable as surety for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree, the decree or the order may be executed against him." We have no doubt that the depository or surety can and does come within the purview of a "surety" within the meaning of the said section. In applying the provisions of section 145 (b) Civil Procedure Code to the depository or Supratdar all we wish to point out is that a properly worded surety bond should be taken from him clearly stating that he executes it as a surety and will be liable as a surety and then, there will be no difficulty to put the decree or order into execution against him, as the wording of section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code is clear on the point.

We have not touched the question of the inherent jurisdiction which every Court possesses or ought to possess under law to pass any orders necessary for the ends of justice or in order to prevent the abuse of its own process or to shorten litigation. Such a power is always recognised and can be invoked by a party, or exercised by the Court of its own motion for the benefit of any person "involved" in the "proceedings" and we do not think that a custodian or Supratdar is such a being as cannot be brought under or be made amenable to, such inherent jurisdiction.

For all these reasons our considered opinion on the point referred to us for decision is that the view taken in Khetsidas v. Harba (1), which gives to the Supratdars an immunity from the summary jurisdiction of an Execution Court was not correctly decided, and we therefore, overrule that decision. That was a case of Supratdar who was not a party to the decree, and, therefore, some doubt may have been entertained by the learned Judge who decided the case. But in the view which we take, that question seems to be immaterial, and the depository, whether he be a party or no party, is liable. We accordingly hold that the security given by a depository or custodian for the safe custody of the property entrusted to him by the orders of a Court be realized by issue of a summary process in execution against him.

JUDGMENT.— The relevant facts which gave rise to this appeal are given in the order of reference, as also in the opinion delivered by the Bench.

As a result of the opinion recorded by the Bench this appeal stands dismissed with costs in all the Courts to be paid by the appellants, 29th March 1924.

Mr. R. B. N. N. Ghoshal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the learned District Judge of Fyzabad refusing to grant a discharge to the appellant under section 41 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The appellant was adjudicated insolvent on March 1st, 1912. Two of his creditors had secured debts, and the other was the Court of Wards which had a decree for nearly Rs. 4,000. The only property possessed by the appellant, apart from that mortgaged to the secured creditors, was an occupancy tenancy. This, it appears, was handed over to the Receiver when the appellant was adjudicated insolvent. When he applied for discharge the Court found that the insolvent's assets were not of a value equal to 8 annas in the rupee, and it also found from a report of the Receiver that the insolvent, so far from helping the Receiver to pay his debts, had rather obstructed him. In these circumstances it would have been improper to grant a discharge, and I am of opinion that the District Judge's order is a perfectly reasonable one. There does not appear to be much prospect of the appellant's ever being discharged as he is now an old man, and he has practically no property, and the debt is a large one. It really rests with the creditors. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code, (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, O. XX, r. 6, Decree, amendment of—Decree not in conformity with judgment—Court, duty of—Inherent jurisdiction of Court.

When it is discovered that a decree does not agree with the judgment it is the duty of the Court to amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment.

The power of the Court to amend the decree is not confined to the provisions of O. XX, r. 6, or to section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code for it is a matter within the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and it may be exercised under section 151 of the case which does not restrict the illimitable inherent jurisdiction of the Court.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule was issued on the opposite party to show cause why the decree passed in suit No. 41 of 1919 in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Dacca should not be amended as prayed in the petition. The suit was a partition suit and on the 10th April 1919, the Subordinate Judge of Dacca passed a decree on it. There was an appeal to the District Judge by the party other than the petitioner and the Defendant No. 7. The decree of the first Court was affirmed on the 7th August 1920. There was a Second Appeal to this Court which was dismissed under O. XLI r. 11 on the 14th March 1921. The decree was executed and possession was delivered to the different parties on the 8th February 1922. It is stated that the petitioner at that time discovered the mistake, namely, the omission of a certain direction in the decree and he applied on the 18th July 1922 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca for its amendment. That application remained pending till the 9th June 1923 when it was dismissed on the ground that the application should have been made to this Court, the original decree having merged in the decree of this Court in the Second Appeal. Hence the petitioner moved this Court and obtained the present Rule. The defect in the decree complained of is this. The petitioner was the Defendant No. 8 in the Court below. In the partition suit a Commissioner was appointed; and the parties by mutual consent agreed to the allotments made by him. The real dispute in the present matter lies between Defendant No. 8 who is the petitioner and the defendant No. 7 who is the contesting opposite party. The two plots allotted to these two defendants are contiguous. It was agreed that Defendant No. 8 (the petitioner) should give a road over his plot No. 8 to Defendant No. 7; and in exchange get a 2 feet wide strip of land from east to west being the northern portion of plot No. 7 which was allotted to Defendant No. 7. All these terms are embodied in the judgment. The decree, however, though it mentions that a way will be kept over plot No. 8 for access to plot No. 7, from the north does not mention of the 2 cubits, wide strip of land to be allotted to Defendant No. 8. The defendant No. 8 has accordingly applied to have that clause inserted in the decree and thus make it conform to the judgment.

It is not seriously disputed that there has been this omission; but it is argued by defendant No. 7 that the amendment should not be allowed at this stage, first, because it is not proved that he had consented to the giving up of this strip of land and secondly, because, his right to appeal from the amended decree will now be barred. I do not think that these considerations ought to prevail against a plain duty of the Court. The real question that arises in this case is, that, conceding that the decree is at variance with the judgment, whether it is in the discretion of the Court, considering the length of time after which the application for amendment is made and the other circumstances, to refuse to bring it into conformity with the judgment. The learned Vakil for the petitioner contends that when it is discovered that the decree does not agree with the judgment, it is the duty of the Court to amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment. In my judgment that is the true view of the law. A decree has been defined in section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the formal expression of an adjudication which completely determines the right of the parties with regard to the matter in controversy in the suit. This formal expression of adjudication means that the decree is a concise statement of the adjudication of the rights of the parties by the Court as expressed in the judgment. A decree, therefore, does not and can not travel beyond or short of the judgment and must follow it. The law with regard to amendment of decree was expressed in section 206 of the Code of 1882. That Section was in these terms: "If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree, the Court shall of its own motion or on that of any of the parties amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error." It made it obligatory on the Court if there is any variance between judgment and decree, to bring them into conformity. That section in the old Code was split up and its several parts embodied in different sections of the new Code. The first portion of the section made it obligatory that the decree should conform to the judgment and is reproduced in r. 6, O. XX. The latter portion of the old section is re-enacted in section 152 of the present Code. The power of the Court to amend the decree is not confined to provisions of O. XX, r. 6 or to section 152 for it is a matter within the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and it may be exercised under section 151 which, however, does not restrict the illimitable inherent jurisdiction of the Court as is observed in the cases of Brijratan v. Jaynarain (1) and Barhamdeo Singh v. Harmonage Narain Singh (2).

It is, however, urged that section 152 gives the Court a discretion to allow or not an application for amendment of a decree. In my opinion, this is not the correct reading of the section. It no doubt says that when a clerical or arithmetical mistake is discovered in the decree, the Court may at any time correct it. The word 'may' in the section does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the correction but merely enlarges the power of the Court by proving that such correction can be done 'at any time' or in other words, the section simply emphasises that no lapse of time would disentitle the Court to make the correction. As has been observed the intention of the law is to make it obligatory upon the Court whenever any such mistake is discovered to correct it and section 152 merely emphasises that duty of the Court by saying that it may be done at any time without limitation. This view, namely, that it is the duty of the Court to amend the decree when it is brought to its notice that it does not agree with the judgment, is supported by a number of cases of which reference may be made to the cases of Shivapa v. Shivapanch Lingapa (3), Kalu v. Latu (4), Menat Ali v. Amdar Ali (5), Basant Kumar Bose v. Khulna Loan Co. (6), and Surendra Nath Roy v. Girija Nath Roy (7). The only exception to this general rule is that the Court will refuse to make the amendment where it offends against the principles of equity; for instance, it may not be desirable to amend the decree where the interest of a third party (who may be a bona-fide transferee for valuable consideration) may be jeopardised. Henry Hatton v. Harris (8). A reference to the reported cases on this point shows that amendment has been allowed even long after the passing of the decree without limit of time. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree should be amended by inserting the following words: "Defendant No. 8 will get a space 2 cubits broad throughout the entire length of plot No. 7 and contiguous to plot No. 8 in consideration of the space that he shall have to keep open for ingress and egress to and from plot No. 7 over the land of plot No. 8."

Both parties further pray that another omission in the decree should also be supplied by inserting the words: "The eastern boundary of plot No. 8 may fluctuate but the way must always be 2 cubits broad from its eastern limit whatever that may be" after the direction about the keeping of a road 2 cubits broad from plot No. 7 northwards over the eastern limit of plot No. 8. These words should also be inserted.

This Rule is accordingly made absolute. In the circumstances of this case we make no order as to costs.

Graham, J.—I agree with my learned brother that this Rule should be made absolute. It has not been disputed thas the decree is not in conformity with the judgment. Under O. XX, r. 6 of the Code the decree must be in conformity with the judgment and it is the duty of the Court to see that there is such agreement. No question of limitation arises and under section 152, Code of Civil Procedure an omission of this nature in the decree can be corrected by the Court at any time. There are reported cases in England where such amendment has been made after the lapse of many years. Where property has changed hands subsequent to the passing of the decree and delivery of possession, other considerations arise. But this is not a case of that nature. I agree that the omission ought to be rectified by amending the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment.

P. IQBAL NARAIN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (IV of 1872), s. 91—Receipt for payment of money—Oral evidence, whether admissible.

SARDAR SINGH v. IQBAL NARAIN

A receipt acknowledging payment of money is not a contract, grant or disposition of property within the meaning of section 91 of the Evidence Act.

Therefore, where a receipt is found to be suspicious or is unregistered, oral evidence as to its contents is admissible.

Appeal against the decree of the Fourth Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 8th January 1923, in an appeal preferred against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 17th May 1921.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit brought on the basis of a mortgage-deed. The suit was decreed in part against certain of the defendants and various issues were raised in the lower Court. In the grounds of appeal two main points have been raised :—(1) That the debt not being an antecedent debt is no charge on the joint family property ; (2) that the respondents having set up a written receipt as evidence of payment to the prior mortgagee and that receipt having been held by the Courts below as suspicious, oral evidence in proof of the said payment was inadmissible in law. The first of these grounds of appeal has been dropped in view of the recent decisions of the Privy Council, and a third ground of appeal on the question of limitation has also not been pressed. Only the second ground of appeal remains. Part of the mortgage money consisted of a sum of Rs. 477 alleged to have been paid in execution of a decree in favour of certain prior mortgagees. The plaintiff produced as evidence of this payment a receipt signed by the payee and also by two witnesses. The payee was examined as a witness and he attested the receipt and admitted that he received the money and also showed that he acknowledged the payment in Court on 20th October 1905. The Court of first instance made no comment on the receipt but the First Appellate Court thought that it was in some way suspicious. In spite of this the Court admitted the evidence of the payee and found the payment proved. It is now argued that the oral evidence was inadmissible under section 91 of the Evidence Act. Now section 91 of the Evidence Act excludes oral evidence when the terms of a contract, or of a grant or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document, and the meaning of the section is clearly this that oral evidence shall not be admitted in substitution for a document of a certain nature. The document in the present instance is a receipt. It is not a contract or a grant nor in the ordinary sense of the term is it a disposition of property. It is true that the money was intended to pay off a decree passed on a mortgage and in a certain sense there was still a charge on the property until the money was paid. But I am not prepared to hold that a receipt of this kind is intended to fall under section 91 of the Evidence Act, and it has always been accepted that even where a receipt has been given for the payment of money, proof of the fact of payment may be made by any person who witnessed it. A further point was raised in argument, though it was not in issue in the lower Courts, nor stated in the grounds of appeal, namely, that this receipt ought to have been registered. But lack of registration does not bring the document within the scope of section 91 of the Evidence Act and there is direct authority of the Madras High Court in the ruling reported in Appamma Nayuralu v. Ramanna (1), that a receipt of this nature could be received in evidence of payment even though it was not registered and that in any case oral evidence of the same would have been admitted. In the present case I am not satisfied that there is any definite finding that the receipt is suspicious. Even if it were suspicious oral evidence was admissible and that oral evidence coupled with the further documentary evidence afforded by the payee's acknowledgment in Court proves without any doubt that this sum of Rs. 477 was actually paid. As it is no longer alleged that this sum is not binding on the appellants if it were actually paid the appeal is bound to fail. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION NO. 209-B OF 1923.

March 29, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.

SULTANALI—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

BALAJI—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 39, O. XXI, rr. 7, 8, 10, 11—Decree, transfer of—Court to which decree transferred, when can execute—Fraudulent decree—Remedy—Injunction to restrain institution of proceedings—Cause of action, when accrues—Jurisdiction.

Where a Court transfers its decree for execution to another Court, the latter Court although clothed with jurisdiction to execute the decree as soon as the Judge orders that the necessary copy of the decree and certificate be filed in Court, will not and cannot execute it unless and until regular application for execution is made to it under O. XXI, rr. 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code.

In the case of a fraudulent decree the remedy is by way of injunction to restrain the party from executing the decree.

The India Provident Company Limited v. Gobinda Chandra Das, 65 Ind. Cas. 318, followed.

Injunction can be legally claimed and granted in order to restrain the institution of proceedings, that is in anticipation.

Besant v. Wood, (1879) 12 Ch. D. 605, at p. 630; 40 L. T. 445; Hart v. Hart, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 670; 50 L. J. Ch. 697 ; 65 L. T. 13 ; 30 W. R. 8, followed.

The right to the relief of injunction to restrain the decree-holder from applying to execute his decree on the ground that it was obtained fraudulently accrues and is enforceable by suit even though the decree-holder defendant has not applied for execution, or the Court has not actually put it into execution.

In cases other than those substantially falling within the scope of suits respecting immoveable property or suits for land, if the cause of action to sue for injunction has wholly or in part arisen within the jurisdiction of any Court that Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, under section 20, clause (c) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 25 of 1923, dated the 29th September 1923.

Mr. M. Y. Shariff, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Bowe, for the Non-applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant is a judgment-debtor and the non-applicant is a decree-holder under a decree passed by the Small Cause Court, Bombay, in Civil Suit No. 1007|10509 of 1922. The decree is dated 14th July 1922 and was passed ex parte against the applicant. The decree-holder applied to the Court, which passed the decree to send it for execution under section 39 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Court of Subordinate Judge, Amraoti.

On 22nd December 1922, by which time no application for execution of the decree as prescribed by O. XXI, rr. 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code, was made to the said Court, the applicant filed his suit in that Court (of Subordinate Judge, Amraoti) that is, the very same Court through which the decree-holder was desirous of executing his aforesaid Bombay decree, and prayed that a decree granting injunction restraining the defendant (decree-holder) from applying for execution of the said decree and recovering the decretal amount, on the ground that the decree was obtained fraudulently be passed against him. The defendant raised the plea that as the decree was not actually put into execution within the jurisdiction of the Amraoti Court, that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The first Court upheld the contention and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Against this order an appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge, Amraoti, by the plaintiff, but he dismissed the appeal after discussing some case-law. In the Courts below a large number of rulings were discussed and the Judges have tried to justify their conclusions by reference to them or by distinguishing them. The following were amongst the cases so discussed: Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (1), Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (2), Dan Dayal v. Munna Lal (3), Jawahir v. Neki Ram (4), Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (5), Lakshmi Charan Saha v. Nur Ali (6), Ram Lal-Izhar Das v. Salig Ram (7), and The India Provident Company Ltd. v. Gobinda Chandra Das (8). The plaintiff has come up to this Court and asks for interference in revision.

Two questions arise for consideration. (1) Whether the plaintiff's cause of action to sue the defendant for injunction to restrain him from executing the fraudulent decree could arise even though no application for execution of the decree had been made; and (2) Whether that cause of action could arise within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Amraoti, which received the decree and the certificate for execution and ordered the same to be filed as laid down in O. XXI, rr. 7 and 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. Under section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court to which the decree is so sent has the same powers of executing the decree as if it had been passed by itself. Section 51 lays down the powers of the Court to enforce the execution of the decree and specifies the several modes in which a decree could be executed. O. XXI, rr. 5 to 8 of the Civil Procedure Code prescribe the mode of transfer and the procedure to be adopted and the documents to be forwarded and the record to be made by the Courts concerned, whenever a decree is transferred by one Court for execution within the jurisdiction of another Court. Rules 10 and 11 of the said Order lay down the essential steps for actually starting execution of the decree. It will thus be seen that where a Court transfers its decree for execution to another Court, the latter Court although clothed with jurisdiction to execute the decree as soon as the Judge orders that the necessary copy of the decree and certificate be filed in Court, will not and cannot execute it unless and until regular application for execution is made to it under O. XXI, rr. 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code. In the case of a fraudulent decree the remedy is by way of injunction to restrain the party from executing the decree as laid down in Kunhamed v. Kutti (9).

(7) 59 Ind. Cas. 2; 7 P. W. R. 1921.
(8) 65 Ind. Cas. 816.
(9) 14 M. 167.

It is argued that both the Courts have misread the real stand-point in the case with reference to which the case could be decided. If the view that has prevailed in the lower Courts is accepted as correct then no judgment-debtor against whom a fraudulent decree has been obtained by another person will be in a position to sue for injunction until the decree-holder actually makes the application for execution under O. XXI, rr. 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code or the decree is actually executed by attachment or any of the modes prescribed for executing the decree; in other words he would not be entitled to obtain relief against a threatened infringement of his rights but must wait until his rights are actually infringed. It must be remembered that the grant of an injunction is not limited to infringements of rights already taken place, but that the basic idea of a suit for injunction to restrain the doing of any act is to prevent future or threatened injuries or infringements the repetition of which must be stopped in order to prevent multiplicity of suits or judicial proceedings. A suit in which a plaintiff seeks the relief of injunction is in essence based on the principle of a quia timet action (because he fears). It has been held that injunction can be legally claimed and granted in order to restrain the institution of proceedings, that is in anticipation. Besant v. Wood (10), Hart v. Hart (11), Kerr on Injunctions, 5th Edition page 13, Woodroffe's Law of Injunctions, 4th Edition page 159. It has similarly been held in India that even if the proceedings be not pending at the date of the institution of the suit in which the injunction was sought, but is contemplated and threatened only, there is nothing, the case being otherwise proper, to prohibit an injunction being granted against the actual institution of such threatened proceedings: see Moran v. River Steam Nivagation Co., (12), Appu v. Raman (13).

In the case of Appu v. Raman (13), the Subordinate Judge prohibited certain parties from executing a decree which had been passed in their favour and which was on the file of the District Judge, it however, appearing that no application for execution had been made, it was held that the prohibition was not an injunction to stay proceedings in the Court of the District Judge, but that the effect of the injunction granted by the Subordinate Judge was to prevent those parties from applying to the District Court to execute its decree. As no application for execution had till then been made in that case, and so long as the injunction was in force none could be made, no pending proceedings of a Court could be said to be restrained by the injunction. The decided cases clearly contemplate the granting of a preventive relief by issue of an injunction even where the injury to one's rights is merely threatened or contemplated. The previous making of the application for execution is not, therefore, a necessary condition precedent to the enforcement of the plaintiff's right to demand the relief of injunction. If such an application is as a matter of fact made and the Court has ordered execution of the decree, that will of course give him a right to further relief and even to ask for an ad-interim injunction staying further proceedings.

I, therefore, hold that the right to the relief of injunction to restrain the decree-holder from applying to execute his decree on the ground that it was obtained fraudulently accrues and is enforceable by suit even though the decree-holder defendant has not applied for execution, or the Court has not actually put it into execution.

The next question is whether the transfer or receipt of a copy of such a decree and certificate thereof for execution within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Subordinate Judge, Amraoti, gives jurisdiction to that Court or to any other Court of competent jurisdiction exercising powers within those limits, to try a suit for injunction to restrain the execution of the decree, the other conditions and limitations prescribed for giving jurisdiction to such Court being complied. If the plaintiff has got under law a right which is either a right in Personam or a right to property, to say that his person and property wherever situate is free from arrest or attachment, or that they are not subject to any other process of execution open under law to an executing Court to issue in execution of a decree on the ground that the decree is fraudulent, and if such right is threatened or contemplated or likely to be infringed by a possible execution of that decree by the Court which has received it for execution against the judgment-debtor or his property on any of the grounds mentioned in section 39 and in any of the modes prescribed in section 51, Civil Procedure Code, I dare say that the plaintiff's cause of action must be taken to have arision, if not wholly at least in part, within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such executing Court. There is the right of the plaintiff and there is the threat of aninfringement of that right held out and likely to be translated into action through the instrumentality of the Court receiving the decree and certificate for execution against him. Where such executing Court is also the Court in which the suit is instituted there ought to be no difficulty on the ground of jurisdiction in the matter of obtaining the necessary relief of injunction from that very Court.

In cases other than those substantially falling within the scope of suits respecting immoveable property or suits for land, if the cause of action to sue for injunction has wholly or in part arisen within the jurisdiction of any Court that Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit under section 20 clause (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. I, therefore, hold that the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Amraoti, was competent to entertain the suit for injunction.

In this view I need not discuss at length the cases cited by the lower Courts and show how some of them are distinguishable or beside the point. I, however, note my express dissent from the observations in the case of Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (1), quoted by the Court of first instance in its judgment as they appear to me to be opposed to the very principle on which preventive reliefs can be granted by law Courts, in anticipation in order to avert a threatened injury. The order returning the plaint for presentation to proper Court is, therefore, liable to be set aside under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code as an erroneous decision involving a question of jurisdiction cf : Ganesh Prasad v. Rewa Bai (14).

The application is allowed and the order returning the plaint for presentation to proper

Court is set aside and the Court of first instance is directed to take the plaint on its file and to proceed with the suit and decide the same according to law. Counsel's fee Rs. 30. The applicant's costs of this and the lower Appellate Court will be paid by the non-applicant. Costs in the first Court will abide the result.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Suit for cancellation of mortgage—Want of mortgagor's title—Estoppel.

The priniciple of estoppel between the mortgagor and the mortgagee works in favour of and against both of them.

A mortgagee in possession is estopped from denying the title of his mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage, just in the same way as the mortgagor is estopped from varying his own authority to mortgage the property.

Therefore, a mortgagee after he has obtained possession of the mortgaged property in pursuance to the contract of mortgage cannot claim the relief of cancellation of the mortgage under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act on the ground that his mortgagor had no authority to mortgage the property.

Appeal against the decree of the First Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 16th March 1923.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellants.

Dr. J. N. Misra for Mr. Haidar Husain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th August 1920 one Muhammad Ashraf, the father of the defendants Ibad Ashraf and Hamid Ashraf appellants, executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the plaintiff respondent, Inayatullah. It is admitted in the plaint that in pursuance of this mortgage the mortgagee was put in possession of the property conveyed to him under the deed of mortgage and that on the date of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen he was in such possession. He brought this suit to have the instrument of mortgage cancelled. This relief was open to him to claim under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act if it were established that he had a title to such a relief. The Courts below have granted this relief to him. The accuracy of the decisions of those Courts is impugned in second appeal before me.

The judgments of the Courts below have digressed into several points which to my mind appear to be wholly immaterial for a right decision of the present suit. The plaintiff's case as disclosed in the plaint is a simple one. He says that the mortgage in question was executed, that he paid a part of the consideration to the mortgagor, that the mortgagor put him in possession of the mortgaged property, that mutation proceedings followed, that in the course of those proceedings he discovered that the mortgagor had previously to the mortgage in question executed a deed of waqf with regard to a large number of properties including the one which was mortgaged under the deed in question and that, therefore, the mortgagor had no title which he could transfer to the mortgagee under the said mortgage. On this cause of action he asks for the relief mentioned above. In his oral pleadings he also stated in a general way that the claim rested on the ground of fraud as well but no particulars of fraud were ever stated, and considering the findings of the lower Appellate Court the whole case with respect to fraud comes only to this that the mortgagor abstained from disclosing the existence of the waqf at the time when the contract of mortgage was completed between the parties. This by itself is no fraud whatsoever and, therefore, no relief can be granted on that basis. The case must, therefore, be decided with reference to the sole question as to whether the absence of title of the mortgagor as discovered by the mortgagee after he had obtained possession will entitle the latter to a decree for cancellation of the instrument of mortgage.

My answer to this question is in the negative. The mortgagee when put into possession by the mortgagor in pursuance of the contract of mortgage is estopped from denying the title of his mortgagor certainly during the continuance of the mortgage. That the mortgage still continues is admitted on the pleadings as I have already said. The principle of estoppel between mortgagor and mortgagee works in favour of and against both of them. The mortgagor is estopped from denying his own authority to mortgage the property. On the other hand, the mortgagee is estopped from denying the authority of the mortgagor to make the mortgage. See the decision in the case of Hillayas Subbaya Hedge v. Narayanappa Timmaya (1).

It is satisfactory to note that the conclusion at which I have arrived is eminently equitable also in the circumstances of this case. The Court below has found that the deed of waqf contained provisions for redeeming the mortgage existing on the trust property anterior to the date of the plaintiff's mortgage. The creator of the trust is a trustee also. He, therefore, had authority to exercise the powers vested in him as a trustee to carry out the provisions of the deed of waqf mentioned above and in the mortgage in question express obligation was laid on the mortgagee to pay off the prior mortgages. Indeed the whole of the mortgage money except a very small portion of it was left with the mortgagee for that purpose. So far, therefore, as the mortgagee is concerned, he has suffered no harm nor is there an apprehension of any injury in future. The present defendants are trustees under the waqf in succession to their father. In the present litigation they have expressed their willingness to abide by the mortgage in suit.

These being the facts it is not possible to comprehend the reasons which impelled the plaintiff to rush into Court. If he is disturbed in possession of the mortgaged property by a previous mortgagee he can save the situation by paying him off and this will be merely discharging the obligation which he took upon him under the mortgage in dispute.

The result is that I allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts below but without any order as to costs in this Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 73—Surplus mortgage-money—Interest, award of—Interest by way of damages.

In the absence of a stipulation to that effect a mortgagor who sues for redemption is not entitled to any interest prior to the institution of the suit on the surplus mortgage-money that is found with the mortgagee after the satisfaction of the mortgage. Nor can such interest be allowed by way of damages. The mortgagor, however, can recover interest as from the date of the suit, for the institution of the suit is really a notice to the mortgagee calling upon him to hand over the surplus money.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was originally instituted by Saiyid Mahdi Hasan, respondent No. 1, for the redemption of a mortgaged property and for the recovery of the surplus usufruct realized by the mortgagee from the plaintiff. In the course of the trial other plaintiffs were added mainly because the original plaintiff's property had been transferred to them.

The original mortgagor was one Muhammad Zahur Hasan, whose son is the plaintiff No. 1, and whose widow was the defendant No. 5. The original mortgagee was one Muhammad Sadiq, whose descendants are the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The other defendants are subsequent transferees.

The original mortgage was made for the sum of Rs. 5,500. It appears that at the date of the mortgage, which is the 17th of February 1895, the properties mortgaged, nine in number, were all held by prior mortgagees. It was agreed that the mortgagee Mahammad Sadiq should advance a sum of Rs. 900 in cash and should keep the balance of the consideration money to redeem the prior mortgages. It was also argeed that till the mortgages were redeemed the mortgagee Muhummad Sadiq should recover from the prior mortgagees sums of money payable by them to the mortgagor on account of certain stipulations contained in the mortgage-deeds. It appears that the prior mortgages were in the shape of zar-i-peshgi leases, by which the mortgagees advanced a sum of money and agreed to take a part of the usufruct of the property to compensate them for the money advanced and to pay to the mortgagor a portion of the usufruct. It was this portion that was orginally payable to the mortgagor and was made payable to Muhammad Sadiq.

There is no longer any dispute about the original plaintiff's right to redeem. The lower Court has decreed the suit, and has granted a decree for Rs. 13,000 and odd to the plaintiffs as surplus usufruct payable to the mortgagor. A substantial portion of this amount consists of interest.

It appears that the mortgagor died shortly after the mortgage, and his son Mahdi Hasan put as much obstruction as possible in the way of Muhammad Sadiq in obtaining possession. Muhammad Sadiq had to bring several suits, which will be mentioned in detail where necessary, and ultimately he succeeded in receiving a portion of the profits (zar-i-nankar) payable to the mortgagor, and later on, he succeeded in redeeming three of the nine properties and in obtaining possession thereof. It is in respect of these three villages, namely, Imamnagar, Rahmatpur and Bhainsara, that the present suit has been brought.

Only two points have been argued before us. It has been urged for the defendant No. 1 (appellant) Ismail Hasan that, the lower Court was not justified in awarding interest on the surplus amount, and that it was wrong in finding what was the money actually received by the mortgagee.

The account which was prepared in the Court below is printed at pages 28 and 29 of the printed record. It will be noticed that at page 29 in column one are the items which the mortgagee is supposed to have received since the execution of the mortgage. We have been told that the mortgagee never received anything out of the property, for years prior to 1307 Fasli, and that in 1307F and in subsequent years running up to 1311 Fasli the mortgagee received only a sum of Rs 176 a year. It is further stated that in the year 1312F the mortgagee received only a sum of Rs. 376. The learned Subordinate Judge in the account has allowed for the years 1302, 1303 and 1306F. different items as having been received by the mortgagee; and for subsequent years he has allowed a much larger amount than is admitted by the mortgagee.

There is not much of oral evidence in the case. The judgment at page 59 of the printed record will show that the plaintiff Mahdi Hasan started denying the title of the mortgagee Muhammad Sadiq almost immediately after his father died. Muhammad Sadiq had accordingly to bring a suit against Madhi Hasan to obtain a declaration that his mortgage was a valid transaction. In the course of the trial Mahdi Hasan was examined, and his deposition is to be found printed at page 55 of the record. In it he clearly stated that he instituted a suit against the prior mortgagee Muhammad Ali, and he received the money which was payable by him. Again, at page 56 he said that all the properties which should have been in the possession of the mortgagee were really in his possession and he was realizing all the profits which were to go to Muhammad Sadiq by agreement. It is clear, therefore, that on the date of the deposition, namely, 26th September 1898, Mehdi Hasan was in possession of all the properties, and the mortgagee Muhammad Sadiq had not succeeded at this date in realizing anything. September 1898 would correspond to 1306 Fasli (agricultural year). Thus it is clear that the first three items shown at page 29 of the printed record as the receipts by the mortgagee must go.

It appears that there was further litigation with the plaintiff. But this did not prevent the mortgagee Muhammed Sadiq from suing the previous mortgagees for redemption and for recovery of zar-i-Nankar or profit money which was to go to him under the terms of the lease of 1895. The decree at page 79 of the printed record shows that Muhammad Sadiq sued the prior mortgagees and obtained a decree for arrears of profits at the rate of Rs. 322-8 (which sum is admittedly the profits recoverable from the villages Rahmatpur and Bhainsara) for the years Rabi 1308 to Kharif 1311 F. Thus for at least a part of 1308 to a part of 1311 F. the mortgagee succeeded in realizing in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the money payable to him. It follows that for the years 1308 to 1311 he must be credited with the receipt of the profits as shown in the account framed by the Court below. It is admitted by the mortgagee that for the years 1307 to 1311 he received a sum of Rs. 176 from the village of Imamnagar. This sum, with Rs. 46, the amount of cess payable by Muhammad Sadiq would make up the profits from Imamnagar which is about Rs. 214 a year. If we add this sum to the sum decreed, the full amount debited to him for the years 1308 to 1311 would be debitable against him. There remains the year 1307. There is nothing to show that the mortgagee received anything from the property beyond the sum of Rs. 176 as admitted by him. It was, indeed, the duty of the mortgagor to put the mortgagee in possession, but he having failed to perform his duty the mortgagor cannot debit the mortgagee with any amount which is not shown to have been actually received by him. As regards the year 1312, it appears that the mortgagee obtained possession of the villages Rahmatpur and Bhainsara in the year 1904 A. D., that is to say, he actually got possession after the redemption of the property. It is admitted by the parties that the actual profits of the three villages are to be taken at the figure Rs. 950. Thus the lower Court was right in debiting the morgagee with the sum of Rs. 950 from 1312 onwards.

The next question is one of interest. The question is whether a mortgagor who sues for redemption is entitled to any interest on the surplus mortgage-money that is found with the mortgagee, after the satisfaction of his mortgage. It is admitted (and we have gone through the deed itself) that there is no express stipulation as to payment of any interest on the surplus mortgage-money. There is a stipulation that interest at 12 per cent. per annum would be paid on the money advanced by the mortgagee. The law on the subject would be found in section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). Sections 72 and 76 lay down the duties of the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property, and as to how he is to keep accounts. Under section 72 a mortgagee is given the right to spend money for the preservation of the mortgaged property, for making his own title good against the mortgagor and so forth, and is permitted to charge interest on the money so expended at the rate of nine per cent. per annum where no interest is fixed to be payable on the principal amount. In section 76, the mortgagee is directed as to how he is to keep accounts, and it is mentioned that as against the receipts from the mortgaged property he is to deduct the expenses mentioned in clauses (c) and (d) and the interest thereon. Further on, it is stated that the surplus, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagor. It is not mentioned that the surplus is to be paid with interest. It does not seem likely that the framers of the Code overlooked the fact that interest might be payable. They made an express mention of the term 'interest' in section 72 and also in section 76 itself. So it is not probable that the non-mention of the word 'interest' in connection with surplus usufruct was due to any oversight. Coming to cases decided in India, we find that the Bombay High Court in the case of Janoji

v. Janoji (1) awarded interest on the surplus profits only from the date of the institution of the suit. This was a suit decided in accordance with English practice and Setons on decrees was quoted. In the English case of Lake v. Bell (2), interest was allowed at 4 per cent. from the date of the claim. In the case of Haji Abdul Rahman v. Haji Noor Mahomed (3), Mr. Justice Telang allowed interest from the date of the surplus money coming into the hands of the mortgagee. But it was an entirely different case. In that case the mortgagee exercised his private right of sale given him under the mortgage, and it was on the surplus amount that remained in his hands after the sale that the interest was allowed. This case is different in principle from the case reported in Janoji v. Janoji (1), referred to above. In deciding this case the learned Judge purported to follow an English case, namely, Charles v. Jones (4). In that case, too, it was on the surplus money that remained in the hands of the mortgagee after the exercise of the right of private sale that the interest was allowed. On a consideration of the language of the Transfer of Property Act and on the authorities quoted we are of opinion that no interest is payable on the surplus mortgage money till the date of the institution of the suit. The institution of the suit is really a notice to the mortgagee calling upon him to hand over the surplus money. From that date the mortgagor will be entitled to interest. Before leaving the point we may mention here that the mortgagor was being paid annually the sum of Rs. 333, and he never told the mortgagee that his money had been paid up out of the usufruct of the property and it was time that he handed over the property to him. It has not been urged before us that interest might be allowed on the surplus mortgage-money by way of damages. But we have considered the point and we think that it is not proper to allow interest by way of damages. Interest by way of damages can be allowed only under section 73 of the Contract Act. In most of the cases for redemption usually it is not till an account has been taken that it is discovered on what date there was a surplus in the hands of the mortgagee. Under section 73 of the Contract Act the party who suffers from a breach of contract is entitled to compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby. In the case of surplus profits coming into the hands of the mortgagee, it cannot be said that any contract has been broken especially where there is no express contract. Further, damages can be awarded only when they are not too remote. Only those damages which naturally arise in the usual course of things from such breach can be allowed. It is not in all cases where a sum of money due to one party is in the hands of another that interest may be allowed by way of damages. In a recent case decided by us we held that interest could ordinarily be allowed either on the Interest Act or where there is a stipulation. We have quoted authorities for our opinion. We have shown in that case that in every case interest cannot be claimed simply because some money is due. We, therefore, do not think it possible to award interest by way of damages.

The result is that the appeal succeeds to the amount of Rs. 6,278-1-0 interest and Rs. 1,701-12-0 principal amount. Deducting these two sums from the sum decreed by the Court below as surplus amount the plaintiff's would be entitled to the sum of Rs. 5,914-1-0. The appeal is allowed as stated above for the sum of Rs. 7,979-13-0 with proportionate costs to parties which will include counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

It appears that the appeal has been valued at the surplus amount plus a sum of Rs. 5,100, the valuation of the claim as made in the Court below. The total valuation, therefore, was at Rs. 18,000 and odd. The appellant challenged the right of the plaintiff to redeem. This part of the appeal was not pressed and has been disallowed. In calculating the proportionate amount of costs, the total amount of the value of the appeal will be taken to be Rs. 18,000 and odd.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 13—Consent—Signing of document—Document signed by blind man—Misrepresentation of contents of document—Non-est factum, plea of—Bona fide purchaser for value, position of.

The mere signing of a document does not necessarily imply consent. Thus if a blind man, or a man who cannot read, has a written contract falsely read over to him, the reader mis-reading to such an extent that the written contract is of a nature altogether different from the contract pretended to be read from the paper which the blind or illiterate man afterwards signs, or if the contents of the document are otherwise misrepresented to the person signing it, then the plea of non-est factum is available to him and the signature so obtained is of no force.

The rule does not apply to a man who can read but who forbears to read the document. But the question is important only when it is raised between two innocent parties, for unless the document is wholly void, as it would be if the plea of non-est factum succeeds, an innocent party giving consideration cannot be deprived of an interest which he has taken under the deed; but where the question arises between a party deceiving and a party deceived it is immaterial whether the deed is void or voidable; and, even if the party deceived fails in his plea of non-est factum, that is to say, that there was no consent on his part within the meaning of the term as defined in the Contract Act, it is still open to him to prove that there was a mis-representation and to ask the Court to relieve him from the consequences of the transaction.'

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—In my opinion there is no ground for interfering with the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. The short question which we have to decide in this case is whether in the circumstances of the case the plaintiff is entitled to take up the position that his rights are unaffected by the deed of release executed by him on the 10th August 1918 and the consent decree of the 12th August 1919 to which he was a party. The plaintiff is a blind man, aged 70. He was undoubtedly entitled to a half share in the joint family properties and he instituted a suit sometime in 1917 to have his share partitioned by metes and bounds. His case in the plaint was that the family had separated many years ago but that the properties which were the subject-matter of the litigation had never been partitioned by metes and bounds. Being a blind man and having no one to look after his interests he entrusted his case to one Harihar Prasad Singh who has been cited as defendant second party in this litigation and who is the father-in-law of one of his daughters. The plaintiff's case is that sometime in July 1918 Harihar Prasad suggested a compromise on the terms that he (the plaintiff) should execute a thika-patta in respect of the landed property in favour of the defendants. The plaintiff says that he readily consented to the suggestion made by Harihar Prasad Singh and executed a document on the 10th August 1918 which he believed to be a thika-patta, but which in fact was a deed of release. This was followed by the consent decree in the partition suit on the 12th August and according to the plaintiff he never agreed to the terms on which the case was settled although he was always ready and willing to settle, and thought that he did settle the case, on the terms that he had agreed to give a thika-patta of his properties to the defendants. He instituted the present suit on the 10th February 1919 in substance to have it declared that the deed of release and the consent decree are not binding upon him. The defendant's case is that the terms of settlement as contained in the consent decree were in fact consented to by the plaintiff and that those terms were arranged by certain punches in Dhobgama to whom the matter was referred by the parties.

As I have said the plaintiff is a blind man aged 70 years having no one to look after him except a wife and a widowed daughter. The critical question in the case is did the plaintiff consent to relinquish his interest in the family property for a mere annuity. The term "consent" has been defined as follows in the Indian Contract Act—"Two or more persons are said to consent when they agree upon the same thing in the same sense." In England a plea of non-est factum is open to a party when there is a mis-representation as to the character of the document and the party deceived proves that his mind was directed to one thing and what he put his hand to was a document of an altogether different character. Whether the statement of the law in Foster v. Mackinnon (1), would be wholly supported to-day is a matter of some doubt. A distinction has been drawn in the more modern cases between misrepresentation as to the character of a document and misrepresentation as to the contents of a document and it seems to be the modern view that when there is a misrepresentation as to the contents of a document, but not as to the character of the document the plea of non est factum is not available to the party deceived, unless—and this is very important,—he is blind or illiterate. The point is put in this form in Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 7 page 355. The mere signing of a contract does not necessarily imply consent. Thus, if a blind man, or a man who cannot read, or one who for some reason (not involving negligence) forbears to read, has a written contract falsely read over to him, the reader misreading to such a degree that the written contract is of a nature altogether different from the contract pretended to be read from the paper which the blind or illiterate man afterwards signs, or if the contents of the document are otherwise misrepresented to the person signing, then, at any rate if there is no negligence, the signature so obtained is of no ...ce." In the passage quoted the rule appears to be confined first to a blind man, secondly, to a man who cannot read; and, thirdly, to a man who for some reason forbears to read. This was undoubtedly the view established in Foster v. Mackinnon (1), but so far as I understand the more modern decision is Howatson v. Webb (2), the rule does not apply to a man who can read but who forbears to read the document. But the question is important only when it is raised between two innocent parties, for unless the document is wholly void, as it would be if the plea of non-est factum succeeds, an innocent party giving consideration cannot be deprived of an interest which he has taken under the deed; but where the question arises between a party deceiving and a party deceived it is immaterial whether the deed is void or voidable; and, even if the party deceived fails in his plea of non-est factum, that is to say, that there was no consent on his part within the meaning of the term as defined in the Indian Contract Act, it is still open to him to prove that there was a mis-representation and to ask the Court to relieve him from the consequences of the transaction.

The question whether there was a consent on the part of the plaintiff to the terms of the deed of release and of the consent decree is a question of fact and the Subordinate Judge has accepted the evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiff. The decision of the Trial Court on a question of fact is entitled to great weight and having anxiously considered all the evidence for myself I am unable to say that the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived is not supported by the evidence in the record.

The case of the defendants is that the dispute between the parties was settled at the instance of punches at Dhobgama. Rambalak Singh one of the defendants in his evidence gave the names of the punches. He said that Rownak Singh, Adhiram Singh and Chaturi Singh were the punches and he added that there were no other punches. Now, none of these gentlemen has been examined on behalf of the defendants to support their case. It has, however, been suggested by Rambalak Singh that they have been won over by the plaintiff. The suggestion is in these words: "As far as I can remember all of them were summoned as witnesses They declined to come here as witnesses on our side, when they heard of the talk of beeh." We are informed that the term " beeh " refers to the sale of an interest in his share by the plaintiff Bhagwat Singh to Biseswar Lal. The suggestion is that Biseswar Lal who has purchased an interest in the share of Bhagwat Singh in the family properties is such an influential man in the village that he persuaded the punches not to give evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. But suggestion is not proof ; and on the evidence it is impossible to come to the conclusion that these three gentlemen Rowaak Singh, Adhiram Singh and Chaturi Singh have been won over by the plaintiff. The fact remains that none of the punches named as such by Rambalak Singh, the defendant, has come to the witness-box on behalf of the defendant. But one Kuldip later on came to the witness-box and said that he was one of the punches in the case. Kuldip undoubtedly is a resident of Dhobgama. Having regard to the evidence of Rambalak it is quite impossible to accept Kuldip as a truthful witness and we cannot regard Kuldip as one of the punches to whom, according to the case of the defendant, the dispute between the parties was referred. That being so, it is certainly a matter of comment that not a single witness from Dhobgama has come to support the case of the defendants. On the other hand the plaintiff has examined numerous witnesses from Dhobgama who swear that the case was in fact settled between the parties. They give the terms of the settlement and according to them the case was settled on the terms that the plaintiff would give a thika-patta of his interest in the joint family properties to the defendants. As I have said the question is a question of fact, and the learned Subordinate Judge who undoubtedly was in a far better position than this Court to arrive at the truth, accepted the plaintiff's case on this point. The oral evidence in my opinion did not support the case of the defendants, whereas numerous witnesses were called by the plaintiff who satisfactorily established the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad appearing on behalf of the defendants asked us to consider the terms of the deed of release and invited us to hold that the terms were such as a man in the plaintiff's position would readily agree to. Under the deed of release the plaintiff took an annuity of Rs. 400 per year ; an orchard of graft mangoes 1 bigha 10 kathas in area ; an orchard of seedling mango trees 10 kahtas in area and 6 kahtas of zerait land. The deed provided that the annuity of Rs. 400 would be reduced to Rs. 300 on the death of the annuitant's wife if she should predecease him ; and on his death, if he should predecease her, an annuity of Rs. 250 would be made to the widow. The deed also provided that upon the death of husband and wife Rs. 200 would be paid to each of the three daughters. Lastly it was provided that all debts due on bonds should be paid by the defendants. The evidence establishes that there was a sum of Rs. 2,600 due on a bond at the date of the transaction in suit.

Now these are the terms of the deed of release and in order to consider whether the terms are such as the plaintiff would readily agree to, we have to see what was the value of the plaintiff's share in the joint family properties. For the purpose of Court-fee the plaintiff valued his share at Rs. 10,000 but the learned Subordinate Judge arrived at the conclusion on the admission of one of the defendants that the nett income available to the plaintiffs was Rs. 700 a year. He based his conclusion on the evidence of Rambalak Singh, one of the defendants, who said as follows :— " Our zerait land has increased since the survey, to the extent of about 40 bighas. We had 70 to 80 bighas of Serait at the time of survey. We got orchards to the extent of 7 to 8 bighas. We have orchards of about 2 bighas at Dhobgama. Our cash income was about Rs. 800 at the time of survey. But it is about Rs. 500. We are to pay about Rs. 125 as revenue and Rs. 125 as cesses. The zerait lands are near about " Dhobgama." On this evidence the learned Subordinate Judge says as follows : " It is, therefore, clear that their total income from zerait and nagdi lands would be 16 times the amount of cesses i. e, about Rs. 2,000. Half the amount belongs to the plaintiff. In his share, the income would be about Rs. 1,000 a year. Making all deductions, his net income would not fall much short of Rs. 600 a year, even according to the admission of Rambalak (defendant's witness No. 3). It is, therefore, highly unlikely that he would forego his half share in these properties, yielding an annual income of about Rs. 1,000 or a net income of about Rs. 700 (in his half share) for a life annuity of Rs. 400 a year, which has been made a charge on the half share of on of the tauzis only." Now undoubtedly the cess payable forms a basis for calculating the value of the property, and it cannot be doubted that the learned Subordinate Judge with his local knowledge was in a position to arrive at a correct conclusion on this question. Mr. Sultan Ahmad has contended before us that there was no issue, and that the parties did not really give any evidence on this point. In my opinion the question of the value of the plaintiff's share was not a matter which it was for the plaintiff to put in issue. The plaintiff was called upon to prove that his mind did not accompany his signature. As a reply to that case the defendants assert that the terms in the deed of release were such as a man in the position of the plaintiff would readily agree to. It was,therefore, necessary for the defendants to establish that the terms were proper terms upon which the plaintiff might agree to settle the dispute between him and the defendants. In my opinion it was for the defendants to prove the value of the plaintiff's share in the property. That being so, it is only necessary to refer to the deed of release to see that this old man of 70 gave up his interest in the joint family properties which would yield him an income of Rs. 700 per year for an annuity of Rs. 400. As I have said, he was an old man of 70 and it is impossible to say how long he would live to enjoy this annuity. Under the terms the daughters are not provided for; they are only entitled to receive Rs. 200 each, not forthwith, but upon the death of both the parents. In my opinion it is impossible to say that the terms offered by the defendants to the plaintiff were such as would be readily accepted by him.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad has strongly relied upon the evidence of Mathura Prasad, the Sub-Registrar, and Nath Prasad and Kamaluddin, pleaders. It is suggested that if the plaintiff did not in fact put his signature to the deed of release with knowledge of its terms he would not have been taken first to the Sub-Registrar and then to the pleaders in the case. The Sub-Registrar in his evidence says as follows: "My practice was to enquire about the nature of the document from the executants. When the nature and the description of the documents stated by them were found to be correct then I used to register them." In cross-examination he admitted that he did not read the document nor did he get the entire document read over to him. Now, the Sub-Registrar was only speaking as to the practice of his office. He did not pretend to say what happened on the particular occasion on which the plaintiff went to his office to have the deed of release registered. But I am not very much troubled by the evidence of the Sub-Registrar. The plaintiff's own case is that he thought that he had executed a deed conveying the properties to the defendants for a term. The defendants' case is that he conveyed the properties to them for ever. That was the difference between the parties and I do not see that there was much risk of the difference being brought to his notice at the Registry Office. So far as the evidence of Nath Prasad is concerned he undoubtedly said that the plaintiff went to him. The plaintiff denies that he ever went to Nath Prasad. It is not necessary for me to express any opinion on the question whether Nath Prasad's evidence should be accepted on this point. It is sufficient to point out that Nath Prasad admits that he did not explain to the plaintiff the terms of the sulehnama. He merely asked the plaintiff whether he had entered into a compromise and on the plaintiff's giving an answer in the affirmative he took the thumb impression of the plaintiff on the sulehnama. This is not a very satisfactory state of affairs. Obviously Nath Prasad was engaged in the case for the purpose of putting his signature on the sulehnama. He appears to have done nothing else for the plaintiff. It is a remarkable feature in this case that the plaintiff's pleaders at no time had any opportunity of expressing their opinion on the terms of settlement. His pleaders were Babu Krishna Ballav Prasad, Babu Lachman Prasad and Babu Dharanidhar. Nath Prasad, the pleader, says that he asked Babu Krishna Ballav why he did not sign the compromise petition and that he said that there was a difference between him and Bhagwat about fees and that was the reason why he refused to sign. It is perfectly clear from the evidence that neither Babu Krishna Ballav, nor Babu Dharanidhar nor Babu Lachman Prasad who were the plaintiff's pleaders, had at any time an opportunity to express an opinion on the terms of settlement. The document was drafted by the defendant's pleader Kamaluddin. Nath Prasad was engaged only for the purpose of putting his signature to the compromise petition. Apart from that the plaintiff's pleaders had nothing whatever to do with the deed of release. It is impossible to overlook these circumstances when it is remembered that an old blind man of 70 was giving up all his interest in the joint family properties for an annuity of Rs. 400. So far as the evidence of Kamaluddin is concerned it is sufficient to say that he does not say that the plaintiff saw him at any time. There was undoubtedly some evidence that the document was read over and explained to the plaintiff, but although Kamaluddin and Nath Prasad, both pleaders, had something to do with the settlement it was not thought necessary that either of them should explain the document of settlement to the plaintiff. In these circumstances it is impossible to say that the document was actually read out to the plaintiff. In my opinion the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is right and ought to be affirmed.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 25—Guardianship of son—Father, position of—Custody of child.*

An order appointing a father guardian of his child under the Guardians and Wards Act is wholly ultra vires.

The fact that a child has never been in the actual custody of his father who is also not a certificated guardian cannot prevent the application of section 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act and deprive him of his right to the custody of the child.

Appeal from the order of the Officiating Additional District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 20th September 1923, in Miscellaneous Case No. 79 of 1923.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The appellant, Chhote Lal, is the husband of the respondent, Mt. Chandra Kuar. Two children were born of the union. The elder boy is with his father under an order of this Court. The younger one is with his mother Mt. Chandra Kuar. The child is now about 18 months old. Chhote Lal applied to the Additional Judge of Sitapur under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act for an order that the younger child be delivered into his custody. His application has been dismissed mainly on the ground that it was not maintainable under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

With this ground of decision I do not agree. Neither the fact that the child has never been actually in the custody of Chhote Lal nor does the fact that Chhote Lal has never been appointed guardian of the child by an order of the Court prevents the application of section 25 to this case. The first point is covered by the decision of Mr. (now Mr. Justice) Lindsay in the case of Mushaf Husain v. Muhmmad Jawad (1). I am content to follow it. As to the second point, it is equally clear that Chhote Lal being the natural guardian of his infant child cannot be placed in a worse position than a certificated guardian. In fact an order appointing a father guardian of his child under the Guardians and Wards Act would be wholly ultra vires. Chhote Lal could, therefore, seek the aid of the Court under section 25. This point is again supported by the decision mentioned above. The order of the learned Additional Judge, therefore, cannot be upheld on the first ground.

ABDUL RAHIM v. ABDUL RAHMAN

At the end of this judgment, the learned Judge observes "that it is to the interest of the minor that he should be left to live with his mother during his infancy." This would have been a perfectly valid ground to support the order under appeal if it had been arrived at on a consideration of the merits of the case but no enquiry was made at all. On the 18th September 1923 Chhote Lal filed his application. Two days later, that is, on the 20th September 1923, the learned Judge dismissed it. Thus Chhote Lal had no opportunity to substantiate his claim for the custody of the child. Whatever may be the fate of Chhote Lal's application at the end I do not think it was possible for the learned Judge to deprive Chhote Lal of the opportunity of proving his case.

I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case to that Court with the direction that it should be restored to its original number in the register and be proceeded with according to law. No order as to the costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 80, 100—Suit against public officer—Tortious act—Notice, whether necessary—Second appeal—Finding of fact, when can be disturbed—Precedents—Case distinguished, effect of.

For a suit against a public officer notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is equally necessary whether the act complained of was not in good or bad faith.

The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith ; it merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term "purport." The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the question at all.

Findings of fact must be accepted in second appeal unless it can be said that there was no evidence to support them or that they are based on some error of law.

The fact that a decided case was distinguished in a judgment in a subsequent case does not show that it was accepted as good law. If a case is distinguished it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to its correctness, and it is notorious that cases are sometimes distinguished on very slender grounds to avoid the responsibility of appearing to overrule them.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit against a Sub-Inspector of Police for damages for libel. The cause of action is thus stated in para. 2 of the plaint :

"The defendant taking undue advantage of his post as a Thanedar, through avarice, malice and enmity without any reasonable and sufficient ground and in order to cause loss to the plaintiff made some wrong entries on different occasions, without the knowledge and information of the plaintiff, and eventually after secretly obtaining the permission of the higher authorities dishonestly misrepresenting facts, entered the name of the plaintiff in the register of badmashes."

ABDUL RAHIM v. ABDUL RAHAMAN

The real name of the register thus described is a "History Sheet". These History Sheets are confiidential documents of the police department, of which not even the persons regarding whom they are prepared are supposed to be aware.

The learned Judge of the Court below seems to have been in some doubt whether the suit was one for libel, or partly for libel and partly for some unnamed kind of tort, but in this Court at any rate the latter contention has not been put forward. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case came to the conclusion that the defendant was not responsible for the plaintiff's name being entered in the history sheet, that the plaintiff had, therefore, no cause of action and that in any case the suit was barred by limitation under Article 24 of the Limitation Act. He was also of opinion that whatever part the defendant had taken in reference to the plaintiff had been taken in good faith. He omitted and this is the only flaw in his otherwise excellent judgment to consider an issue which lay at the threshhold of the proceedings and which had been raised before him, namely whether the suit must fail on the ground of want of proper notice as required by section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case came in appeal before an Officiating District Judge who reversed the Subordinate Judge's findings on all points. The judgment of the learned Officiating District Judge is not a satisfactory one, and if this were a first appeal some of his findings might be difficult to accept even on the face of the judgment itself. As, however, this is a second appeal his findings of fact must be accepted unless it can be said that there was no evidence to support them or that they are based on some error of law. His principal findings are that it was the defendant who caused the history sheet to be opened, and that in doing so the defendant acted out of malice and from improper motives. The second finding is not open to attack in second appeal. The first finding can be, and has been, attacked on the ground that it is based largely on a misreading of the pleadings. The learned Judge was under the impression that the defendant admitted in his written statement that the history sheet was opened at his instance. The defendant had in fact denied that he was in any way responsible for the entry. On the question of notice the learned Judge held that no notice was necessary because the defendant acted from improper motives, and on the question of limitation he held that Article 120 of the Limitation Act was applicable and that in any case so long as history sheet was in existence there was a continuing wrong which entitled the plaintiff to the benefit of section 23 of that Act. The history sheet was not closed till 1919 which was within one year of the filing of the suit.

The first question which we have to decide is whether the defendant was entitled to notice of the suit under section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff did in fact send a notice to the defendant, but it is admitted that he filed his suit without waiting for the expiration of the two months prescribed by the section. If, therefore, notice was necessary the suit must fail and should have been dismissed. The contention urged on behalf of the respondent in this court is that which was adopted by the Court below, namely that section 80 has no application unless the act complained of was done in good faith. On the language of the section the question seems to us to admit of no doubt. The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith; it merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his offiicial duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term "purport". The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the questions at all. Here the act complained of, namely causing of the plaintiff's name to be entered in the history sheet was an act which came within the scope of the ordinary functions of a police officer; indeed it was one which could only be done by an officer of police acting in that capacity; and there is no doubt that in reporting to his superiors with a view to the history sheet being opened he understood himself to be acting and would be understood by his superiors to be acting in the capacity of Sub-Inspector. We agree with the observation of the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court in Dakshina Ranjan Ghose v. Omar Chand Oswal (1) that if the Courts would be satisfied to give effect to the natural meaning of the language used in the sections of the Code a great deal of time would be saved.

This view of the sections stated above was taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case just cited, and was taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Samanthale Koti Reddi v. Pothuri Subbiah (2). It is suggested that the course of decisions in this Court is in favour of the opposite view, and reliance is specially placed on a decision of Mr. Justice Banerji in Muhammad Saddiq Ahmed v. Panna Lal (3). That case certainly lends some support to the view put forward by the respondent. The case was one against a Sub-Inspector, and the acts alleged against him were that he wrongfully searched the plaintiff's house, kept him for some hours in confinement at the thana, and publicly used abusive language to him. The first two of these acts were acts which came within the ordinary scope of a Sub-Inspector's duties; the third was one which was entirely outside them. That case was distinguished in two later cases to both of which the same learned Judge was a party, Bakhtawar Mal v. Abdul Latif (4) and Jugal Kishore v. Jugal Kishore (5). It was argued before us that because Mahammad Saddiq Ahmad's case was distinguished in the two later cases, it must be considered to have been accepted as good law. This argument cannot be maintained either as a general proposition or with reference to these particular decisions. If a case is distinguished it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to its correctness, and it is notorious that cases are sometimes distinguished on very slender grounds to avoid the responsibility of appearing to overrule them. In the very case with which we are dealing we find that in the case in Bakhtawar Mal v. Abdul Latif (4), Banerji, J. referred, with approval to a Calcutta case Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. Price (6) which is inconsistent with his own earlier dicision. In the Calcutta case the defendant was alleged to have acted maliciously and the main defence was that this dispensed with the necessity of notice. The learned Judges say—

> "We are not aware of any instance certainly no such case has been cited to us in which it has been held that the section does not apply to the case of a public officer charged with a tortious act done by him in his official capacity. The section does not seem to us to warrant the drawing of any distinction between acts of this kind done inadvertently or otherwise."

The most important of the latter cases for our purpose is however that of Bachcha Singh v. Jafar Beg (7). It was suggested that the decision in it is consistent with the rule laid down in Muhammad Saddiq Ahmad's case but we have examined the paper book and we find that this was not the case. The suit was brought jointly against a Sub-Inspector and a private person, the allegation being that the Sub-Inspector at the instigation of the defendant and knowing full well that Bachcha Singh was innocent of the effence charged against him, had implicated him in a criminal trial in place of Bachcha Ahir the real accused. The case was actually decreed by the District Judge against the other defendant on the ground that he had acted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause. It was dismissed against the Sub-Inspector solely on the question of want of notice, without determining whether the Sub-Inspector was actuated by malice or not. This decision was upheld by the High Court. The effect of the decision was therefore that the Sub-Inspector purported to act in his capacity of a public officer whether he was actuated by improper motives or not. It is unnecessary for us to consider the English cases which have been cited on this question because those decisions all proceed upon enactments the language of which is different from that of the section which we have to construe. It is further unnecessary to deal with other issues, though we think that Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9—Dismissal of suit for default—Restoration against some defendants only Restoration against others beyond time by Court, Validity of.

On a suit being dismissed for default against two defendants the plaintiff made an application for restoration against one of the two defendants, which was granted. Subsequently the Court on its own initiative and after the limitation for restoration had expired, restored the suit against the other defendant also :

Held, that the order was ultra vires.

Application for revision of the order of the Munsif, Fatehpur at Bara Banki, dated the 4th December 1923.

Mr. H. C. Dutt, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.— This is an application to set aside the order of a Munsif to restore the suit which was previously dismissed for default against the present applicant. In this suit there were two defendants. On the date fixed for hearing the plaintiff was absent and the suit was dismissed for default. Subsequently the plaintiff applied for restoration of the suit as against one of the defendants. His application was allowed and the suit was restored as against that defendant on payment of certain damages. No order was passed restoring the suit against the other defendant who is now the applicant before me and no application was made by the plaintiff for the restoration of the suit as against him. Subsequently on his own initiative the Munsif restored the suit against the present applicant.

This order was passed without any application on the part of the plaintiff and beyond the period of limitation. The order is entirely ultra vires and cannot be upheld. I allow the application with costs and set aside the order of the Munsif.

Mr. Kanga, for the Defendants.

Judgment—The first and the second plaintiffs who are share-holders in the Tata Industrial Bank, a company registered under the Indian Companies Act VII of 1913, file this suit against the Company by their directors for a declaration that the proceedings of a general meeting held on May 1, 1923, were improperly conducted and that certain appointments made at that meeting of directors and auditors are invalid. The plaint also prays for an injunction restraining the Company from having its accounts audited by the auditors appointed at the meeting and also for a mandatory injunction to take de novo proceedings which I suppose means to compel the Company to hold a fresh meeting.

A rule was granted restraining the Company pending the hearing of the suit from having its accounts audited by the appointed auditors. When the rule came on for hearing last Thursday plaintiff No. 1 wished to adjourn the rule to the hearing of the suit, and the defendant company on the other hand contended that the suit was not maintainable. The suit was, therefore, set down for trial of the preliminary issue as to whether it was maintainable, and the hearing of the rule was adjourned to the hearing of this preliminary issue.

The allegations in the plaint are briefly as follow :—

On April 14, 1923 a notice was given under section 79 of the Indian Companies Act of a general meeting to be held on May 1. In conformity with Article 68 of the Articles of Association the notice specified the business to be transacted at that meeting. That business was, as set out in paragraph 7 of the plaint, namely :—

"1. To receive the directors report and to adopt the audited accounts for the year ended March 31, 1923."

"2. To elect two directors in place of the two retiring directors," and

"3. To elect three other directors in place of three retiring directors who had been appointed under Article 99 of the Articles of Association," and

'4. To appoint auditors for the current year."

On April 21, 1923, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and another gave notice under Article 112 of the Articles of Association that they intended to propose two gentlemen for election to the office of directors of the Bank. They also requested that information of this notice should be sent to each and every share-holder. On April 30, 1923, the plaintiffs put in a list of fifty questions referring to the management of the Bank and giving notice that they meant to ask these questions at the meeting.

The general meeting was held on May 1, and one of the directors was elected to the chair. After the formal business of the meeting had been transacted the first plaintiff put the questions of which he gave notice in the interrogatory filed on April 20. The Chairman was unable to answer these questions without notice and the first plaintiff then moved for an adjournment. But the Chairman refused to put the motion for an adjournment.

The plaintiff then moved that the director's report of the account should be examined by the appointed committee of share-holders. This motion was put to vote and lost. The plaintiff complains that he was not allowed to speak on this motion.

When the motion was lost the plaintiff demanded a poll. This poll was taken and the motion was lost. The plaintiff's grievance on this point is that two scrutinizers of the votes taken at this poll were not authorised to act and the plaintiff's objection to the validity of the votes given was not heard.

After the motion was lost in the poll the business of the meeting was proceeded with, the accounts were passed, and new directors and auditors appointed. The plaintiffs complain that at this stage the meeting had ceased to function as a meeting and that the Chairman did not propose the two gentlmen whose names had been sent in by notice under Article 112 as candidates for the office of directorship.

This concludes the list of the plaintiff's grievances and except as to his right to speak which I shall deal with presently they amount to nothing but irregularities in the procedure at the meeting held on May 1.

Irregularities are not a matter for the Court but for a majority of the company to deal with. The Courts will interfere only if the rights of the share-holders are infringed; or if a case of fraud, or ultra vires action is made out. Otherwise the Court does not interfere to correct an irregularity or to do that which the majority of the company have the power to do. This rule is well established in Foss v. Harbottle (1) and Macdougall v. Gardiner (2) and indeed officious interference by the Court in such matters would paralyse the working of all joint stock companies.

However, to take the plaintiff's grievance seriatim, there was in the first place no occasion for the Secretary of the company to give notice of the candidature of the plaintiff's nominees. The notice was sent by the plaintiff under article 112 of the Articles of Association and such notice is under that article a condition precedent to the candidate named being eligible for election. But the election of the candidates so proposed can be proceeded with at the meeting without special notice to the share-holders. Notice had been given under article 68 that the business has to be transacted at the meeting of the company for the election of directors in succession to the five who had vacated their seats. Now the total number of directors sanctioned for the company is fifteen and there were at that time ten directors out of fifteen who were actually holding the office. The notice issued by the company stated that the business to be transacted at the meeting was by election of five new directors to take the places of five of these ten who were retiring. When the Secretary received the plaintiff's notice of April 21, proposing two gentlemen as candidates he would naturally interpret the notice to mean that these two gentlemen were candidates for election in the places of the five retiring directors and there is no doubt that that was the reason why no special notice of these candidature was given to the share-holders. But the plaintiff says that what he meant by that notice of April 21 was to propose these two gentlemen as candidates not in the places of any five of the directors who were retiring but in the places of the five posts of the directors which had never been filled up. That does not appear clear from the plaintiff's notice. Even if that had been the intention there seems no necessity to give any particular information to the directors because article 109 of the Articles of Association clearly distinguishes two classes of vacancies. Article 109 is as follows:

"The company at any general meeting at which any directors retire in manner aforesaid shall fill up the vacated office by electing a like number of persons to be directors; and without notice in that behalf may fill up any other vacancies; provided, etc."

It is clear, therefore, that this article makes a distinction between vacancies which occur by reason of the retirement of the directors actually holding office and other vacancies. Other vacancies could occur in no other way than as in this case, that is, the vacancies of the five directorships which had never been filled up. Therefore, it was competent to the plaintiff at the meeting to propose the election of his two nominees, and article 109 makes it clear that he might have done so without special notice being given on that behalf.

Then as to the second grievance, if the Chairman was unable to answer the questions put by the plaintiff, it was for the majority of the share-holders present to consider whether the accounts should be passed and the directors' report confirmed in the absence of the information which those questions were designed to elicit. The majority could have secured this object by an adjournment. It is true that the plaintiff did ask for an adjournment and then the Chairman refused to put the motion for the adjournment to the meeting. Now it is clear under the Articles of Association that the Chairman has a discretion whether to adjourn or not. Article 77 says:—

(1) (1843) 2 Hare 461; 62 R. R. 185; 67 E. R. 189.
(2) (1875) I Ch. D. 13; 45 L. J. Ch. 27.

"The Chairman, with the consent of the meeting, may adjourn any meeting from time to time and from place to place in Bombay, but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place."

The Chairman, therefore, has a discretion to adjourn and he can exercise that discretion only with the consent of the meeting. Even if the meeting desired an adjournment the article does not make it compulsory on the Chairman to adjourn. An article similar to article 77 was so construed in the case of Salisbury Gold Mining Co. v. Hathorn (3). But if the Chairman had no intention of adjourning the meeting it would be futile for him to put the motion for an adjournment and then refuse to act upon it. But it is evident that a majority of the company did not desire to adjourn because the same matter was put to the vote in the guise of a motion made by the plaintiff for the appointment of a committee of share-holders with power to examine the accounts and to elicit answers to all the questions framed in the plaintiff's interrogatory. If this motion had been passed the desired adjournment would have been secured. But when that motion was put to the vote it was lost on a show of hands. The plaintiff's complaint on this point is that he was not allowed to speak on this motion. But the plaint paragraph 13 says: "Thereupon the plaintiff No. 1 moved his amendment." Then paragraph 14 sets out: "After the aforesaid amendment was duly seconded and handed over to the Chairman, the plaintiff No. 1 wanted to speak on his said amendment but the Chairman deliberately ruled him out of order." It is thus clear from the plaint that the plaintiff had an opportunity of speaking and he did speak to his motion at the time when he moved it. A share-holder is not entitled to speak as much as he pleases but has a right to be heard in reasonable terms for a reasonable time. That is decided in Wall v. London and Northern Assets Corporation (4). On this point Lindley, M. R., commenting on the dictum of Lord Eldon, said:—

"But Lord Eldon does not mean that a minority who are bent on obstructing business and resolved on talking for ever should not be put down. He means that the majority are not to be tyrannical. After hearing what is to be said, they might say, 'We have heard enough. We are not bound to listen till every body is tired of talking and has sat down."

So here the Chairman heard the plaintiff when he moved the amendment and it is obvious from the admission in the plaint that the plaintiff moved his amendment that the plaintiff had a fair hearing. After the amendment was lost on the show of hands, the plaintiff No. 1 demanded a poll and it was taken, and the motion was again negatived. But as to the poll the plaintiff objects that the poll was illegal because the scrutiny of the poll should have been taken by the Chairman himself. The plaint, paragraph 20, clause 10, says:—"That the Chairman of the meeting failed in his duty to act as a scrutineer at the taking of the poll." No doubt under articles 93 and 94 the Chairman takes the poll and his decision as to the validity of every vote given is conclusive. But it does not follow that the Chairman cannot employ an agent for scrutinising the poll or that he cannot employ a clerk to count the number of votes so taken. I construe articles 93 and 94 which direct the Chairman to take the poll as giving the Chairman authority to delegate the ministerial function of scrutinising the votes and totalling them to others besides himself. Therefore, the fact that the poll was not scrutinised by the two gentlemen seated at the Chairman's table and under Chairman's directions does not make the poll invalid.

The plaintiff's next grievance is that after the business of the meeting was transacted the meeting had ceased to function as an ordinary meeting. But this is mere verbiage. The plaintiff admits that the Chairman was at the meeting, share-holders were at the meetting and he even admits that some share-holders voted when he says in his plaint that several share-holders abstained from voting.

His last grievance is that the Chairman failed in his duty to propose election of the plaintiff's nominees to the office of directors.

(3) (1897) A. C. 268; 66 L. J. P. C. 62; 76 L. T. 212; 45 W. R. 591.

I am not aware that this is the function of the Chairman. If the plaintiff had proposed a list of certain nominees for the office of directorship, it was quite open to him to propose that election at that meeting and the plaint does not say that he did so or that he was prevented from doing so.

On the whole the averments made in the plaint do not import any such illegality as to justify the interference of the Court or to constitute a cause of action for a suit. I, therefore, decide the first issue in the negative, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit.

The rule fails with the suit but as to this I would observe that it is curious that the plaintiff No. 1 has not asked for an injunction restraining the directors appointed at the meeting from officiating. He has taken out a trumpery rule merely to prevent the auditing of accounts by auditors nominated at the meeting. It is impossible to imagine that this rule can be a bona fide one or there can be any good ground for these auditors for not acting. This rule seems to me to be damning revelation as to the real character of the suit.

I accordingly dismiss the suit with costs and discharge the rule with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in O. S. No. 9 of 1920.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and A. Satyanarayana, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the 1st defendant is the appellant before us. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that the property which was the subject of the suit did not belong to the 1st defendant, but belonged to the 2nd defendant and was, therefore, liable to be attached by the plaintiff in execution of a decree obtained by him against the 2nd defendant. The 1st defendant is the wife of the 2nd defendant. She claims the property under a will of her mother-in-law to whom it was conveyed by a sale-deed Ex. VII, dated 23rd February 1914 by the second defendant's father Venkataratnam. It is the case of all the parties that the property originally belonged to Venkataratnam's maternal grand-father and devolved on him as daughter's son, Vide Ex. XIX.

The first point argued by the appellant before us is that when the 2nd defendant was adopted by his father there was an agreement according to which the adopted son should not share with the father in the properties the latter obtained from his maternal grandfather. This agreement was found against by the Court below. We agree with this finding. The adoption must have taken place many years ago and certainly long before the Jaggampett case was reported. And an agreement between the adoptive father and adopted son that the adopted son should not be co-parcener in the property obtained by the father from his maternal grandfather was inconceivable at the time. The only evidence adduced in support of the agreement is that of P. W. 1. He is the father of the 1st defendant and, therefore, interested. He admits there is nothing in writing about the conditions before adoption. The only other circumstance relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellant in support of the agreement is that the property was enjoyed by the father alone. But when the facts are examined, this statement really has no significance. The father and son were joint up to 1912 and during their jointness naturally it was the father that managed the property. Disputes arose between the father and the son and they became divided in status in that year and in 1914 the father conveyed the property to his wife under the sale-deed EX. VII. So all that is left to us to form a material for inferring any agreement at the date of adoption is merely one year's enjoyment. This contention of the appellant must, therefore, be disallowed.

The second point argued by the appellant is that the sale-deed, EX. VII, is binding on the 2nd defendant. We do not see how this contention can be supported. It is a sale-deed by the father after the separation in status between him and his son, and apart from any question of consideration it cannot bind the son to the extent of the son's share.

The third point argued for the appellant is that the property is not joint family property in the hands of Venkataratnam in the sense that the 2nd defendant has a right in it as a co-parcener by adoption (adoption corresponds to birth here) though it may be ancestral property and liable to the incidents of survivorship between Venkataratnam and his brother, if any, according to the decision of the Privy Council in Venkayamma Garu v. Venkataramayyamma Bahadur Garu (1). This point has been decided against the appellant in Vythinatha Aiyar v. Yeggianarayana Aiyar (2) where the effect of Venkayamma Garu v. Venkataramanayyamma Bahadur Garu (1) was considered. The point was raised again and decided by another Bench of this Court in Karri Ramayya v. Vellori Jagannadham (3). The learned Vakil for the appellant in that case relied on Jamna Prasad v. Ram Portap (4) where a conclusion different from that in Vythinatha Aiyar v. Yeggianarayana Aiyar (2) was arrived at, and suggested a reference to a Full Bench. But their Lordships, Coutts Trotter and Spencer, JJ., on a consideration of the then authorities including the Privy Council decision reported in Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (5) a case arising under the Punjab Customary Law, held that the matter was settled and did not refer the case to a Full Bench. The only additional authority that is now brought to our notice by the learned Vakil for the appellant is the decision in Bishwanath Prasad Sahu v. Gangadhar Prasad (6). Practically it adopts the same reasoning as Jamna Prasad v. Ram Partab (4) and there is no other reasoning. I think we must follow the view adopted in Karri Ramayya v. Vellori Jagannadham (3), and Vythinatha Aiyar v. Aiyar Yeggianarayana Aiyar (2) based as they are on a full consideration of the effect of the decision in Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramayyamma Bahadur Garu (1) with the principles laid down in Jogeshwar Narain Deo v. Ramachandra Dutt (7), and Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimulu Maistri (8) and the Full Bench decision in Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaran Narayanan Chetty (9).

Limitation (Act IX of 1908), Art. 97, applicability of —Consideration, failure of—Dispossession from portion of purchased property.

By virtue of a compromise decree plaintiffs were declared owners of certain property on payment of a sum of money. Having paid the money they obtained possession of the property. Subsequently on being dispossessed from a portion of the property, they sued for recovery of the entire consideration money.

Held*, the case was not one of failure of consideration but one of mere inadequacy of consideration and Article 97 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act was not applicable.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 6th October 1922 setting aside the decree of the Munsif, Rae Bareli, dated the 19th July 1922.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Wasi Hasan and Kalbi-abbas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal in a suit for the recovery of Rs. 677-6-0 from the defendant. The suit succeeded in the Court of first instance but was dismissed on appeal by the learned District Judge of Rae Bareli. The ground of the claim as argued before me, is that under a compromise which was incorporated in a decree of Court the plaintiffs were to become the owners of certain parcels of property on payment of a sum of money to the defendant, that they paid this money but that on the 24th July 1919 they were dispossessed and that consequently they are entitled to recover the money they paid for the property in suit as the existing consideration failed within the meaning of Article 97 of the Indian Limitation Act. The lower Appellate Court has held that the suit is barred under the article just now mentioned, the cause of action having arisen long before three years of the institution of the suit.

The whole case was argued before me with reference to the point that the consideration failed when the plaintiffs were dispossessed and the suit was within time from that date. If the date of dispossession is the date from which the period of limitation will begin to run against the plaintiffs for the purpose of Article 97 of the Indian Limitation Act we are all agreed that the suit will be in time but, as I am going to state shortly, the decision of this point has become wholly immaterial.

During the course of the arguments of the respondent's pleader, it appeared that the plaintiffs are still in possession of two parcels of the property which were conveyed to them under the compromise mentioned above. This fact is admitted in paragraph 14 of the plaint. In paragraph 24 of the written statement it was set up as a point in defence that the plaintiffs being in possession of a portion of the property dealt with by the compromise they were not entitled to bring a suit for the entire consideration. In my opinion, the fact, that the plaintiffs are in possession of some portion of the property transferred to them by the defendant under the compromise mentioned above goes to the root of their title to recover the purchase-money on the ground of failure of the existing consideration. If a part of the consideration is in the hands of the plaintiffs as they admit it is, it is not a case of failure of consideration. It merely becomes a cast of inadequacy of consideration. On this ground the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. S. Subhramania Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Rajagopalachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The original suit was by plaintiff for a declaration that the plaint nanja land belongs to her and for permanent injunction restraining defendants from interfering with her enjoyment. It was admitted that the melwaram in the land belongs to plaintiff. 1st defendant claimed that he owns the kudivaram. The first Court decreed the suit and the lower Appellate Court concurred. Defendants appeal.

The first point taken is that there is no evidence on which the lower Court's findings that plaintiff has title to the land can be based. This, I think, must be allowed. Ex. C the inam register does not make a definite statement as to the particular details of the grant. Exs. A and B are only comparatively recent title-deeds and do not recite that the kudivaram was sold. The mere fact that they are more than 30 years old, and purport to have been attested by one Kathaperumal, paternal uncle of 1st defendant, cannot be any evidence that the kudivaram also was sold. There is no other evidence on the point.

On the other hand 1st defendant also has not proved title. There are concurrent findings on this point and there is no evidence to prove his title.

There are also concurrent findings that 1st defendant has never been in possession of the land; and that plaintiff was in possession on the date of suit. The lower Appellate Court holds further that plaintiff has been in possession of both varams for over 40 years, but, since to prove possession further back than 12 years from 16th October 1919 (the date of plaintiff's first witness's deposition) it relies solely on Exs A and B, mere recitals in which cannot prove the fact of possession, I must take it that its real finding is, relying as it does on plaintiff's 1st witness, that plaintiff has been in possession for 12 years prior to 16th October 1919. The suit was filed on 17th September 1918. So the position is this : neither party has established title, plaintiff was in possession on date of suit and for 11 years previously, and 1st defendant has never been in possession. In such circumstances is plaintiff entitled to a decree maintaining her possession by grant of the declaration and injunction she prays for.

It is argued for 1st defendant that to allow plaintiff to rely now merely on possessory title is to fundamentally to alter the nature of the suit. But this I do not agree with. The plaint sets out clearly plaintiff's possession since 1877, and denies that defendants ever had possession. The written statement countered with a denial that plaintiff ever had possession, and assertions that 1st defendant was in possession on the date of suit, and that defendant and his predecessors-in-title were, as occupancy tenants, paying melvaram to plaintiff. On these findings issues (2) and (3) were framed, raising the question whether plaintiff was in possession and the parties went to trial with that issue clearly before them. It was incumbent on 1st defendant to produce any evidence he had that plaintiff was never in possession and that he or his predecessors-in-title were in possession.

I think this is clearly a case where if plaintiff had actually been dispossessed by 1st defendant, she could have successfully maintained a suit for possession against him under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. It is quite plain on the findings that plaintiff was in long anterior and peaceable possession at the time of the threat of dispossession. A person in such peaceable possession is, until the contrary is shown, presumed to be the owner, and is entitled to maintain his possession against all but the true owner. See Narayana Rao v. Dharmachar (1). Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (2) The case reported in Somasundaram Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai (3) is a case where the plaintiff, having failed to prove lawful title, relied on legal possesssion by prescription, i. e., again attempted to prove a title, legal, though not lawful, and was non-suited because he had not put forward such a title in the plaint. The present case is not similar. The case reported in Maikal Servai v. Thambuswami Servai (4) is also hardly in point since there plaintiff was seeking for possession as against a party already in possession. In such a case a suit based on title must fail when the title is not proved. The present suit is by a party in possession to be maintained in possession against one having neither title nor possession. Such a suit by its very nature relies not on title only but on possession also and defendants, as I have held, clearly realised the importance of attacking the plaintiff's plea so far as it was founded on possession also. The ruling of the Privy Council in Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghouse (2) and illustration (g) to section 42 Specific Relief Act are direct authorities for the maintainability of the suit, and for the correctness of the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

I see no reason to interfere and dismiss this second appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 18th October 1922, confirming the decree of the Munsif, Utraula, dated the 28th October 1921,

AJUDHIYA PRASAD v. RAM AUTAR

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises from a suit for possession by pre-emption of 3 p. 4 kts. share in mauza Nagra Buzurg, pargana Utraula on payment of Rs. 550. It has been admitted that the defendant is the purchaser of the above share and that the plaintiff has a right of pre-emption. The only question for the decision of the Courts has been whether the so-called sale-deed gave rise to a right of pre-emption, as the pre-emptor's claim has been challenged on the ground that the sale was only a sale of a share in a law-suit and not a sale of a share of a proprietary tenancy as contemplated by section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act 1876. Both the Courts below have decided that the sale in question was only a sale of a share in a law-suit, and they have, therefore, dismissed the pre-emptor's claim.

The sale-deed or agreement in question is to the following effect :—

One Ram Awadh was owner of a 6 p. 8 kts. share in the village, and on his death his son Ram Partap became the owner. After Ram Partap, his mother Mt. Lakhpati, widow of Ram Awadh, came into possession. On her death, the recital proceeds, Bhaggan the vendor, who was the nephew of Ram Awadh, became entitled to the property by inheritance, but as a matter of fact it came into the possession of Mt. Surajkali, sister of Ram Partap. Bhaggan not having funds to meet the expenses of the litigation necessary to recover possession, agreed by this deed to transfer a half share in the property (namely, 3 p. 4 kts.) to the vendee Ram Autar, in order that the vendee might fight out the case in regard to the whole share and meet all the expenses out of this sum. A clause is added that if Ram Autar spends less than Rs. 550 in the litigation, Bhaggan will not be entitled to a return of the balance, while on the other hand if Ram Autar had to spend more than Rs. 550, he will not be entitled to recover anything from the vendor. In case of success, the vendor and vendee are to take half a share each in the property.

The lower Courts, after noticing the leading decision in Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (1), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that a share in a law suit does not give rise to a claim for pre-emption, have pointed out that in two cases of this Court (reported in Mirza Muhammad Abbas Ali Khan v. A. Quieros (2), and Khurshaid Ali v. Rashid Husain (3) it has been held that where the property in suit was not in the possession of the vendor, the sale of a right which has to be established by litigation does not give rise to a right of pre-emption. These decisions are of 1905, and it has been argued in appeal that there are more recent decisions of this Court which modify them. In Balwant Singh v. Lallu Ram (4), a decision of 1918, it was decided that the question whether a sale is a genuine sale or a mere sale of a share in a law-suit, is to be determined on the facts of each case, and that the mere fact that legal proceedings are necessary to obtain possession of the property sold, is no ground for holding that the sale does not give rise to a right of pre-emption. Mr. Justice Daniels, however, remarked in that case " The sale price was, however, paid in cash, and was not, as in the case of Mirza Muhammad Abbas Ali Khan Bahadur v. A. Quieros (2)-dependant on the result of the subsequent law-suit." The next decision quoted on behalf of the appellants is Muntazim Husain v. Ahmad Raza (5), which reiterates the general proposition that each suit of this nature is to be determined according to its own facts and that the mere fact that legal proceedings are necessary to obtain possession of the property sold, is no ground for holding that the sale does not give rise to a right of pre-emption. The facts of that case are somewhat complicated, but it is to be noted that Mr. Justice Stuart remarked. " The deed is a sale out and out of the share of one anna and four pies which had formerly belonged to Ali Husain, and which had descended to the vendor. There is no question of selling a part of the share. The whole is sold. There is no question of enlisting the assistance of an outside party for contribution towards the expenses of legal proceedings on the consideration that that he is to be rewarded by a portion of the subject-matter of the suit in the event of the litigation being successful. The whole property is sold." Another somewhat similar case in which the right of pre-emption was held to have arisen is reported in Gajadhar Prasad v. Manrakhan (6). Here again, however, although it has been argued for the appellants that the vendor's title was more doubtful than in the present case, there was clearly an out and out sale of a share for a definite sum of Rs. 3.0. Each of these individual cases, therefore, is capable of being distinguished from the present one. It has not been shown here that any sum of money was paid down at all. In fact, it appears from the deed that nothing was paid by the vendee, but that he undertook to meet the expenses of the litigation, the amount of which was uncertain, in consideration of receiving half the property in the event of success. The nominal price stated in the deed appears to be an estimate of the cost of the litigation rather than of the value of the property. For these reasons I consider that the lower Courts were justified in coming to the conclusion that what was transferred to the vendee was a share in a lawsuit and not a share in a propreitary tenancy The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Judicial Committee's Act (William IV, ch 41), s. 28 Privy Council appeal—Death of party—Decree after death, whether nullity—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, art. 181—Right to implead parties to decree when arises—Application to bring legal representatives on record—Limitation.

A decree of the Privy Council has full force and effect not with standing the death of any of the parties interested therein during the pendency of the appeal.

Rajunder Narain Rae v. Bijai Govind Singh, 2 M. I. A. 181 at p. 221 ; 1 Moor. P. C. 117; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 175 ; 18 E R. 269 ; 12 E. R. 757, followed.

The right to implead parties to a decree does not arise till the decree is passed. Therefore, an application to bring the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor on the record is within time if made within 3 years of the date of the decree, even though the judgment-debtor died before the decree was passed.

Appeal against order, dated the 10th November 1922, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in E. P. No. 279 of 1905, in O. S. No. 4 of 1814 (Sub-Court, Kumbakonam).

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyar), for the Appellants :—In this case pending an appeal before the Privy Council, several respondents died. Their legal representatives were not brought on record. The appeal was heard exparte and allowed. In execution, the legal representatives were sought to be added as parties more than 3 years after the death of the respondents. The lower Court has added them as parties and directed execution to proceed holding that the order of the Privy Council was valid and binding. My contention is that the order of the Privy Council which was passed without the legal representatives of the deceased respondents on record is a nullity and does not bind them.

Section 23 of the Judicial Commitee's Act has no application to the present case. That Act can refer only to cases of death between the hearing of a case and delivery of judgment and is analogous to O XXII, r. 6, of the Civil Procedure Code. To hold otherwise would be against ordinary and elementary principles of Justice that a man must be afforded an opportunity of being heard before an adverse order is passed against him.

Section 23 does not help and the appeal before the Privy Council against these respondents had abated.

The provisions relating to abatement of appeals on account of death of parties are contained in the most recent rules by the Judicial Committee. These enable the dismissal of an appeal for failure to bring his legal representative on record, for abatement, for setting it aside (See orders in Council recently passed especially Rules in September 1921).

9 Halsbury 48, Para. 988: Privy Council Practice, p. 310.

[PHILLIPS, J.—Those provisions cannot apply where an order has been passed by the Privy Council without the legal representative being brought on record].

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar:—The language of Cl. 13 and 14 of the Rules is very wide.

On the merits I have two points. The application to bring legal representatives on record was brought more than 3 years after their death. The application is time barred. Article 181 applies.

[PHILLIPS, J.—The right to add legal representatives in execution cannot arise till the decree is passed by the Privy Council. The present appeal which is within three years of that date appears to be in time].

Further, the order of the Privy Council has dealt only with the question of the validity of the vakalat.

The question of limitation which was raised has still to be disposed of. The lower Court was wrong in refusing to go into that question.

[PHILLIPS, J.—The order of the Privy Council is quite clear. It directs execution to proceed. How can any further objections to it be entertained ?]

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar (with Mr. V. N. Venkatavaradachariar), for the Respondents, was called on to reply only on the 1st point. The language of section 23 is very wide. It was enacted in 1838 apparenty having reference to the then difficulties in communication. The present case is clearly contemplated by the section. The Privy Council are not bound by the rules of procedure in India. Rajundar Narain Rae v. Bijai Govindu Singh (1).

There are two decisions of the Patna High Court in which following decisions of the Privy Council in a New South Wales Case, the death of a respondent has been held not to vitiate the judgment: See Baij Nath Goenker v. Ravaneshwar Prasad Singh (2), Deonandan Prasad Singh v. Janki Singh (3).

In any case even if the decree is nullity, it is well settled that objection to the validity of a decree cannot be taken in execution and the order is good and binding on the legal representatives, Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty (4), Swami Mudaliar v. Muthiah Chetty (5).

JUDGMENT.—Objection is taken by appellants to execution of a decree of the Privy Council. It is first contended that, as three of the respondents were dead when the appeal was heard and judgment was pronounced, the decree against them is a nullity,

(1) 2 M. I. A. 181 at p. 221; 1 Moor. P. C. 117; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 175; 18 E. R. 269; 12 E. R. 757.

(2) 58 Ind Cas. 212; 1 P. L. T. 426.

(4) 58 Ind. Cas. 871; 43 M. 675; 39 M. L. J. 203; (1920) M. W. N. 460; 28 M. L. T. 75; 12 L W. 217.

(5) 69 Ind. Cas. 465; 43 M. L. J. 293; 16 L. W. 184; (1922) M. W. N. 597; (1923) A. I. R. (M.) 212.

Section 23 of William IV. Ch. 41, however, cures the defect in the judgment, for it enacts that the order shall have full force and effect notwithstanding the death of any of the parties interested therein vide Deonandan Prasad Singh v. Janki Singh (3). The deceased respondents must, therefore, be considered as parties to the decree notwithstanding their death before it was passed.

It is next urged that the application to bring on record their legal representatives is barred by limitation, being made more than 3 years after their death; but Article 181 of the Limitation Act gives 3 years from the date when the right to apply accrued. The right to implead parties to a decree cannot arise until the decree is passed. This objection must, therefore, fail.

The further argument that the Privy Council failed to consider another objection to the execution petition on the score of limitation, ignores the fact that the Privy Council decree orders execution to proceed and the executing Court cannot go behind the decree.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

A Court has discretion under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code to allow interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, but as such a course is out of the ordinary, the Court should record its reasons for awarding such interest.

Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin, dated the 13th January 1922 :

RANKIN, J.—In this case three questions have to be decided. The first relates to 8 bales of May shipment, the second to 27 bales of June shipment and the third to 25 bales of May shipment. The contract is of a type well known in Calcutta. It is the defendants' form by which they as importers sell to purchasers in Calcutta goods which are coming out from England. The most material words are the operative words of the 3rd line "the undermentioned goods or such portion thereof as may arrive or be deliverable under the conditions of the contract," which state the subject-matter of the purchase. In para. 2 of their plaint, the plaintiffs set forth a usage prevailing in the market, in accordance with which they understood this contract. At the hearing the plaintiffs were desirous of dropping the allegation of that usage. The defendants who in their written statement had denied the usage, are desirous of now affirming it.

Now I have come to the conclusion that when this contract is looked at carefully, it in effect comes to the same result as the usage alleged in sub-clause 2 of the 2nd paragraph of the plaint, taking that usage as the plaintiffs at the time understood it. Mr. Sircar has contended that the words "such portion thereof as may arrive or be deliverable" can only be applied to goods which have been at the time appropriated to the plaintiffs :—That is to say, that if goods appropriated to the plaintiffs, were lost or became undeliverable, then the sellers were excused: but that otherwise there is nothing in any event in these words to excuse the sellers from making full delivery. In like manner, commenting upon the custom alleged in his own plaint Mr. Sircar contends that the custom, as set forth there, is only applicable to goods appropriated to the plaintiffs: but that in the event of any loss prior to any such appropriation, that custom does not apply at all. Now in my opinion neither the custom intended when this plaint was drawn, nor the contract in question, has this meaning. The intention which I attribute to this contract is this that you are to take by themselves the bales of each quality in question and each shipment in question; after ascertaining how many have been intended for, you are to apply the number of bales that have been sunk at sea rateably throughout the importer's contract, with the result that, as stated in the plaint, the sellers would be entitled to cancel with each purchaser such proportionate number of bales as the entire loss would bear to the entire number indented for from England.

That this is how the plaintiffs understood the matter is I think made clear both by their conduct and their pleading. The defendant's conduct as to the May shipment shows the same understanding, but as to the June shipment they have, as I shall explain, gone astray. Such contracts as the present have come very often before this Court from the piece goods market in Calcutta, and I have never known the principle disputed. In many cases it has been acted on without dispute. The difficulty in the present case is, first, that proper evidence of custom is not put forward owing to the plaintiff's change of front. Secondly, the language of the contract, though undoubtedly one for the sale of unascertained goods, is, as, so very often happens, expressed, as to some of the stipulations without attention to the fact that the goods are not ascertained. "Such portion there of as may arrive" is clear enough if you are dealing with a specific subject-matter. But if the contract is being fulfilled out of a large consignment, part of which is sunk before any appropriation of specific bales, some principle is necessary before the effect of such words can be ascertained. The contract in later clauses, speaking of a time when no appropriation can possibly have been made, uses the same sort of language "should the goods or any portion of same not have been shipped." "If the goods or any portion of same are shipped prior to the time stipulated," and so forth. It seems to me that on the face of the contract itself it is not possible to suppose that the sellers intended to assume the risk of sinkage in the sense of paying damages for non-delivery. Prima facie one would suppose, as the notorious fact is, that there was in this market some custom as to the matters; but if one is forced to resort to the implication from the contract itself, I can see no more simple or direct implication than the pro-rata principle.

On this view what are the consequences? If, with the assent of the purchaser, the seller has appropriated any particular bales, and thereafter, the goods are lost at a time when the property has passed to the buyer, then the seller would not be liable for damages for non-delivery. But if the buyer has not become the owner of any specific goods, he is entitled to call for the whole number contracted for less the proportionate number after equal distribution of the loss among the entire goods indented for. In that case it is risky for the seller to make full delivery to a particular buyer while it is possible that there may be sinkage at sea yet to be ascertained. One sensible course, if people must make these contracts, in this form, is to distribute rateably each cargo as it arrives. If, in any particular case, goods have passed to one buyer with the result that the appropriation cannot be recalled, that fact would be no answer to another buyer under whose contract the property in no specified bales has passed, he would be entitled to his whole number of bales less his proportionate share of the loss in sinkage.

Now the question which I have to deal with is, first, whether the 8 bales which have been cancelled in respect of May shipment are too many. Now the fact is that Ex: 'Baroda' the total number of bales sunk was 56. In all 700 bales were indented for, of which 100 was sold to the plaintiff firm, so that the plaintiff is justly liable to bear 1/7th of the 56 bales sunk in this cargo. That amounts to 8 bales which is the exact amount for which the defendants did purport to cancel. That calculation is subject, however, to one objection which the plaintiffs take. It is said that some of the 700 bales bought by the defendants were not sold by them. So far as that goes, it appears that at some stage such bales together with goods bought in the bazar were sold by them, and on that question I accept the evidence of the defendants' witnesses. But assuming that they were not, assuming that some 80 bales out of the 700 bales were retained by the defendants for themselves, in my judgment that does not entitle the plaintiffs to the addition of a single bale beyond what they are entitled to as the proportionate part of the whole. If these sellers chose to keep 80 bales for themselves in the hope of selling afterwards, that, in my judgment, can have no effect at all as regards the buyers. Just as to take an analogy—I may add it is nothing more than an analogy—just as a person who insures his furniture for an insufficient sum is taken in the event of a fire to be his own insurer for the amount of the deficit, so in a case like this, a seller who makes up his mind to keep the goods for himself, is simply his own purchaser at his own risk. It makes no difference whatever to the amount of sinkage to be charged upon any particular buyer. That being so, I am of opinion that the defendants must succeed upon the issue of the 8 bales of May shipment; but in any case I think the plaintiffs, as appears by their conduct and their plaint, understood the contract as I have construed it, and accepted the defendants' cancellation. At no stage do I find that the defendants made difficulties over granting inspection of the relevant documents in the usual course.

I come next to the issue with regard to the 27 bales of June shipment. It will be apparent from what I have said already, that it is in my judgment quite impossible for the defendants to justify what they have done with regard to these 27 bales. 27 bales were the total amount of June shipment coming out in the "Civilian." It appears, according to the defendants' case, that when the invoice of the "Civilian" came out, they for some reason made up their mind to allot them to the plaintiff. They in no way seem to have made proper appropriation with the assent of the buyer. Nobody says that the property in these goods passed to the buyer; but the defendants say they meant to give the plaintiffs these goods apparently because the plaintiffs are people who do not as a rule take delivery before due date. The result was that the earlier bales of June shipment were allotted to other buyers of that particular quantity and particular shipment. If that is the way in which these defendants made appropriations at a time when ships were sinking frequently, they have acted most unwisely. Having regard to the contract and having regard to the custom (which they themselves now want to plead) they had no right to do any thing of the sort. It is not necessary for me to find whether or not there are any circumstances of suspicion attaching to the fact that plaintiffs were given the whole of these bales coming out in the "Civilian." It is suggested that the fact of sinkage might have been known at the time when this was done. I do not think that is proved, but I do think that it is proved that the defendants were minded to treat the plaintiffs badly. They plainly had a grudge against the plaintiffs either for the alleged reason that they were slow in taking delivery, or for some other reason which I have not been told. Whichever way this matter is regarded, the defendants' case on the 27 bales is very nearly impossible, they are only entitled to take the proper proportion of the sinkage and attribute that to the plaintiffs. This can be worked out and mentioned to me.

I come now to the most difficult question, the question of the 25 bales of May shipment ex. "Defender." Upon this the correspondence between the parties, and between the plaintiffs and their buyers Pannalal Hazarimull, has been gone into at length, but the only question is whether or not arrival notices in respect of these bales were given. It is fair to remember that the facts are now 4 years old, and that, as Mr. Sircar says, the facts spoken to upon the one hand and the other were not very remarkable even at the time that they happened, and, therefore, very likely they may have been forgotten. At the same time it is only open to me to decide this case according to the evidence, and this is a case in which the plaintiffs have one distinct advantage upon any point of this sort. I refer to the admitted fact that the market had gone strongly in their favour. That does not mean that I am to start with a prejudice in favour of the plaintiffs. What it means is that I am to bear that fact in mind in trying to interpret the meaning of the correspondence and the probablities of the case. The correspondence with regard to the 25 bales begins really on the 16th October and it goes on till the 31st October. On the 16th Messrs. Khaitan say that they understand that the remaining bales of May and June shipment, have arrived and "my clients have received no arrival notice" and they say that the defendants have been wrongfully withholding all information. The defendants upon that say with regard to the 25 bales that they have repeatedly asked the plaintiffs to take delivery and pay for the goods: that the due date for delivery fell due long ago; that the plaintiffs did not care to notice their repeated requests; and they give a final period of 24 hours under threat to cancel. Upon that, on the 19th the plaintiffs' attorney replied that they have had no information up to that point, that they have not yet been told when the goods were shipped, and by what steamer, and when they arrived. In answer to that, there is the letter of the 20th simply saying that the plaintiffs might come and inspect at the defendants' office. The defendants' correspondence becomes acrimonious and the defendants say that the plaintiffs are always short of money and always make false pretexts. After that, there are two letters of the 31st in which the required information is again asked for by the plaintiffs, and the defendants withdraw their offer to give the 25 bales. From the start there has been a controversy as to whether any arrival notice was given, and it is noticeable that the 16th October happens to be exactly the due date of these goods. The due date is calculated from the arrival of the boat and not from the giving of the arrival notice. I have to find whether there is something in the conduct of the parties that enables me to say that the defendant's evidence, of the giving of verbal notice, is corroborated so as to be sufficient. I put it in this way because it is an absolutely fair observation to say that after the defendants' answer to the letter of the 16th October, good evidence must be exacted from them to the effect that they gave arrival notice. It is untrue and plainly untrue that these goods fell due long before the 16th October. It is grossly improbable and quite untrue that repeated requests to take delivery were made during the 90 days, and that throws an additional burden upon them, when I come to scrutinise the hazy verbal evidence of arrival notice given on their behalf. Now the balance of evidence leads me to a conclusion against the defendants. To begin with, I do not think that they were minded to treat the plaintiffs very fairly. Their conduct in other matters shows that, and the extreme acrimoniousness of their letters is in the same direction. It is not a very forcible argument that they were giving arrival notices to other people and therefore, they would treat the plaintiffs in the same way. It is quite true, however, that it is very usual to give arrival notices. It is quite true that with regard to some goods arrival notices were given. It is quite true that one can hardly expect Mohimbux or any one to be precise in his recollection of this ordinary incident I have borne all these things in mind; but, in my judgment, people who make contracts requiring verbal notice and with a plain and enphatic alllegation before them that no such notices had been given, conduct themselves as the defendants have done, would be well advised to make sure that their evidence of the giving of such arrival notices is sufficient.

I have considered the suggestion that the reason why these goods were not taken and paid for by the plaintiffs may have been that Pannalal Hazarimull was delaying the matter or unwilling to take the goods until the question of cancellation of other goods was examined into and disposed of. I do not think however, that that theory squares with the facts, or accounts for the position. The plaintiffs must have judgment for damages as regards the 25 bales, and they must have judgment for damages as regards everything save their proper proportion of the 27 bales. The defendants succeed as to the 8 bales. This matter can be mentioned to me at any time next week and the consequences of my judgment agreed upon if possible.

Against this decree, the defendant appealed.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin.

PANNALAL SAGORE MULL v. MUKHRAM RADHAKISSEN

The suit was brought to recover damages in respect of the alleged non-delivery of certain goods, bales of Grey shirtings, which, it was alleged, had been sold by the defendants to the plaintiffs by a contract dated the 23rd of November, 1916 or thereabouts. The shipments by the contract were specified as January to June: but it was stated by the learned Advocate-General in opening the appeal that the period provided for shipments had been altered from January to June, to April to June.

The learned Judge delivered two judgments: In the first he dealt with the question of liability; and, in the second one he dealt with the measure of damages: and, having regard to the course which was taken by the learned Advocate-General appearing on behalf of the appellants, the appeal has been confined to two points. The first related to the damages which were awarded in respect of 25 bales representing the May shipment, and the second related to the order of the learned Judge by which he allowed what was called "interim interest" which, I understand, means interest on the amount adjudged in respect of damages from the date of the suit to the date of the decree. Interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the amount of the decree and running from the date of the decree was allowed, and no complaint was made by the appellants with regard to that matter, and it was with respect to the learned Judge's order by which he allowed interest at 6 per cent. on the amount of damages from the date of the suit to the date of the decree that the appeal was argued.

With regard to the first point, namely, damages awarded in respect of the May shipment, the learned Judge in his judgment said, "In the present case the correspondence in October satifies me that it would be wrong to give damages as regards any of May shipment on any higher rate than the October rate": and, the learned Judge further said, "I see no reason to give a highter rate of damages with regard to 25 bales than the October rate. That rate I fix at Rs. 12-12." The point which the learned Advocate-General urged in respect of this matter was that there was no evidence which entitled the learned Judge to come to the conclusion that the October rate, that is, the October market rate was Rs. 12-12 as. and, he, therefore, asked for a remand in order that the matter might be further enquired into, and, if necessary, evidence given with regard to the October rate. In my judgment, this application should not be acceded to.

As I read the learned Judge's judgment, he came to the conclusion that the period during which the defendants might have delivered the May shipment extended to 31st of October: and, when one looks at the correspondence of this period, it is not difficult to see how it was that the learned Judge arrived at that conclusion. The material date, viz. that on which the defendants finally decided that they would not deliver the May shipments, being the 31st of October it was not unreasonable in my judgment, for the learned Judge to take the market rate of the 1st November. The evidence was that on that date the market rate was Rs. 12-12 as. Consequently, in my judgment, there is no reason for remanding this matter for further enquiry, nor is there any reason for interfering with the learned judge's decision on this point.

With regard to the second point, namely, the order of the learned judge as regards interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, it is not disputed that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to make the order, having regard to the provisions of section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The matter, therefore, was one for the discretion of the learned Judge. Having regard to the judgment of the learned Judge, when he was dealing with the question of the liability of the defendants, I find no difficulty in concluding what must have been in the learned Judge's mind when he came to the decision that it would be right to allow the plaintiffs interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree: and, having regard, therefore, to that judgment, I am not prepared to interfere with the discretion of the learned Judge in this respect. I desire merely to add that when an order, such as this, for the payment of interest on the sum awarded as damages from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is made, in my judgment, it is desirable that the learned Judge who tries the case should state the reasons for that order. From enquiries which my learned brother and I have made and from what was stated by the learned counsel for the respondents in Court, and having regard to certain judgments delivered on the Original Side to which reference was made it appears that in several cases recently orders somewhat similar to the one now under consideration have been made. At the same time it seems to me that it cannot be denied that an order of this kind is out of the ordinary: and, for that reason, in my judgment it is desirable that the learned Judge should state the reasons for such an order. In this case as I have already said, having regard to the fact that the learned Judge who tried the case, had all the circumstances connected with it, present to his mind at the time he made the order and having regard to what he said in his judgment, by which he decided the question of liability, it seems to me that there were materials upon which the learned Judge was justified in exercising his discretion in the way he did.

For these reasons in my judgment this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

In a case where notice under O. RAJAGOPALA AIYAR v. RAMANUJACHARIAR Appeal against the order of the District Court, East Tanjore at Negapatam, dated 23rd January 1922, in C. M. A. No. 81 of 1921, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge, East Tanjore at Negapatam, in Miscellaneous Application No. 278 of 1621, in O. S. No. 13 of 1916, on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 21st day of Septemeber 1923 and the 10th October 1923 and Messrs. T. Narasimha Ayyangar and N. S. Rangaswami Ayyangar, for the 1st Respondent having raised a preliminary objection and upon hearing Mr. V. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant, the Court made the following ORDER.

Schwabe, C. J.—A perliminary point is taken that no second appeal lies because it is said that this is an appeal on a petition based on, there being a material irregularity in publising or conducting the sale within the meaning of O. XXI, R. 90, that the order made under rule 92 setting aside the sale, was an order made by reason of that material irregularity or fraud, and that as no second appeal lies from orders made under rule 92, there can be no second appeal here. The answer is that it may be prefectly true as regards part of the appeal, but one of the grounds on which the appellant relies is that no notice was given of the application for attachment and order for the sale of the property and that, that comes under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and is, therefore, appealable as a decree.

The only direct atthority on the point is the Judgment of Oldfield and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ., in The Khedath Neelu Neithiar v. Subramania Moothan(1), where, under somewhat similar circumstances which were not really so strong as this, because the failure to give notice was at a later stage, they held that, where an application is made which is partly covered by r. 90 of O. XXI and partly not so covered, although the order purports to have been made under r. 92 of O. XXI, a second Appeal will lie.

There are dicta in other cases to the effect that, where there is absence of notice, there is a remedy under O. XXI. Rule 90 or section 311 of the Old Civil Procedure Code which corresponds with it, particularly in the decision of the Privy Council in Malkarjun v Narhari (2) but, on looking carefully into that case, we note that this point was in no way before the Privy Council; but apart, I think that the decision in 11 L. W. is an authority, and I should myself come to the same conclusion as was come to, in that case, because looking at the words of O. XXI, r. 90, they appear to me perfectly plain. What is being dealt with there is a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting a sale; and I cannot bring my mind to the view that the failure to give notice of the application for leave to attach and sell is an irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. It seems to me that it is really a contradiction in terms. There is no sale to publish or conduct until after leave of the Court has been obtained (a) to attach the property and (b) to sell.

Whether or not that failure to give notice is an illegality, is a matter which is entirely irrelevant for the present purpose because it is only certain kinds of irregularities that are covered by O. XXI, r. 90. If the omission in this case was the other kind of irregularity or whether it renders the whole sale a nullity, it is not brought within the wording of that rule. The preliminary point fails and this appeal must proceed.

Waller, J.—I agree that a second appeal will lie.

This Appeal against Appellate Order No. 45 of 1922 came on for hearing again on the 24th and 25th September 1923, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant, and Messrs. T. Narasimha Ayyangar and N. S. Rangaswami Ayyangar, for the 1st Respondent the Court made the following :—

ORDER OF REFE ENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The question in this case is as to the validity of a sale held in execution of a decree for maintenance. Appellant was the 3rd defendant in the suit. The contesting respondent is the purchaser in execution. The Sub-Judge found that the sale was invalid as notice of execution under O. XXI, Rule 22 had not been issued to 3rd defendant and that the application was in time under Article 181 of the Limitation Act. Finding, further that the property had been sold for considerably less than its proper value, he proceeded to set aside the sale under O. XXI, R. 90. The District Judge, on the other hand, was of opinion that notice to 3rd defendant was unnecessary, that the sale was not invalid and that the application was barred by limitation presumably under Article 166 of the Limitation Act. He added that there was no allegation of fraud or collusion against 1st defendant. Had he said that no fraud or collusion had been proved, he would have been more accurate. There were certainly allegations—no doubt, of a vague description of fraud and collusion against 1st defendant and the plaintiff in the suit. Nothing, however, was alleged against the auction-purchaser, though it is now suggested that he was a party to the fraud, as a result of which the property was sold for less than its proper value. There is no evidence of any collusion between these persons.

(1) 58 Ind. Cas 809; 11 L.W. 59; (1919) M.WN. 897.

(2) 25 B. 337 ; 5 C. W. N. 10; 2 Bom. L. R. 927; 27 I. A. 216; 10 M. L. J. 268; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 739 (P. C.).

The auction-purchaser is not connected with 1st defendant's family. It is not at all probable that the plaintiff and 1st defendant, who were on opposite sides in the suit, would have colluded together. Plaintiff had no interest whatever in getting the land sold for a low price. Her interest, if she had any, lay in the opposite direction. Nor is it apparent why 1st defendant should have conspired to bring to sale only that part of the property in which she had a life estate.

The evidence as to the alleged inadequacy of price is not very satisfactory but we accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the sale was in fact at an undervalue.

II. The finding that there was no fraud or collusion does not end the matter. The next question is whether the sale, as against 3rd defendant's interest, is invalid or not. 3rd defendant had undoubtedly a vested interest in the property sold and a notice should have gone to him under O. XXI, r. 22. It has been held in Gopal Chunder Chatterjee v. Gunamoni Dasi (3) that the omission to give such a notice renders the sale void. This decision has been approved by the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das Khetri (4) and followed in Syam Mandal v. Satinath Banerjee (5). The last case has been dissented from in Kasi Visvanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty,(6) where it has been decided that the non-issue of notice under O. XXI, r. 22, is a mere irregularity and not an illegality affecting the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree. The Judges refused to follow the Privy Council ruling on the ground that it was passed under the old Civil Procedure Code which had in it no provision corresponding with the present sub-rule (2) of r. 22. The ruling in Syam Mandal v. Satinath Banerjee (5) they dismissed with the remark that it had not considered the effect of sub-rule (2). In Doraisami v. Chidambaram Pillai'(7),SPENCER, J., arrived at the same conclusion "so long" he said "as r. 22, clause (2) permits an executing Court to dispense with notice for reasons to be recorded, it is difficult to see how the issue of process without notice and without recording reasons would affect the jurisdiction of the Court or would be more than an irregularity." We think that the decision in Syam Mandal v. Satinath Banerjee (5) is correct and that the ruling in Kasi Visvanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6) has been too widely expressed. It may well be that, where an application has been made under sub rule (2) and the conditions contemplated by that sub-rule exist, the non-issue of notice without the recording of reasons would be amere irregularity. But we are of opinion that when, as here, it is not even suggested that the conditions required by sub-rule (2) existed or were under the consideration of the Court, the Privy Council ruling in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4) should be followed. The ruling reported in Malkirjun v. Nirhari (2) is not an authority to the contrary; for in that case, notice was issued on a particular person under the direction of the Court but it was subsequently held that that direction was wrong and this, the Privy Council considered to be no more than an irregularity, which rendered the sale not void, but voidable. In another case Ram Kinkar Tewari v. Sthiti Ram Panja (8) the Privy Council decision was followed. The Code applicable to it was no doubt, that of 1882, but the opinion was clearly expressed that the law had not been altered by O. XXI, r. 22 of the present Code. The ruling referred to above Doraisawmi v. Chidambaram Pillai (7) expressly dissents from Raghunathasami Iyengar v. Gopaul Rao (9). In view of the conflicting opinion on the point, we think that the best course is to refer for the decision of a Full Bench the following question.

Whether, in a case where notice under O. XXI, r. 22 has not been issued and the omission is due not to the fact that sub-rule (2) has been applied, but to the fact that notice was not asked for, a sale held in execution is void or merely voidable as against the person to whom notice should have been, but was not issued.

If the answer to the question above propounded is that the sale is void as against 3rd defendant, a further question arises—that of limitation, i. e., whether the article of the Limitation Act applicable is 166 or 181 or some other and if so which article. On this point again there is a considerable divergence of opinion. In the decision reported in Seshagiri Rao v. Srinivasa Rao (10) it has been held that, when a sale is absolutely void for want of jurisdiction, the article applicable is article 181. The same conclusion was arrived at in Ram Kinkar Tewari v. Sthiti Ram Panga (8). Both of these decisions have been dissented from by OLDFIELD and VENKATASUBBA RAO, JJ., in Ganapathi Mudaliar v. Krishnamachari (11) (where also a sale was impugned as void), the first on the ground that the decision was supported by reference to an unreported case and not by any independent reasoning and the second on the ground that the relevant part of the judgment was obiter. As to the Madras case, the ratio decidendi—which the Judges possibly considered too obvious to require statement—doubtless was that a void sale need not be set aside. In the Calcutta Law Journal Case the decision it is true, ultimately rested on section 18 of the Limitation Act, but the question of the Article of Limitation applicable did arise directly in the suit and we think that the decision on it can scarcely be dismissed as obiter.

Another case Babu Das Narayan Singh v. Muhamad Yesuf, is reported in (12) but there it was held that what had occurred was a mere irregularity and that the Court had jurisdiction to sell. In other words, the decision was that the sale was voidable and not void. It was, no doubt, that article 166 governed all applications "on whatever grounds" to have an execution sale set aside, but that is not to say that the same article applies to cases where the sale is void and need not be set aside at all.

In a Madras case Konidena Ramayya v. Konidena Ramamma (13) it is was held that article 166 governed all applications, under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside sales on the ground either of illegality or irregularity. In another Madras Case Thekkedath Neela Neithiar v. Subramania Moothan (1), it was a notice under O. XXI, r. 66 that was in question. The decision was that article 181 did not apply. There is, however, in the course of the judgment a reference to the issue of the notice required by O. XXI, r. 22 as being a condition precedent to the validity of any execution proceedings. One of the Judges was a party to the decision in Kasi Visvanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6).

In Raghunathaswami Iyenger v. Gopaul Rao (9), the judgment in which OLDFIELD, J. concurred was delivered by RAMESAM, J., who laid down that where an execution sale is void, it need not be set aside. The question of limitation did not arise, but, if it had, presumably the decision would have been that article 166 did not apply. This decision was dissented from in Doraisami v. Chidmabaram Pillai (7) by SPENCER and KRISHNAN, JJ. In Parama Siva Thever v. Pu'ukuppa Thever (14) In A. A. O. No. 74 of 1922, SPENCER and DEVADOSS, JJ., dissented from Seshagiri Rao v. Srinivasa Rao (10) and followed, Ganapathi Mudaliar v Krishnamachari (11). In A.A.O. No. 77 of 1921, SPENCER, J , did not decide the question of limitation.

Venkatasubba Rao, J., held that the sale in question is void. He held further that the application then under consideration was, in substance, one to declare that the sale was in-operative and that, therefore, article 166 could not govern it.

I need refer to only two more Madras cases. In one of them Muthiah Chettiar v Bawa Sahib (15), OLDFIELD and TYABJI, JJ., disagreed as to the applicability of article 166. OLDFIELD, J., was of opinion that the application, though it may have been made under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, was essentially one to set aside a sale and was therefore, barred under article 166. In the other Pakyidanna v. Gunti Lashmi Narasamma (16) the question we are now considering did not arise. SADASIVA AYYAR, J., however, did refer to it. His opinion was that, if the application he was dealing with was one to set aside the sale as distinguished from one for a declaration of the invalidity of the sale as against the applicant's rights it was barred by limitation under article 166.

Only one other decision need be mentioned —that in Mani Singh Mau'hata v. Nawab Bahadur of Murshadabad (17) which is in favour of the view that article 166 governs all applications under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. As the correctness of the decision Seshagiri Rao v. Srinivasa Rao (10) has been doubted, we think that the question should be referred to a Full Bench for final decision. Essentially the question is this—where a sale in execution is void against a particular person, is it a necessary part of his remedy that he should ask to have the sale set aside? If the answer is in the affirmative then probably article 166 applies. If on the other hand, he need not get the sale set aside, but his application can be treated as one for a declaration that the sale is void as against him, article 181 would seem to govern the case. The question we would refer to the Full Bench is this:

Where a sale in execution is void as against a party and he applies for relief under section 47, Civil Procedure Code or otherwise, what is the period of limitation that governs his application?

This appeal came on for hearing on 26th October 1923 in pursuance of the order of reference to a Full Bench, dated 10th October 1923 and upon perusing the grounds of appeal and the order of the lower Court and the record in the case and the said order of reference to a Full Bench and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Appellant and Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Ayyangar for Mr. T. Narasimha Ayyangar and Mr. N. S. Rangaswami Ayyangar, for the Rspondent, the court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—If this matter were free from authority I should incline to the view that non compliance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 22 was a material irregularity, and not an illegality which would make the subsequent sale a nullity. In England there was a rule of Common Law that judgments after the lapse of a year and a day could not be executed unless an order for what was known as a scire facias was first obtained. There are authorities to the effect that the disregard of that rule rendered a subsequent sale in execution voidable and not viod Blanchenay v. Burt (18), and Good Title v. Bad Title (19), and the same rule applies in America—see Freeman on Void Judicial Sales, page 97. But in my judgment there are authorities here to the contrary which preclude such a view being taken here. In Gopal Chunder Chatterjee v. Gunamani Dasi (3), their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court laid down that a notice under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 was necessary in order that the Court should obtain jurisdiction to sell a property by way of execution as against the legal personal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. In Ragunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4), the judgment-debtor had become an insolvent and a sale in execution took place without proper notice under the same section and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the sale was a nullity. In the case before us no notice has been given of execution 'proceedings to the infant petitioners although a year had elapsed since the decree, but I can see no difference in principle between the position of legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor, or the Official Assignee of the judgment-debtor's estate, and that of a party to the suit who has not himself been served with notice of an application for execution more than a year after the decree, and is ignorant thereof. The provision for notice in the two cases of legal representatives and of parties when more than one year has elapsed are contained in the same rule, O. XXI, r. 22, which is in the same terms as section 248 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and I do not think that it is possible to hold that in one case failure to give notice is a mere irregularity while in the other it results in the Court having no jurisdiction to sell at all. In Shyam Mandal v. v. Sitinath Bannerjee (5), MOOKERJEE and CUMING, JJ., held that a proper notice under O. XXI, r. 22 after the lapse of one year from the decree was the very foundation of the jurisdiction itself, and that failure to give it rendered a sale inoperative even as against a stranger. It is right to point out that in that case an application was made to prevent the confirmation of the sale before it was completed and no question of limitation arose, but the grounds of the decision are quite clear and unless we disagree with them they are conclusive of this point. In Visvanatham Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6), a Bench of this Court held that the non-issue of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was a mere irregularity, and not an illegality affecting the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree, and in Duraswami v. Chidambaram Pillai (7) SPENCER, J., took the same view; and KRISHNAN, J., stated that he would have been in favour of referring the matter to a Full Bench but for the decision of the Privy Council in Mallikarjan v. Narahari (2) which he considered rendered it unnecessary to do so The ground on which the Privy Council cases referred to above were sought to be distinguished from this case, was that O. XXI, r. 22 differed from section 248 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 in that, O. XXI, r. 22 provides that the Court can issue process in execution without issuing the prescribed notice, if for reasons to be recorded. it considers that the issue of such notice would cause unreasonable delay or would defeat the ends of justice, while there was no such provision in the Code of 1882; and that as there is now a discretion in the Court to excuse the notice it follows that the failure to give such notice must be a mere irregularity. I am not able to follow this reasoning. I do not appreciate how the failure to give such notice can have any different effect under the new Code to what it had under the old Code, merely because the new Code provides that in certain cases the Court can dispense with the notice. In my judgment the only effect of this sub-section is to give the court jurisdiction in certain cases in which without it the Court would have none. Mallikarjan v. Narahari (2), is not an authority to the contrary, for in that case notice was served on a person whom the Court had ordered to be treated as the legal representative of a deceased party and who, it was subsequently held, was not the proper legal representative, and the Privy Council held that this was a mere irregularity as the Court was acting within its jurisdiction though wrongly. Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (20) was relied upon as an authority against this view. In that case there were cross-decrees in separates suit and execution was ordered on one of them without taking into account the other, although it was provided by section 246 of the Code of 1877, now O. XXI, r. 18, that execution can only issue for the balance if any between the two decrees, and it was held by the Privy Council that this was an irregularity and did not render the sale void. Their Lordships held that the Court had jurisdiction to sell, and that the purchaser was no more bound to enquire into the correctness of the order for execution than into the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution was issued. This is an illustration of a case where the Court was acting within its jurisdiction on the proper interpretation of the section of the Code applicable, and does not assist in arriving at the proper interpretation of another section. It follows that the answer to the first question referred is that the sale is void.

The other question referred is what is the period of limitation that governs an application for relief where the property has been sold in execution and that sale is void. If the application is an application under the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside a sale in execution of a decree, the Article of the Limitation Act of 1908 applicable is 166 and the period of limitation is 30 days from the date of the sale. If not, the application is one for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere and it will be governed by Article 181, the period of limitation being 3 years from the date when the right to apply accrued. Lord DAVEY delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khiarajama v. Daim (21), a case where the Court had sold without jurisdiction the property of persons who were not parties to the proceeding or properly represented on the record—said "as against such persons the decrees and sales purporting to be made would be a nullity and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside. If authority be desired for these elementary propositions it may found in the judgment of Sir BARNES PEACOCK in Kishen Chundar Ghose v. Ashoorun (22)." That is direct authority for the proposition that in such a case it is not necessary to apply to the Court to set aside the sale. If it is possible for the petitioner in this case to proceed without applying to set aside the sale he could avoid the harsh limitation imposed by Article 166. In my judgment he can do so. He could, but for the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 bring a suit for the possession of the property sold, and the purchaser would not be able to rely upon the Court sale as a defence, because that sale is a nullity and the Privy Council has held that it is not necessary to take any steps to set it aside. By reason of section 47 all questions arising between parties to the suit relating to execution ought to be determined by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit, and it has been held that the fact that a Court purchaser is a necessary party would not prevent the application of this rule. But this is only a question of procedure and the Court may treat the proceeding under this section as a suit subject to any objection as to limitation. It is unnecessary to consider whether the effect of this is that the period of limitation to be applied is the period provided by the Limitation Act in respect of applications or that provided in respect of suits. If the former, the period of limitation will be 3 years under Article 181 and if the latter, the 12 years provided in the case of suits to recover possession of immoveable property. I cannot agree with the view that all applications under Section 47 are governed by Article 166 nor do I think that the statements in cases to that effect are more than obiter dicta; the intention being to express the view, with which I agree, that if an application is an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree it matters not whether the application is made under section 47 or under O. XXI, r. 90. Seshagiri Rao v. Srinivasa Rao (10) is a direct authority for the proposition that when a sale is absolutely void for want of jurisdiction the Article applicable is article 181, and in my judgment in view of the decisions of the Privy Council referred to above that case was rightly decided.

The petitioner is the guardian of infants who were properly before the Court as Defendants in the original suit, and their interest in the property was liable to be sold in execution in satisfaction of the decree, and they can only be permitted to recover possession of the property on payment to the purchaser of what he has paid together with interest thereon at 6 per cent. less any amount the may have received for mesne profits, and in the absence of agreements, this petition must go back to the Court of first instance to ascertain the amount and fix the date of payment and make the necessary order for carrying out this direction. In view of the fact that the petitioner chose to frame his application under O. XXI, r. 90, and to make unfounded charges of fraud against the respondent, there will be no costs here or below.

Ramesam, J.—The facts of the case and questions referred to the Full Bench are stated in the Order of Reference.

The first question is—whether the sale is void, no notice having been issued under O. XXI, r. 22. Three possible views may be taken on the effect of want of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the new Code.

(1) The want of notice is only an irregularity—This is the view taken by Oldfield, J., in Viswanathan Chetty v. Somasundaran Chetty (6), and I agreed with his judgment.

(2) The sale is void—This is the decision of the Privy Council under the old Code in Ragunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4) and it may be said that the addition of clause (2) in the new Code does note make any difference when the mind of the Court was not applied to the need for notice.

(3) An intermediate view may be taken viz., if the case is one to which clause (a) of subsection (1) of rule 22 applies then the want of notice is merely an irregularity; and if clause (b) applies the sale is void for want of notice. In this way Ragunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4), may be distinguished.

Now I confess there is something to be said in favour of each of these views. All that can be said in favour of (1) has been said by Oldfield, J., in Viswanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6). (with which I agreed) and by Spencer, J., in Doraisamy v. Chidambaram Pillai (7).

Incidentally I may point out that the point doese not strictly arise in Doraisamy v. Chidambaram Pillai (7). There, the sale took place on 17th January 1916. The judgment-debtor died on 16th December 1915. The application for attachment, for sale must have been ordered and the proclamation of sale must have been settled before his death. It does not appear that an application for execution, had to be made or was made after his death, and if there was none, it cannot be said that O. XXI, r. 22, was violated. If the sale in that case was viod it must be only on the ground that the judicial proceeding after the death of the judgment-debtor and without bringing any legal representative on the record was void as held by Oldfield, J. and me in Ragunathaswami Iyengar v. Gopaul Rao (9), but Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., dissented from this view. In the judgment of my Lord, my Lord has given reasons against adopting the reasons of the decision in Viswanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6), and of Spencer, J., in Doraisamy v. Chidambaram Pillai (7).

(2) The second view was adopted in Shyam Mandal v. Satinath Banerji (5), dissented from by Spencer, J., in Doraisamy v. Chidambaram Pillai (7), is supported by the Judgment of the Privy Council in Ragunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4), and now by my Lord the Chief Justice. I understand that my brother Waller, J., also agrees with this view.

(3) The third view was urged before Oldfield, J., and myself and was rejected by us in Viswanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6). As my Lord now points out there is something to be said in its favour, but the language of the Judicial Committee which does not make any distinction between clause (a) and clause (b) of section 248 of the old Code (corresponding to O. XLI, r. 22 of the present Code) prevents us from accepting it.

With no strong inclination in favour of any one of the three views stated above, and in order that our judgment may be unanimous, I would formally drop the conclusion I adopted in Viswanathan Chetty v. Somasundaram Chetty (6), and agree with my Lord and Waller, J., on the first question referred to the Full Bench.

The second question referred to the Full Bench presents no difficulty. Once we are agreed that Ragunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4), applies, that case is conclusive that the sale has not got to be set aside. Only if it has to be set aside, Article 166 applies

If not, Article 181, when the matter arises, under section 47 or Article 144 when the question arises in a suit (as in Ragunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri) (4), would apply. I agree with my Lord's proposed answer to the second question and with the further order as to mesne profits and costs.

Waller, J.—I agree entirely with the Judgment of the learned Chief Justice and have nothing to add to it.

V. N. V. Answered accordingly.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT,

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 423 OF 1922.

March 20, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Graham.

RAMESH CHANDRA DAS—APPELLANT

MAHARAJA BIRENDRA KISHAN MANIKYA BAHADUR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 85, O. XXXII —Ruling Prince—Majority—Personal law—Guardian Item, whether necessary—Manager, suit by, maintainability of.

It is not necessary to appoint a guardian ad litem of a ruling prince not living within the limits of British India and not domiciled in British territory who has attained majority under his personal law, although he is a minor under the Indian Majority Act. Such prince is not a minor within the meaning of O. XXXII, Civil Procedure Code. He is moreover entitled to act through his manager appointed under section 85 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mathura Mohan Roy v. Surendra Narain Deb, 1 C. 108 ; 24 W. R. 464 ; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 71, followed.

Rule in the matter of an application for substitution of the heir of the deceased respondent and appointment of a guardian-ad-litem.

Babu Mahandra Nath Roy (with Babus Ramesh Chandra Sen and Santemoy Majumdar), for the Petitioner :—My Lords, the Respondent in the appeal in connection with which this application arises, viz. Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur of Tipperah died on the 13th August 1923. On his death the appellant made an application for the substitution of the name of Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya, the son and heir of the deceased Maharaja alleging that he was a minor and proposing, Maharani Srimati Arundhati Mahadevi his mother as his guardian ad litem. The present application is by the said Maharani Srimati Arundhati Mahadevi for a decision as to whether Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur is a minor for the purposes of the present appeal which is one of many of his cases pending in British Indian Courts. The Maharaja is above 15 but has not yet completed his 16th year. The Governor in Council has appointed with the approval of the Government of India a Council of Administration for the Tripura State with Rai Jyotish Cnandra Sen Bahadur as the Vice-President, and the Manager and agent of the Maharaja with respect to his estates in British territories. The notices for the substitution in the present appeal have been served upon the mother of the Maharaja, the Government pleader and the Vice-President of the Council of Administration. The Vice-President, however, referred to the Government as to what should be done regarding substitution of the name of the Maharaja in all the pending cases of the State in British Courts. The reply of the Government embodied in a letter dated 27th January 1924 is to the effect that " the name of His Highness the Maharaja should be substituted in those suits acting through his manager in whose favour a power of attorney should be executed by the Maharaja himself for that purpose. Therefore, the decision of the Government is that the Maharaja has attained majority. But a decision of the Court is necessary for the purposes of the suits pending there. Under

O. XXXII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court has to satisfy itself as to whether the defendant who is alleged to be a minor is really a minor, before a guardian is appointed to act on his behalf.

Now according to r. 16 of O. XXXII, the rules regarding the appointment of a guardian are not applicable to a Ruling Chief like the present Maharaja. Besides, the Maharaja is not a minor as contemplated by O. XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code. For, according to it a minor is a person who under the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) has not completed the age of 18 years or a person of whose person and property a guardian has been appointed by a Court of justice or whose property is in the hands of the Court of Wards and he has not completed the age of 21 years. Again, the preamble of the Indian Majority Act states that the same is applicable only to persons domiciled in British India. The Maharaja, however, does not live within British India and is not domiciled in it.

What, then, is the law by which 'the question as to whether the Maharaja is a minor or not is to be determined.' Before the Indian Majority Act, there was no enactment governing the people of the town of Calcutta regarding the age of majority. The Act XI of 1858 which laid down 18 years as the age of majority governed the people in the Mufassil outside Calcutta. Under such circumstances the Full Bench decision in the case of Mathura Mohan Roy v. Surendra Narain Deb (1) concluded that the age of majority of a Hindu living within the town of Calcutta was to be determined by his personal law. If, therefore, the Majority Act is not applicable to the Maharaja, his personal law must be resorted to. The personal Law applicable to the Maharaja is the Dayabhaga branch of the Hindu Law according to which a person who has completed 15th year is to be considered as to have attained majority though under the Mitakshara branch one hasto complete the16th year for that purpose (passages cited from Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edition, page 282, and Trevelyan on Law relating to Minors 5th edition, page 200). Therefore, my submission is that the present Maharaja having completed his 15th year he can no longer be treated as a minor for legal purposes in British Indian Courts.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, (for the Opposite-Party :—My application for the appointment of a guardian was meant only to safe-guard my client's interest. I have no objection to the Maharaja's being considered as having attained majority if that does not prejudice my client's interest in any way. JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This is an application by Maharani Srimati Arundhati Mahadevi of Tipperah asking for a decision of this Court as to whether Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur, the present Maharaja of Tipperah is a minor for the purposes of the present appeal which is one of many cases pending in British Indian Courts in connection with his extensive Zemindary within British territories and for such order as to this Court may seem fit and proper. During the pendency of this appeal the respondent Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur of Tipperah died on the 13th August 1923 leaving as his son and heir the said Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur who has succeeded to the Tipperah State, a Fendatory State in alliance with the British Government, as its Ruling Chief with the approval of the British Government. The appellant thereupon applied for the substitution of the name of Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya in place of the deceased Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur as respondent and, alleging that he was a minor, proposed the applicant Srimati Arundhanti Mahadevi, his mother, as his guardian ad litem. Notices were served upon the applicant, the Government pleader as also upon Rai Jyotish Chandra Sen Bahadur who is the Vice-President of the Council of Administration of the Tipperah Estate. The petitioner Maharani Srimati Arundhati Mahadevi states that Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur has not yet completed his 16th year and is governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law. She, therefore, submits that according to the personal law of the Maharaja he has attained the age of majority. Sometime in November 1893 with the approval of the Government of India in the Political Department, a Council of Administration was constituted for the administration of the Tripura State and by a proclamation, dated the 9th December 1923 the Council of Administration assumed charge of the administration and Rai Jyotish Chandra Sen Bahadur the Vice-President of the Council was appointed the manager of the Chakla Roshnabad Estates which are estates appertaining to the Tipperah Raj in British territory. It further appears that by a notification published in the Calcutta Gazette, dated the 5th December 1923, Part I, page 1826, the Governor in Council appointed the said Rai Jyotish Chandra Sen Bahadur manager of his Highness Roshnabad Estates to be the agent of the Maharaja under section 85 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question as to what course should be adopted in the matter of substituting the Maharaja's name in the pending suits, appeals and proceedings was referred to the Government by the Vice-President by a letter, dated the 27th January 1924 and the answer given by the Government by its letter, dated the 25th February 1924 from the Political Agent of the Tipperah Estate to the Vice-President of the Council of Administration of the Tipperah Estate is to the following effect: "The name of His Highness the Maharaja should be substituted in suits in British Courts acting through his manager holding his power." It is further suggested in that letter that "the Maharaja should himself execute a power of attorney in favour of the Manager for the purpose of British Indian Courts only for the administration of properties of His Highness in British territory."

We are now invited to decide whether the Maharaja is a minor and should be represented by a guardian in this appeal or whether he is competent to act without the intervention of a guardian ad litem. O. XXXII, r. 3 of the Code provides that where the defendant (respondent in appeal) is a minor, the Court on being satisfied of the fact of his minority shall appoint a proper person to be the guardian for the suit (or appeal) for such minor. We have, therefore, to satisfy ourselves of the fact of the minority of the Maharaja. Reference may also be made in this connection to r. 16 of that Order which applies to Ruling Princes, as the present Maharaja, is, which makes this Order inapplicable to a Ruling Chief where he is sued in the name of his State or any other name. With reference to the provisions of O. XXXII, Civil Procedure Code a minor is a person who under the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) has not completed the age of 18 years or a person of whose person and property a guardian has been appointed by a Court of Justice or whose property is in the hands of the Court of Wards and he has not completed the age of 21 years. The Indian Majority Act, as the preamble shows, applies only to persons domiciled in British India. Admittedly the Maharaja is not living within the limits of British India and is not domiciled in British territory. The Indian Majority Act has, therefore, no application.

The next question that we have to consider is whether the Maharaja is a minor according to the law by which he is governed. It is maintained and there is no contradiction on this point, that the Maharaja is governed by the Dayabhagha School of Hindu Law. According to the tenets of that school majority is attained after the completion of the 15th year. There is a slight difference in regard to the age of majority between the two important schools of Hindu Law. Under the Dayabhagha School a person who has completed his 15th year is to be considered a major, whereas under the Benares School he must have completed his 16th year. (See Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edition, page 282, and Trevelyan on Law relating to minors, 5th edition, p. 200). The Act in force before the Indian Majority Act was Act XL of 1858 which laid down the age of majority as 18 years: but that Act was in force only in the Mufassil. It was not applicable to the town of Calcutta within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature and the question arose in several cases as to the age of majority of Hindus living within the town of Calcutta. There have been several decisions on this point; but it will suffice if we refer to the Full Bench decision in the case of Mathura Mohan Roy v. Surendra Narain Deb (1). In that case the age of the defendant when he executed the bond was 16 years and a few months. His plea of minority at the time of the contract was overruled on the ground that he was bound by his personal law according to which he was a major. In this state of the authorities we are of opinion that Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur is not a minor within the meaning of O. XXXII, Code of Civil Procedure and that it is not necessary, therefore, to appoint a guardian ad litem. He is, however, entitled to act through his manager the Vice-President of the Council of Administration appointed by order of Government under section 85, Civil Procedure Code.

The result is that the application made by the appellant on the 12th November 1923 asking for the appointment of Maharani Srimati Arundhati Mahadevi as guardian ad litem of the respondent Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur is dismissed. The appellant will serve notice of this appeal of the Maharaja through the Vice-President who has appeared in these proceedings through Babu Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy who is willing to receive service on his behalf.

Graham, J.—I entirely agree with the order which my learned brother proposes to make. Having regard to the authorities which have been placed before us by the learned vakil for the petitioner, viz., Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edition, p. 282, Trevelyan on Law relating to minors, 5th edition, p. 200, Cally Churn Mullick v. Bhuggubutty Churn Mullick (2) and Mathura Mohan Roy v. Surendra Narain Deb (1). We must, I think, hold that the present Maharaja Bir Bikram Kishore Manikya Bahadur has attained his majority. This view also finds support in the action which has already been taken by Government in this connection. The proper course in the circumstances of the case will, I think, be to treat the Maharaja as a major and for action to be taken on the lines indicated in section 85, Code of Civil Procedure.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), S. 11, Expl. IV —Madras Civil Rules of Practice, 161 (3)—Transfer of decree application for—Notice to Judgment-debtor—Failure to plead bar of limitation—Res-judicata—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), S. 15, Sch. I, Art. 182 (5) —Attachment before judgment—Injunction—Exclusion of time—Application by transferee for recognition of transfer—Step-in-aid of execution.

On an application for transfer of a decree, it is not only competent to the judgment-debtors but it is incumbent on them, if they propose to rely upon it, to appear and plead that the execution of the decree is barred by limitation.

Where notice of an application for transfer of the decree was issued under Rule 161 (3) of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice to the judgment-debtor and he had opportunity to appear and plead limitation but he raised no objection and execution was ordered to proceed :

Held that it was not open to him on a subsequent application for execution to plead that the former application was barred by limitation.

An application by a transferee decree-holder to recognise the transfer and execute the decree is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182-(5) of the Limitation Act so as to save the bar of limitation of a later execution petition by the decree-holder, notwithstanding the fact that in certain subsequent proceedings the title of the transferee decree-holder on that date is negatived.

Until an assignment of a decree is held to be invalid the transferees are the proper persons who have title to execute the decree.

An attachment before judgment of a decree absolutely prohibiting the execution of the decree by anybody operates as an injunction within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act. A decree-holder is, therefore, entitled to deduct for the purposes of an execution application, the period during which such attachment is in force, JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to the execution of a decree, dated 27th April 1918. On 26th April 1919 the transferee decree-holders applied for recognition of their transfer and for execution. However, in consequence of an attachment of the decree this petition was dismissed. The next petition was put in on 4-4-1922 asking for the transmission of the decree to the District Court for execution, and on 26-4-1922 the present execution petition was filed. It was contended that the present petition was barred by limitation, but four grounds were urged by the decree-holder for allowing execution. The District Judge has held that two of these grounds were valid and has ordered execution to proceed. Now, this appeal is filed by the 1st defendant, the judgment-debtor.

The first ground taken is that the plea of limitation is res judicata by reason of the order on the application of 4-4-1922 directing the transmission of the decree to the District Court. It has been held in the Calcutta Court in Sreepati Charan Chowdhury v. Shamaldhone Dutt (1) and in Chutterpat Singh v. Saita Sumarimal (2) that, when an Order for transmission of the decree is made, no question of limitation is decided and therefore, such an order does not amount to res judicata on the question of limitation. In fact, in the former case, Mukerjee, J. held that the judgment-debtor could not at that stage possibly contend that the decree was barred by limitation but, apparently no notice was issued to the judgment-debtor under section 248 of Code of Civil Procedure : the Court held further that, even though notice under section 248 is issued, it is not competent for a judgment-debtor at that stage to contend that the decree ought not to be transferred because an application for execution thereof is likely to prove infructuous as being barred by limitation. In the judgment no authority is given for this proposition of law and possibly it is based upon the rules of the Calcutta High Court, which do not require the issue of a notice to the judgment-debtor in an application for transmission of the decree. On the other hand, in Madras, under Rule 161 (3) of the Civil Rules of Practice, a notice should be issued, and a notice was accordingly issued in this case. It is now urged for the respondent that the judgment-debtor had an opportunity of appearing and pleading that the application was barred by limitation, and it would seem that, when there was that opportunity section 11, explanation (IV) would be applicable and that the question would be res judicata because it was one which might and ought to have been put forward to show that the decree was not one that could be executed. In fact in Mungal Pershad Dichit V Grija Kant Lahiri (3) it was held that, where an execution petition was barred by limitation but execution had been ordered to proceed it was not open to the judgment-debtor in a subsequent application to plead that the former application was barred by limitation. Similarly in Rajah of Ramnad v. Velusami Tevar (4), the Privy Council held that, when an assignee of a decree applied to be brought on the record and to have the decree executed, execution was allowed although the judgment-debtor had raised the plea that execution was barred by limitation. In the order allowing execution, the plea of limitation was not dealt with specifically but it was held that in a subsequent application the plea of limitation could not be urged, for it must be deemed to have been decided in the order on the former application. In that case the plea was raised in the first proceedings but their Lordships remark in the judgment (at p. 200).

"It was not only competent to the present respondents to bring the plea forward on that occasion but it was incumbent on them to do so if they proposed to rely on it. No appeal was brought from the order then made and therefore it was not competent for the Subordinate Judge to admit the plea on the subsequent proceedings."

It would appear from this that, even in an application for transfer of a decree, it is open to a judgment-debtor to plead limitation and in fact he ought to do so. If the decree is barred by limitation, the transfer of it to another Court is a mere infructuous proceeding which ought not to be taken and therefore if a valid plea of limitation is available, it should be urged in order to prevent multiplicity of proceedings. In this view we think that the District Judge's order in the present case was correct.

The second ground on which the District Judge allowed execution is that the petition put in on 26-7-1919 was a step in aid of execution, and, being less than three years before the present application the latter is not barred. The application on 26-7-1919 was one put in by the transferee decree-holders to recognise the transfer and to execute the decree in certain methods specified in the petition. The petition was dismissed because execution of the decree had been stayed and it appears that in subsequent proceedings the right of those transferee decree-holders has been negatived. At the time the application was made they were transferee decree-holders by assignment from the original decree-holders and as such the proper persons to execute the decree; it was held in Sreenada Brahmayya Pantulu v. Pavasuram Ayya (5) that such an application as this would have the effect of saving the bar of limitation. The transfer in that case was effected by a decree of Court, whereas in the present case the transfer is effected by an assignment by the parties, but this cannot affect the question whether the application was one made in accordance with law. Until the assignment had been held to be invalid, the transferees were the persons who had title to execute the decree. On this ground also we think the District Judge was right.

The District Judge has rejected the third ground, namely, that limitation is saved under Section 15, of the Limitation Act, and he has based his decision on Rangaswamy Chettti v. Thangavelu Chetti (6). In that case, however the attachment was of a book-debt and it is clear that an attachment of a book-debt does not operate as an injunction within the meaning of Sect. 15 of the Limitation Act. When a decree is attached, the form of attachment is given in Appendix E, forms Nos. 22 and 23 and, in accordance with those forms, there would not really be any injunction against execution, for the attaching decree-holder cannot execute the decree himself: but in the present case, the attachment was not by a decree-holder, but it was an attachment before judgment, and consequently the order issued by the Court attaching the decree absolutely prohibited the execution of the decree by anybody, as will be seen by a reference to the attachment order. This order clearly amounts to an injunction and it is not denied that, if the period during which that injunction was in force be deducted, the present application would be within time.

For all these reasons we think the present petition is not barred by limitation and therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

An attachment made before judgment does not come to an end on the dismissal of an execution application. The attachment enures for the benefit of the plaintiff decree-holder till his remedy becomes absolutely barred; and a transfer of the attached property even though made after the dismissal of an execution application, is void as against him.

O. XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to attachments before judgment and is confined to attachments in execution of decree.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for sale on the basis of a mortgage deed dated the 8th of January 1909.

It appears that Basant Lal, respondent brought a suit for recovery of a money debt against Khwaju and others, and while that suit was pending he applied for attachment of the defendants' house before judgment. It is not disputed that the house was so attached. While the suit was pending and this attachment was in force, the defendants mortgaged it on the 8th of January 1909 in favour of Bhore Akhey Ram the present appellant. On the 5th March 1909 Basant Lal's suit was ultimately decreed. He put in an application for execution on the 14th of April 1909 which, however was dismissed on the 22nd July 1909 on the ground that the decree-holder had not deposited the process fee necessary for the issue of the proclamation of sale. A second application for execution was made on the 19th July 1909 which also was dismissed on the 23rd December 1909 on apparently not very clear grounds. In pursuance of a third application for execution a share of the house was put up for sale and purchased at auction by Basant Lal, the decree-holder, on the 1st June 1910.

The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that his mortgage deed was executed while the attachment of Basant Lal was subsisting and that, therefore it is absolutely void as against the latter.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that as soon as the first application for execution was dismissed for the default of the decree-holder on the 12th July 1909, the previous attachment ceased to exist. In support of this contention it is urged that O. XXI, r. 57 Civil Procedure Cdoe applies not only to attachment in execution of the decree but also to attachment before judgment, and that under that rule, upon the dismissal of an application for execution, the attachment ceased ipso facto.

It is to be noted that prior to the coming in force of the new Act there used to be some doubt as to the continuance of an attachment when the execution cases were struck off or removed from the file. In order to put an end to such doubts r. 57 has been added in O. XXI. As the rule stands it professedly applies to a case where a property has been attached in execution of a decree. Unless, therefore, there is some other provision in the Code which makes this rule applicable to attachments before judgment this new rule would not be applicable to such attachments. It is, therefore, contended on behalf of the plaintiff that by virtue of the provisions contained in r. 7 of O. XXXVIII the above-mentioned rule is applicable to attachments before judgment also. This contention we are not prepared to accept. Under O. XXXVIII, r. 7 the attachment before judgment is to be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree. That rule clearly refers to the mode of the attachment and not to the way in which that attachment ceases. It is O. XXXVIII which provides as to how and when the attachment before judgment is to cease. Under that rule if a suit is dismissed or if the defendant furnishes the required security the court is to withdraw the attachment. We are, therefore, of opinion that it is not possible to extend the provisions of O. XXI r. 57 to cases of attachment before judgment.

The attachment before judgment would have been subsisting, even though no application for execution had been made up to the date when the mortgage was effected. The attachment was clearly to enure for the benefit of the plaintiff decree-holder till his remedy became absolutely barred. Under the circumstances we see no good ground for holding that the attachment which had been subsisting prior to the application necessarily came to an end when that application was dismissed.

There are several cases in support of the view which we have taken. We may refer to the cases of Ganesh Chandra Adak v. Banwari Lal Roy (1), Kosuri Suraparaju v. Mandapaka Narasimham (2), Banuddin Sahib v. Arunachala Mudali (3), and lastly the Madras Full Bench case of Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiya (4).

In all these cases it has been laid down that O. XXI r. 57 does not apply to attachments before judgment but its operation is confined to attachments in exution of a decree. With that view we fully agree.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff appellant has relied on the case of Sewdutt Roy v. Sreecanto Maity (5). That case however is clearly distinguishable because in the first instance it was a case under the old Act which contained no express provision like the one contained in O. XXI r. 57. The remark of Woodroffe J. has to be understood with reference to the facts of the case as were then before him, and cannot be said to have decided the point which arises in the present case. The second case on which reliance is placed is the case of Ganpati v. Mukunda (6) in. This case is certainly a direct authority favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judicial Commissioner came to the conclusion that there was no good reason for not applying O. XXI r. 57 to attachments before judgment. The main ground relied upon by him was that as rules like 55 and 56 of O XXI did apply, there was no jurisdiction for not applying r. 57. We have, however, already pointed out that under O. 38 r. 7 the mode of attachment before judgment has to be the same as that for the attachment in execution of a decree, but that rule does not refer to the way in which attachments come to an end. There is no doubt that there is a clear preponderance of authority in favour of the view we have taken. We accordingly uphold the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

- Hindu Law—Joint Family—Debt incurred by father—Son's share, liability of—Insolvency of father—Official Assignee, whether can proceed against son's share—Immorality or illegality.

The share of a son in joint family property governed by the Mitakshara Law can be made liable even during the father's life-time for the father's debts not tainted with illegality or immorality.

On the insolvency of the father, the Official Assignee who stands in his shoes, can claim to have recourse to the joint family property including the son's undivided shares therein.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C.J.—The petitioners are the infant sons of two brothers who traded in partnership and became insolvents. They were in possession of joint family property, to shares in which the sons had on birth become entitled.

The question raised in this insolvency petition is whether the sons' shares in the joint family property of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara Law can be made liable, during their fathers' life-time to the father's debts other than Avyavaharika, that is, those tainted with illegality or immorality ; for the fathers having become insolvent, the Official Assignee claims to have recourse to the joint family property including, if necessary, the sons' undivided shares therein. He alleges that the fathers could themselves alienate the property and pay such debts and that he can exercise that right in the interests of the fathers' creditors.

There can be no doubt that this has been supposed to be in accordance with the Hindu Law for a very long time past and that Indian Courts have acted upon this view, so regularly and continuously, that it has been accepted as a well-known principle of law, and that a very large number of titles to property, where there had been sales of joint property by a father's creditors, or by the Official Assignee on his Insolvency has been accepted as good and not in any way open to question.

We are now asked to say that all this is wrong and that the son's obligation to pay his father's debts comes into operation only on his death and that the son's share in the joint family property is immune until such time, except when the debt was incurred by the father for the benefit of the family, that is to say, as agent acting within the scope of his authority. It is said that the principle on which the law has proceeded is that a son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debts and to save his father's soul, from the penalties which the Hindu religion recognises as falling to the lot of those who leave this world with debts unpaid and that it having been pointed out in two recent decisions of the Privy Council that, as it cannot at any time be predicated with certainty that any one will die, without himself having discharged his debts, that pious obligation cannot come into operation during the life-time of the father, and it must follow that the son's share in the joint family property cannot during the father's life-time in any way be made liable for the father's separate debts. Logical though this may be, it is by no means a convincing argument. Once a proposition of law has been established and acted upon over a period of time, it is too late to uproot it, by a re-examination of the rationes decidendi of the cases, by which the proposition was first established and a conclusion that those rationes were erroneous at the time, and no longer bring conviction to the existing judicial mind. Further, the principles enunciated by Halsbury, in Quinn v. Leathem (1) are particularly apposite, when trying to apply the rule of logic on a re-examination of the principles of the reported decisions on Hindu Law and their application to a particular set of circumstances. He stated them thus :

"There are two observations of a general character, which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have very often said before, that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions, which may be found there, are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decided. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all."

If this matter were coming before us, as a case of first impression, and without the large mass of authority with which it is surrounded, I should enquire by an examination of the original texts of the Smritis and Mitakshara and the commentaries thereon, whether it appeared that a son's property was or was not liable for his father's debts, during the father's lifetime. If I found that the answer to this question depended on pious obligation, I should wish to be satisfied, whether that pious obligation was such that it only comes into operation, on the father's death. On general principles, a son's property cannot be taken to pay his father's debts and it would be necessary to show, first that the Mitakshara makes some exception, on account of which that general principle does not apply to Hindus, and then to discover how far that exception extends. I should on that enquiry soon come to a passage in Yajnavalkya, which has been rendered.

"If a father has gone abroad, or is dead, or is subdued by calamity, his debts shall be paid by his sons and grandsons."

Based on that passage, the author of the Mitakshara lays down :

BALUSAWMY AYYAR, In re

"If a father, without paying the debt which is due, dies, or goes to a distant country, or is afflicted with an incurable disease and the like, then his debt must be paid by his sons and grandsons, by reason of their sonship and grandsonship, even if no assets of the father or the grandfather have been left;" and later, to a statement in Jagannatha, which explains passages, in Vishnu and Yajnavalkya which include the case of a father, being wholly immersed in vice, as referring to a state of "combined insolvency and insolence." The matter for consideration would be whether such expressions must not be taken to include a case of declared insolvency which view, if accepted, would be sufficient to determine the present case. But I think we are relieved from the burden of this enquiry, because certain principles have been too long established for this Court, at any rate, to question them. In 1886 in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohan (2), Lord Hobhouse who delivered the opinion of the Board said:

"Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parcenery rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate, their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority."

In 1916, in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (3) Lord Buckmaster, said:

Between those dates, the principle has been acted upon, by the Privy Council and all the Courts of India. It is true that in all the cases of the Privy Council, the question arose as between ths alienees of the family property and the sons, or their representatives; but I can find no indication that those cases were decided, as has been suggested here, on the consideration of the rights of the alienees, as bona fide purchasers for value, without notice. Indian Courts have not understood those cases as being limited in that way; for, they have applied the principle to cases of execution against the son's share in the family property and to the rights of the Official Assignee, on the father's insolvency and even to determining the forms of decree in suits against the father, when it is desired to make the son's share answerable for the decree.

In 1914, came the decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4). This case actually decided that the rule already established, that an alienation by the father of family property can only bind the son's interest in that property, when the alienation was for the purpose of discharging an antecedent debt, must be limited in its application to cases, where the antecedent debt was incurred, wholly apart from the security of the joint family property. But their Lordships did state their view that the pious duty of a son to discharge his father's debts, only arose on his father's death. It is to be observed that in that case, the claim against the father for repayment of the money due was long since barred by limitation, and that the Board was, therefore, not considering the question, whether, if a decree had been obtained in respect of that debt or the father had become insolvent, it was a debt, for which the son's share in the family property could have been made liable. Further in recognising the principle that the father can alienate joint family property, to secure payment of an antecedent debt, it would seem that the Board must have recognised that the son's share can be made, in the father's life-time, liable to pay his father's debts, altheugh such debts were not incurred, for the benefit of the family. Indeed, in my view, this case is really an authority in favour of the Official Assignee, who is dealing with antecedent debts ; for, if the father can alienate the family property, to pay those debts, it seems to follow that the Official Assignee standing in his shoes, can do the same. Based, however, on the statement in this case that the pious obligation only arises on the death of the father, attempts were made all over India to raise once more the question, which it was thought had been set at rest by Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2), and to get a finding that in no case, where the debt was not incurred on behalf of the family, could the son's share be reached, during the father's life-time. These attempts failed: see, for instance, Peda Venkanna v. Vedlamannuti Srinivasa Deekshatulu (5) Kandaswamy Gounden v. Kuppu Moopan (6), Subramania Aiyar v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (7) and Hanumat Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (8). Sahu Ram Chanára v. Bhup Singh (4) was followed by the Privy Council in Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (9) where Lord Haldane quoted it, as authorty for the proposition, that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation did not validate the mortgage, otherwise invalid. In 1923 in Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (10), it was held, following Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) the mortgage of the family property, not being for an antecedent debt, the mortgage and the subsequent sale of the equity of redemption did not bind the sons' or grandsons' shares in the family property and it was further held that the grandsons were not under a pious obligation to repay, to the vendees of the equity, as a condition of recovering the property, the money received by their grandfather. Lord Shaw, in delivering the opinion of the Board, quoted, with approval, Lord Haldane's interpretation of his, Lord Shaw's judgment in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4), but he added.

" In the present case, the doctrine " (that is, of pious obligation) " is invoked against grandsons and in the lifetime of sons. Nothing more need be said. The invocation of the doctrine entirely fails."

Based on this observation, attempts, once more, have been made, in all the Indian Courts, to throw doubt on the principle established in Nanomi Babussin v. Modhun Mohun (2) and I think opportunely re-stated in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (3), by Lord Buckmaster. In Calcutta and Madras this has failed ; see Madhusudhan Das Mohant v. Iswari Dayi Debi (11) the Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (12) and Sama Rao v. Firm of Marwadi Vajinji (13).

By reason of the numerous cases pending in insolvency and otherwise, this petition has been referred to a Bench, and I have directed it to be heard by this Court as at present constituted. In my judgment, the case of Sahu Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) and Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (10), were not intended to and did not alter the law, as laid down in a long series of cases referred to above, and the Official Assignee is entitled to succeed on this petition. On this point, until the Privy Council has definitely otherwise decreed, the law in this Presidency must be considered to remain unaltered in this respect.

Since the argument in this case, a judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Kishen Singh v. Chhajju Singh (14), has been published. In that case, in a suit against a father, and sons in respect of rent due, under a lease to the father, it was held that the lease was not taken for the benefit of the family and was a speculative and risky transaction not bin ing on the family and the sons were accordingly dismissed from the suit and a decree was given against the father alone and in execution of that decree certain family property, which had been hypothecated by the father, as security for payment of the rent due under the lease, was attached and the sons' interest therein was sought to be brought to sale in satisfaction of the decree. It was held that this could not be allowed and in my judgment this decision is right, in that the debt having been held as avyavaharika, execution could not be allowed against the sons in any form, it being a debt for which they had expressly been found to be not liable and for which their property could not be made liable. But as I read the judgment, it goes much further and indeed seems to accept as correct practically all the arguments which had been so clearly and ably addressed to us in this case by Mr. Tirunarayanachari. It seems to lay down definitely that the pious obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debt does not arise, until after the death of the father and it treats the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) and Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (10), as being authorities for this proposition and speaks of cases such as Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (15) and cases following Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohan (2), as having their authority shaken by these later Privy Council decisions, and with those parts of the judgment, for the reasons given above, I do not agree. Where a suit having been brought on a mortgage, by the father, of family property, in which his sons are joined as parties, it is held that the sons' shares are not liable, on the ground that the debt was not an antecedent debt properly so called, and a further suit being brought in time against the father and a decree obtained on the personal covenant in the mortgage, or for the money lent, whether the sons' shares in the family property could nevertheless be taken in execution of the decree against the father, is a point on which it is not necessary to express an opinion and I should not desire to do so, without having the matter fully argued. It would no doubt be a curious and anomalous position, if the sons' shares were not bound by the mortgage, but were liable to be taken in execution for the mortgage-debt. But that is not a question which we are called upon to decide.

I. P. No. 179 of 19[illegible] The petition will be referred back to the Insolvency Judge with these directions. He will deal with the costs.

I. P. No. 201 of 1919 is referred back to the Insolvency Judge for disposal, as we have not sufficient facts before us to deal with it.

Couts Trotter, J.—In the year 1917, the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) was decided by the Privy Council. I set out the head-note, as it appears in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) as clearly showing the propositions, which the learned reporter conceived that case to establish. The father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara can only sell or mortgage the joint family property, so as to bind his sons in two cases namely, (1) where the alienation is for family necessity, and (2) where the alienation is made to discharge a debt, which (a) was antecedent to the alienation, (b) was incurred wholly apart from the security of the joint family property, and (c) is not proved to have been incurred for immoral purposes. Further, during the father's life, an alienation by him is effective, only in the first case, since its validity in the second case rests upon the pious duty of the sons, to discharge their father's debt and that duty arises only 'upon his death.' As to the first main proposition, there has never been any question, nor as to the proposition 2 (c). As regards the proposition 2 (a), their Lordships refer to the conflict of authority, which existed in India, as to whether money paid in consideration of a mortgage of ancestral property, effected by the father, could be treated as being antecedent within the meaning of the rules and they hold that it could not and that the debt must not only be antecedent, in time, but must be a dissociated and distinct transaction. The proposition 2 (b) may or may not have been new law, when it was promulgated. But it is safe to say that it embodied a principle, which was not present to the mind of the Indian Courts and had not been applied by them. A Full Bench of five Judges of this Court in Arumugam Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (16) was so much impressed with the possible effect of the application of this principle, upon existing titles, that they treated that proposition as an obiter dictum and upheld a mortgage where the antecedent debt relied upon was a prior mortgage of the joint family estate, independent in fact and prior in time, to the mortgage sued upon. The decision of the Board in Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (10) affirmed the proposition and although they do not expressly overrule the decision of the Madras Full Bench, it was cited to them by Mr. De Gruyther in argument, and I cannot doubt that they must be taken to have disapproved it. But we are really concerned in this case, with the last proposition, namely, that the pious obligation, as it is commonly called, of the sons to discharge their fathers' debts, which the Hindu Law undoubtedly imposes upon them and grandsons does not arise, till the death of the father.

The difficulty which we are called upon to solve arises in this way. The Official Assignee seeks to alienate the joint family property of the family, of which the insolvents were the managers, including the assets of the minor sons, in satisfaction of the debts of the insolvent, so far as they are neither immoral nor illegal, within the meaning of the rule. The minor sons seek by this motion to restrain him from doing so. It was decided by a Bench of this Court, consisting of two members of the present Bench in The Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (12) that the Official Assignee, though it cannot be said that the shares of the minors actually vest in him, has nevertheless the same rights of disposition of the family property, in satisfaction of the debts of the manager, as the manager would himself have been entitled to exercise, if he had not been adjudicated an insolvent. I think that we should follow that decision, which was only a re-statement of the effect of a long series of decisions in India, beginning with the well-known judgment of Latham, J., in Fakir chand Motichand v. Motichand Harruckchand (17). Indeed I do not gather that the correctness of that decision was challenged in the lucid and able argument of Mr. Tirunarayanachari. His contention really is that, on the true view of the authorities, the father himself would not in the circumstances have the right to alienate these properties. There can be no doubt that a series of decisions of the Privy Council has established that a sale of the family property by the father to his creditor, or in execution levied by the father's creditor on the family property, cannot be set aside by the sons. That has been interpreted by the High Courts of India, to involve the further proposition that the sons are not only bound by the completed sale or execution proceedings, when the property purports to have passed to the creditor, but cannot resist the steps taken by the creditor to bring about the transfer of the ownership of the property to himself. The cases are set out in note C (1) at p.410, section 307 of the 9th Edition of Mayne on Hindu Law. Mr. Tirunarayanachari's argument falls mainly under two heads. (1) He contends that all these decisions whether of the Privy Council or of the Indian Courts are based on the supposition that the pious obligation devolves upon the sons, not only upon the death but during the life-time of the father. It is only just to observe that the leading case of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (15) undoubtedly appears to proceed on that footing. He contends that as the pious obligation has been authoritatively denied by the latest Privy Council decisions, to exist during the father's lifetime, these cases are no longer to be regarded as binding, where the father is alive. (2) He argues that even if the older decisions of the Privy Council, which are set out at page 410 of Mayne on Hindu Law, are binding, they are all cases, where the property, by alienation or execution, had already come into the hands of the creditor and that the liability of the sons should be confied to such cases. He supports this by saying that Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) has given a new ground on which the liability of the sons can be supported, in cases of a completed transfer and excluded in cases where the transfer is not yet completed. He has been at a little difficulty to find a proper legal label for his position, speaking sometimes of an equity and sometimes of a doctrine in the nature of estoppel. However, let us turn to the passages in the judgment of the Board in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4) on which he relies. At Page 132, the Board say this:

"They desire in the first place to make it clear, that much, if not all, of the law on the subject has arisen from the necessity of protecting the rights of third persons, say, the purchasers of the property, who have taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith "; and at page 133 is the following passage :

"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property and rights have thus sprung up, with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the Joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head."

Their Lordships then refer to the well-know summary of Sir James Colvile in Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (18) which begins with the words, "where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family," words repeated by Sir John Stanley, C. J., in the case Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (19) So far as I can ascertain, it is the fact that all the Privy Council cases do deal with executed sales and not with mere proceedings to enforce the creditors' rights But it is difficult to see in principle, what reasons there can be, for holding that such a distinction should be drawn. If a creditor can hold what he has got, it is difficult to see, why his hand should be stayed, in attempting to get it.

The argument that because the decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4), has removed the basis, which underlies the earlier decisions of the Privy Council beginning with Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (15), therefore, the decisions themselves are to be disregarded, is one that I confess does not appeal to me strongly. The last thing I look for in Hindu Law is logical consistency, compounded as that law is, of ancient texts, thousands of years old, qualified and interpreted by a series of commentaries and by decisions of the Indian Courts and the Privy Council, to temper and modify their application to the conditions of modern Indian life. It seems logically unanswerable to say, that, as the pious obligation of the son is based on the duty to remove his father from hell, that obligation cannot arise until the father, by means of his death, has reached hell. But the matter is not so simple as that; for, Vishnu and Yagnavalkya, as cited by Jagannatha, both accept the father's becoming a sanyasi, or being wholly immersed in vice or his suffering from incurable disease, or being mad, or being extremely aged (these last three qualifications come from Katyayan and Vrihaspati) as also giving rise to the son's liability to pay his father's debts.

It is plausible enough to say that the early authorities treat these conditions as equivalent to physical death ; but, at any rate, the doctrine of actual residence in put is gone, and it may be that that is the solution of this difficulty, namely, that one is entitled to treat insolvency as equivalent to a kind of civil death of the father, which would thereby invoke the pious obligation of the sons. It is worth remarking that Jagannatha, in his comment on the phrase "immersed in vice," includes, under that head, a state of insolvency and insolence, in which the father has abandoned all attempt to satisfy his creditors. He does not, of course, use "insolvency" in the technical sense of a person who has been actually adjudicated by a Court of law. If this enunciation of the Hindu Law is correct, it seems to me that it will apply a fortiori to a case where there had been such a formal adjudication.

The next observation I have to make is that there are at least two decisions of the Privy Council, in which the son's liability was enforced, during the lifetime of the father, although it is true that it was after the property had passed to the creditor. One was Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2), and the other was Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (3). In each of these cases language was used, which appears to imply that their Lordships, who decided it had no intention of restricting the son's obligations to cases where property has actually passed. And in each case, the decision contains statements, which, if they are correct law, establish the liability of the sons in such a case as the present. In Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2), Lord Hobhouse says this, page 35 :—

" Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parcenary right in the sons, the decisions have for sometime established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or aginst his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality."

In Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar Tagore (3), Lord Buckmaster says this, at page 4 :

It seems to me impossible to hold that these pronouncements mean that the creditor can hold the property against the sons, if he has actually got it, but can be resisted in his attempts to take the legal steps necessary to get it. I have already said that I do not look for logic in Hindu Law, but I think that such a state of things is repugnant not merely to logic but to a sense of practical justice and convenience. I think that the matter is admirably put by Shah, J. in Hanumanth Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (8).

"I am, therefore, of opinion that in the absence of a definite and explicit pronouncement on the point, this Court is bound in spite of the observations in Sahuram's case Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (4), to follow the Indian decisions and the decisions of the Privy Council to which I have referred, and to hold that the decree-holder's right to proceed against the ancestral immoveable property in execution during the debtor's life-time is co-extensive with the debtor's power to alienate it under the Mitakshara for the satisfaction of his antecedent debts not tainted with illegality or immorality."

Since the argument was concluded, our attention has been drawn to the case of Kishan Singh v. Chhajju Singh (14) and it is indisputable that the reasoning on which the judgment in that case proceeds is opposed to the conclusion and reasoning of Scott, C. J., and Shah, J. in Hanumanth Kashinath v. Ganesh Annaji (8) and in effect adopts the line of argument taken by Mr. Tirunarayanachari in this case before us. The actual decision can be distinguished on a very simple ground. The decree was passed in a suit in which the sons and grand-sons had been made parties and the Court which passed the decree expressly exempted them and gave judgment against the father only. It was then sought notwithstanding the decree to bind the sons' and grand-sons' shares in execution, the decree not having been appealed from. I conceive that the decision can be upheld on the ground that even supposing the decree to be wrong, as long as it stood execution could not be sought on the footing that it was to be treated as a nullity in so far as it exonerated the sons and grandsons.

I respectfully agree with the High Court of Bombay that the only course open to a Court in this country is to follow the earlier decisions and hold that the father-manager or the creditor or the Official Assignee standing in his shoes has the power to alienate joint-family property in satisfaction of an antecedent debt of the father-manager not tainted with illegality or immorality. If the Privy Council had thought that the earlier decisions of the Board and the mass of decisions of the Indian Courts which had been built upon them were erroneous or were to be restricted in the manner suggested in Kishen Singh v. Chhajju Singh (14) they could easily have said so, as the whole subject has been before them for review in Sahuram's case and Chetram's case. They would then have pointed out that the dicta of Lord Hobhouse and Lord Buckmaster in Nanomi Babuasin's case and Sripat Singh's case respectively which entirely support the decisions in the Indian Courts down to Sahuram's case, travelled outside their legitimate scope in the decisions involved. They have not done so and until we are given further guidance, I think that our plain duty is to take it as a settled rule that the father during his life-time and any one who during his life-time stands in his shoes can validly alienate the whole of the joint family property in satisfaction of antecedent debts not tainted with illegality or immorality, and it would be travelling outside our legitimate function to consider a rule so well established as abrogated because the supposed basis on which it rests has been disturbed by the more recent pronouncements of the Privy Council.

Since I wrote this judgment and submitted it to my Lord the Chief Justice, I have had the advantage of perusing his judgment, and I desire to say that I respectfully agree with his observation on the case of Kishen Singh v. Chhajju Singh (14).

Krishnan, J.:—In this case the question for our decision is whether the Official Assignee is entitled to sell the whole of the joint ancestral estate of an insolvent Hindu father including the shares of his sons the parties being governed by the Mitakshara Law, in realising the assets of the insolvent for distribution among the creditors. It is not disputed that if the father has the right to sell the whole joint estate to pay off his antecedent debts that power can be exercised by the Official Assignee. This was so decided recently by this Court in Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (12). The question for our consideration then narrows itself into, whether a Hindu father is entitled to alienate the joint ancestral estate of himself and his sons to pay off an antecedent debt of his. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, it has been taken as the settled law in this country that he could do so provided that the debt was not an illegal or immoral one, ever since the decisions of the Privy Council in Girdhari Lal's case and in Nanomi Babuasin's case, the latest ruling of the Privy Council on the point being in Sripat Singh v. Tagore (3). Now it is contended before us that the recent decisions of the Privy Council in Sahuram's case, followed in Chetram's case have altered the law on the point and has abrogated the doctrine of the Hindu father's right to alienate the joint ancestral property of himself and of his sons to pay off a proper antecedent debt of his.

To decide this question we have to consider the case of Sahuram and of Chetram very carefully. Taking Sahuram's case first, that was a suit brought to enforce a mortgage given about 20 years prior to suit by one Bhup Singh to one Bhagirath for Rs. 200 paid in cash. Sahuram the plaintiff obtained the rights under that mortgage by paying off Bhagirath's mortgage and sued Bhup Singh and his sons and grandsons and others to recover Rs. 15,000 by sale of the property mortgaged which consisted of joint ancestral properties belonging to Bhup Singh and his sons and grandsons. It was found by the lower Court that no legal necessity for the mortgage had been proved. Before the Privy Council it was argued, however, that even though legal necessity was not proved as there was no proof by the sons that the debt was of an illegal or immoral character, they had no defence to the suit as the father was entitled to mortgage the ancestral estate for an antecedent debt of his, quite apart from any legal necessity. The Privy Council had to consider then the scope of the doctrine of 'antecedent debt' to see if it applied to the facts of the case and their Lordships held that a mortgage debt borrowed on the security of the ancestral property itself could not be treated in any way as an antecedent debt within the meaning of that doctrine and they accordingly repelled the argument that the case was one to which the doctrine applied. They did not, however, say that the father could not sell or charge the joint ancestral estate where the debt was not only antecedently incurred by him, but incurred wholly apart from the security of the joint property. In fact if they were holding that the father could not sell the joint estate for an antecedent debt of his because the sons' pious duty arose only after the father's death they would have said so in clear terms and there would have been no necessity to consider the scope of the rule of 'antecedent debts.' On the other hand their Lordships have in more than one place in their judgment stated that they make an exception in favour of the father's power to sell for an antecedent debt. Their Lordships on p. 444 of I. L. R. 39 All. 437 say this "although the correct and general principle be that if the debt was not for the benefit of an estate then the manager should have no power either of mortgage or sale of that estate in order to meet such a debt, yet an exception has been made to cover the case of mortgage or sale by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt. This being an exception from a general and sound principle their Lordships are of opinion that the exception should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded." Here they clearly recognise the existence of the rule of antecedent debts and do not in any way abrogate it as suggested. Again on page 447 their Lordships say "In their Lordship's opinion these expressions which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate of the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed as in the state of authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply and to apply (only) to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him, but are joint family property."

I have quoted these passages at length to show that their Lordships expressly exempted from the purview of their decision the exceptional case of the father being able to alienate joint ancestral property of himself and his sons for a proper antecedent debt. How after such expressions of opinion by their Lordships themselves in their judgment the case could be treated as an authority for doing away with the doctrine of antecedent debt altogether, I entirely fail to see.

The main decision in Sahuram's case was that a mortgage on ancestral property could under no circumstances be treated as an antecedent debt to justify an alienation of ancestral property and that beyond the power given to the father by this doctrine to deal with the son's share in the joint estate neither the father nor his creditors could rely merely upon the general rule of the son's pious duty to pay his father's debt to have recourse to the son's share of the joint estate to pay the father's debt. These propositions were re-affirmed in Chetram's case and any attempt like the one made by the Full Bench of this Court in Arumugam Chetty v. Muthu Goundan (16), to treat the ruling of the Privy Council as an obiter dictum must be abandoned. I agree with Coutts Trotter, J., that that Full Bench decision must be treated as erroneous, for though it is not expressly overruled by the Privy Council it is clearly in conflict with their Lordship's view which has been re-affirmed in Chetram's case.

The passage that has given trouble in dealing with the question before us is the one on page 444 where their Lordships say that the prior obligation of the sons to pay off their father's debt cannot and does not arise till the death of the father. Now it is argued that the father's power to sell the ancestral estate including the shares of his sons for an antecedent debt and the creditor's right to have recourse to such estate for payment of his debt are founded upon the theory of the son's pious obligation and if that pious obligation is treated as not arising during the father's life-time the father cannot deal with the son's shares in the joint estate nor the creditor while the father is alive.

The doctrine of 'antecedent debt' was no doubt evolved from the 'pious obligation' theory, see Nanomi's case and that theory originally was that the son was under a duty to save his father's soul from the penalties prescribed by Hindu Sastras for a man who dies without paying off his debts. Such a duty would only arise after the father's death as the Privy Council justly point out. But the theory was extended at a very early stage even by the Hindu Smrithi writers themselves like Vishnu and Yagnavalkya to cases of persons who became sanyasis or suffered from incurable disease or went away to foreign country and so forth. These are all cases where the pious obligation was taken to arise before the death of the debtor-father. Other restrictions and changes were introduced into the doctrine by the case-law of the country till it has now become crystallised as the doctrine of the 'antecedent debt'. That doctrine has become a definite and independent doctrine in Hindu Law which has been acted upon for many years and any attempt to do away with it now by referring to its origin and arguing that its development was illogical can hardly be supported. In the paragraph referred to in page 444 of I. L. R. 39 All. as I read it, the Privy Council was repelling the attempt to base a claim against the sons 'merely' on account of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debt quite apart from any antecedent debt. Their Lordships use the word 'merely' in that paragraph and again lower down use the same word when they say 'accordingly the case founded merely upon pious obligation * * * * * * * fails.' I understand their Lordships to refer in that para, to the attempt to enlarge the scope of the son's liability beyond the limits of the doctrine of 'antecedent debt' by recourse to their pious duty as originally understood. Those observations, in my opinion, do not touch the doctrine of antecedent debt as otherwise the judgment will become self-contradictory.

Chetram's case does not advance the position any further. It was a case of a sale by a father of ancestral estate being set aside. The mortgage which formed part of the consideration for the sale was according to their Lordship's view already expressed in Sahuram's case not an 'antecedent debt.' The balance of the sale price was paid in cash, that of course was not a debt at all. The sale not being for proper legal necessity or for antecedent debts necessarily failed. It was argued that where the sale failed a debt arose, at least as regards the cash paid, which the father was bound to re-pay and that constituted an antecedent debt for which the creditor could have recourse to the ancestral estate and were it not for the fact that their Lordships were abrogating the doctrine of antecedent debts they would have given a decree for that amount against the ancestral estate. This is not so. There was no debt at all in existence to apply the doctrine of antecedent debt, the application of the doctrine of the son's pious duty by itself to make the sons liable during their father's life-time their Lodships had repudiated, see also Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (9).

The conclusions I have come to agree with the conclusions of the Calcutta and Bombay High Court see Madhusudhan Das Mohunt v. Iswari Dasi Debti (1), and Hanumanth Keshinath v. Ganesh Annaji (8) and are in accordance with the previous rulings of this Court, cited by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment. Our attention was, however, drawn to a recent case in the Allahabad Court Kishen Singh v. Chahhajju Singh (14) which is in petitioner's favour. In that case it was decided at the trial of the suit itself that the sons and grandsons who were parties to the litigation and their estate were not liable for the suit debt. The question could then hardly be re-opened in execution. I, therefore, agree with the learned Chief Justice that the decision is right, but in so far as the views of the learned Judges are against the views I have expressed above I regret with all respect I am unable to follow them.

I have come to the conclusion that the Official Assignee can sell the joint ancestral estate of the insolvent and his sons to pay such of the debts of the insolvent which are not shown by the sons to be illegal or immoral debts, and I agree to the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

V. N. V. Order accordingly.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 40 OF 1916.

June 21, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Kincaid, J. C., and Mr. Raymond, A. J. C.

Musammat BHAGBHARI, WIFE OF ALLABUX, AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

Musammat KHATUN, WIDOW OF MAHOMED FAZAL, AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

*Mohammadan Law—Renunciation of inheritance—Bequest as to more than one-third of property-Bequest to heir—Consent of heirs—Divorce in death-illness—Widow, rights of—Marz-ul-Mant, what is—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 127, application of—Undivided property of Mohammadan family—Suit to recover share—"Joint family," meaning of—Adverse possession—Possession of family property by one heir—Hostile title—Exclusion—Non-participation in profits—Wills, interpretation of—Reasonable and unreasonable wills—*Pardanashin ladies, transactions with—Law applicable.

A transfer or a renunciation of a right of inheritance before it has vested is prohibited under the Mohammadan Law. Rights of inheritance only arise after the death of the person whose estate is in question. A Mohammadan cannot renounce his right of inheritance before that right has become vested by the death of the person to whom he is entitled to succeed.

A bequest by a Mohammadan can only take effect to the extent of one-third of the net assets remaining after payment of his funeral expenses and debts, unless the excess is rendered valid by the consent, given after the death of the testator, of the inheritors whose rights are infringed thereby, and a bequest to a person entitled to inherit is void unless the other inheritors give their consent, after the death of the testator, to its taking effect.

A divorce pronounced by a Mohammadan in death-illness or Marz-ul-Mant does not deprive the widow of her right of inheritance, where the husband dies during the period of her Iddut.

BHAGBHARI v. KHATUN

In order to establish Mars-ul-Mami there must be present at least three conditions, (a) proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension or Khouf that at a given time death must be more probable than life, (b) some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person, and (c) some external indicia, chief among which would be the inability to attend to ordinary avocations.

A too narrow a view should not be taken of the doctrine of death-illness.

Article 127 of the schedule to the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit to recover share of undivided property of a family governed by Mohammadan Law. The words "joint family" in the article qualify the word "property" and refer to a joint family as conceived by Hindu Law. They cannot apply to a Mohammadan family as such, where each member holds his share in severalty.

Where on the death of a Mohammadan, the only male member of the family assumes management of the estate, there being other females entitled to shares therein, the natural presumption is that he enters upon the estate as agent or manager for them, and on his own behalf.

Possession or occupation of joint property by one co-sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co-sharer until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by an open assertion of hostile title on the part of the former.

To prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period, it is not sufficient to show that some acts of possession have been done; the possession required must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor; in other words, the possession must be actually visible, exclusive, hostile, and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation

What is sufficient evidence of exclusion must depend on the circumstances of each case. Mere non-participation in rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to an adverse possession, but non-participation or non-possession may in the circumstances of a particular case amount to an adverse possession. Regard must be had to all the circumstances, and a most important element is the length of time.

In the case of a will reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those causes which demand a rigorous scrutiny of wills, of which the opposite can be said that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety.

In the case of a deed executed by a parda-nishin lady the law protects her by demanding that the burden of proof shall in such case rest not with those who attack, but with those who rely upon the deed and it must be proved affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to and really understood by the grantor. It must also be established that it was not signed under duress but by the free and independent exercise of her will

JUDGMENT.

Raymond, A. J. C.—A wealthy and influential Zamindar of Larkana, Mahomed Fazal died on the 24th December 1890, possessed of considerable immoveable and moveable property. The bulk of his property consisted of agricultural land; there were also some dwelling houses and some cattle. He left him surviving, a widow Khatun, an only son Gulam Mahomed who assumed the management of the estate on his father's death, and a daughter Fatma. Gulam Mahomed died on the 11th September 1911 at the age of about 58. Several survey numbers of the agricultural land stood in his name already in his father's life time, and after the latter's death, he admittedly enlarged the estate though the precise extent of his contribution has not been definitely established. Gulam Mahomed left him surviving 4 widows Jamzadi, Bachi, Sabhai and Hayut Khatun, with regard to the last it is alleged that he had divorced her about a fortnight before his death. He also left several daughters, Jamal Khatun, Bhagbari, Umedan, Inayat Khatun, Rahima and Karam Khatun. After Gulam Mahomed's death dissensions arose between the widows with the result that a suit was filed for the partition of the property of Mahomed Fazal and Gulam Mahomed. Plaintiffs in the suit were Khatun the widow of Gulam Mahomed, and Jamal Khatun the daughter of Gulam Mahomed, who died after the institution of the suit, and her legal representatives, her husband Mahomed Parial and her minor son Khudabux, and daughters of Gulam Mahomed and also his sister Fatma. Plaintiffs contended that all the property moveable and immoveable was that of Mahomad Fazul, and asked for its partition and the allotment of their share which they valued at over Rs, 60'000. The suit was principally contested by the widow Bachi, and the daughters Bhagbari, Karam Khatun and Rahim Khatun. Such of the contentions as were taken up in the lower Court and pressed in appeal may be briefly summarized as follows:--(1) The suit is time-barred so far as Khatun the widow of Mahomed Fazul is concerned, and also as regards defendant Fatma who claims a share in the property. (2) Hayat Khatun can claim no share in Gulam Mahomed's estate as she had been divorced. (3) Jamal Khatun and Umedan equally are not entitled to any share, as they are illegitimate, their mother Namul being a mistress of Gulam Mahomed and not his legally wedded wife. (4) That the property in suit is the self-acquired property of Gulam Mahomed. (5) That by his will Gulam Mahomed bequeathed the bulk of his property to Bhagbari, Karam Khatun and Rahim Khatun, to this will the other sharers in the property assented, and executed release-deeds on being assigned certain portion of the property. There were some other contentions taken up in the lower Court by the pleaders of both parties but they have been abandoned in this Court.

The lower Court in an exhaustive and elaborate judgment gave the plaintiffs a preliminary decree for partition as prayed for, and the appellants before us are, the 3 aforesaid daughters of Gulam Mahomed, and the respondents are the plaintiffs in the lower Court and the remaining defendants.

It will be convenient to discuss, in the first instance the contentions raised regarding the right to sue, of Khatun, Fatma, Hayat Khatun and Jamal Khatun, and we shall dispose of them seriatim. It is urged that the claim by Khatun the widow of Mahomed Fazal is time barred, as the suit was filed on the 7th February 1912 and article 144, Indian Limitation Act is applicable as Gulam Mahomed had been in adverse possession for more than 12 years. The lower Court held article 127 to apply and that the suit was within time as it is not proved that Khatun was excluded from the family property or that the exclusion ever came to her knowledge. The parties in this suit are Sunni Mahomedans and we are not prepared to hold that article 127 applies to undivided property of a family governed by Mahomedan Law, and not proved to have adopted as a custom the Hindu Law of the joint family. We are of opinion that the words "Joint Family" as used in the article qualify the word property and a joint family is a peculiar concept of the Hindu Law, and could not apply to a Mahomedan family as such, where each member holds his share in severalty. There is no reference to a joint family or joint family property in books on Mahomedan Law. The substitution in ariticle 127 of the word "person" by Act XV of 1877 for the word "Hindu" in the corresponding article of Act IX of 1871 was not intended to make the article applicable to Mahomedans but to such sects as the Kutchi Memons and Khojas who though Mahomedans have been held to have adopted so much of the custom as included the law of the joint family amongst Hindus, and as a necessary consequence, the law with regard to the joint family property under certain conditions. The Bombay High Court had held in a series of decisions commencing with Sayed Ghulam Hussein v. Bibi Anvarnisa (1), that joint family property includes property left by a deceased Mahomedan and divisible among his heirs until it is actually divided: Bavasha v. Masumsha (2), Abdul Rahim v. Kriparam Daji (3), Fatma Boo v. Ghisan Boo (4). The latest ruling, however, on the applicability of article 127, is the Full Bench decision of 7 Judges reported in Isap Ahmad Mograria v. Abhramji Ahmadji Mograria (5), where the following question was referred to a Full Bench, "Whether article 127 of Act XV of 1877 can apply to the property of a Mahomedan (or any other person, not being a Hindu) and not having been proved to have adopted as a custom the Hindu Law of the joint family and it was held (Shah, J. dissenting) "that it did not." This case was not cited in the lower Court as it was reported after its judgment was given but it brings the Bombay view which was till then discordant in conformity with the views of the other 3 High Courts all of which have held that Article 127 is not applicable to Mahomedans as such : Amme Raham v. Zia Ahmed (6), Abdul Kadar v. Aishamma (7) Mahomed Akram Shah v. Anarbi Chowdhrani (8) As I have remarked above the parties to this suit are Sunni Mahomedans, it is not even alleged much less proved, that they were governed by any special custom under which the rules of Hindu Law as to joint family property would apply. The Mahomedan Law presumes that each share is separate and that each sharer is the separate owner of his share and, therefore, the words "Joint family property" could not apply to the property of a Mahomedan strictly governed by the principles of Mahomedan Law. We are, therefore, of opinion that the lower Court was in error in holding that Article 127 was applicable to the present suit. In arriving at this conclusion it followed a ruling of our Court reported in Chuto Khalikdino v. Haji Ahmed (9). This was a decision of Beaman, J. as Judge of the Sadar Court. His remarks at page 591 of his judgment are significant. He says "In suits by Mahomedans to recover their shares of an inheritance which has remained undivided, the Bombay High Court has in a series of decisions held that article 127 applies. I have always been strongly opposed to that view, because it has always seemed to me illogical and repugnant to theoretical perfection to talk of suits for the recovery of a share in joint family property by persons for whom the legal concept of "joint family" has absolutely no existence. The joint family is a creation of Hindu Law and no other system of jurisprudence, certainly not the Mahomedan, has anything precisely corresponding with it." In holding, however, that a suit by a Mahomedan sharer for partition of inheritance is governed by article 127 he felt that where the law of property is concerned the maxim "Stare decisis" must be respected, and that it has always been the practice of the Courts in Sind for reasons of uniformity and policy to follow the rulings of the Bombay High Court. The same learned Judge, however, in Jan Md Abdullah v. Datu Jafer (10) was of opinion that article 127 does not apply to Mahomedans as such, and he was one of the referring Judges and a member of the Full Bench that decided in Isap Ahmed Magraria v. Ahramji Ahmedji Magrarai (5), that article 127 is not applicable to a Mahomedan. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the judgment in Chuto Khalikdino v. Haji Ahmed (9) holding that a suit for partition of inheritance by a Mahomedan sharer is governed by article 127 is wrong, and we must dissent from it. The next question on the point of limitation that arises so far as the respondents Khatun and Fatma are concerned is whether the suit is time-barred by article 144. On the death of Mahomed Fazul in 1890, his son Gulam Mahomed as the only surviving male member of his family assumed the management of the estate. Both Khatun and Fatma being co-sharers with him in the estate, the natural presumption is that he dealt with the land as manager or agent for them, and on his own behalf : Dhamumal Chandiram and others v. Musmat Kaim Khatun (11), Dhamumal Chandiram v. Musammat Kaim Khatun (12) Now possession or occupation of joint property by one co-sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co-sharer until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by open assertion of hostile title on the part of the former, Ujalbi Bibi v. Umakanta Karmakar (13), Gogendranath Rai v. Baladevdas (14). It was held that "to prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period it is not sufficient to show that some acts of possession have been done ; the possession required must be adequate, in continuity in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor ; in other words, the possession must be actually visible, exclusive, hostile, and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation. Mr. Bhoj Singh, for the appellants has contended that since the death of his father Mahomed Fazul, Gulam Mahomed has dealt with the property as his own and that Khatun and Fatma were excluded from possession of the property both moveable and immoveable. Testing these assertions in the light of the evidence on the record, neither adverse possession by Gulam Mahomed nor exclusion of Khatun has been proved. Khatun states in her evidence that she lived with Gulam Mahomed till his death. She admits that after her husband's death she lived with her brothers for some time owing to some disagreement between one of her brothers and Gulam Mahomed but that she returned as soon as a reconciliation had been effected. Apparently she was in the family house during the period of Gulam Mohomed's illness and at the time of his death, as she describes in detail his condition during this time. In her cross-examination she does not seem to have been asked any question which would indicate any knowledge on her part of her exclusion from the family property; all that she was asked was whether she had demanded her share from Gulam Mahomed and she replied in the negative, but this does not prove either adverse possession on the part of Gulam Mahomed or the exclusion of Khatun, for as long as her wants were supplied she may not have thought it necessary to acquire separate possession of her share. In the written statement filed by the appellants, beyond stating that the suit is time-barred, no particulars are given when Khatun left the family house or of the nature of the adverse possession by Gulam Mahomed. The burden of proof lies on those that assert that the possession of Gulam Mahomed was adverse to Khatun. Mr. Bhojsingh has mainly relied on the following statement in the will of Gulam Mahomed in Ex. 238. "I have a step-mother Musammat Khatun who went away from the house about 22 years ago. Besides, my father Mahomed Fazul had also made a will that if Musammat Khatun left the house she will have no interest in the property." Mr. Wadhumal for the respondents has contended that this statement in the will is inadmissible under section 32, Indian Evidence Act, and, we are of opinion that Mr. Wadhumal's contention must be upheld. Statements of deceased persons under section 32, Indian Evidence Act, are admissible if certain conditions are fulfilled, and the statements in Gulam Mahomed's will as to the time when Khatun left the house or as to the restriction imposed upon her by a will of Mahomed Fazul which is not produced, do not fall within any of the clauses of section 32 Indian Evidence Act, cf. Farhari Hari Vaidya v. Bal Krishna Sansarikar (15). Mr. Bhojsing next urged that the appropriation of the profits of the property by Gulam Mahomed was one of the indicia of adverse possession particularly in view of the length of time during which Khatun was excluded from participation in the rents and profits. He relied upon Gungadhar alias Buburav Balvant and others v. Parshram Bhalchandra and others (16) where it was held that sole possession by one tenant-in-common continuously for a long period without any claim or demand by any person claiming under the other tenants-in-common is evidence from which an actual ouster of the other tenants-in-common may be presumed. But it was also held in this very case that to constitute adverse possession as between tenants-in-common there must be an exclusion or an ouster. See also on this point Ayenrnusra Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf and others (17) followed in Govinda Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Dina Nath Acharjee (18) where it was said "What is sufficient evidence of exclusion must depend on the circumstances of each case. Mere non-participation in rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to an adverse possession, but such non-participation or non-possession may in the circumstances of a particular case amount to an adverse possession. Regard must be had to all the circumstances, and a most important element is the length of time." It must further be remembered that in the present appeal we are dealing with a parda-nashin woman, and the property in which she had a share which was being managed by her step-son, the only male member of the family. She had no children of her own whose interests she had to protect and before the Court can regard the appropriation of profits as constituting adverse possession, it must be satisfied that there was an indication of a denial of right in Khatun to receive them. Mr. Bhojsing relied very strongly on a judgment of this Court in appeal No. 10 of 1916 which turned on the applicability of Article 144 of the Limitation Act and the conditions under which adverse possession may be proved. He contended that the circumstances of the case which he cited were analogous to the present case and that we should be governed by its decision. As the judgment in appeal No. 10 of 1916 was delivered by a Bench and one of the members composing it is a member of this Bench it would be useful to point out the essential difference between it and the present appeal. A careful perusal of the judgment in appeal No. 10 of 1916 discloses the existence of several circumstances which are absent in the present case. It is true the plaintiff was a parda-nishin woman and was a co-sharer in the estate in which she claimed her share and had been out of possession for a considerable length of time. But here the analogy ends. The surrounding circumstances which are really the main test to apply in the absence of any specific direct evidence were found to be so strong and so many in favour of adverse possession that the Court held adverse possession to be proved. It was found that the plaintiff on her marriage left the family house and resided with her husband in another house that was bought by him, it was not alleged that any maintenance was given to her out of the family estate, she admitted she earned her living by making clothes and her son added to the income by driving a hackney carriage, after her husband's death she sells her house in order to obtain the means of livelihood and lives in a rented house, it was proved that the defendants were dealing with the property for some years as exclusive owner, it was also proved that she attested a document where a part of the property was dealt with by the defendant as his own and it was held to be unlikely that she did not know the nature of the document, all these circumstances determined the Court in coming to the conclusion that there was adverse possession.

In the present case all that appellants can and do rely upon as proving the exclusion of Khatun is the non-participation in the rents and profits of the immoveable property for a period of 20 years, her residing outside the family house and the absence of any claim to maintenance out of the family estate. But in the first instance we are not at all impressed with the evidence on the record on which the appellants rely in proof of these assertions. When I pointedly asked Mr. Bhojsing to specify in detail the evidence on which he relied in proof of adverse possession, he referred to the passage in the will of Gulam Mahomed already adverted to as inadmissible and the evidence of Bachi and Ata Mahomed. Now Bachi is a witness very much interested in the result of this case as the exclusion of Khatun and some of the other co-sharers proves highly beneficial to her daughter Karam Khatun's interests in the estate, one of the beneficiaries under the will and it appears to us that she has been the moving spirit in engineering the defence in this case. She has admitted in her evidence that she and Bhagbari a daughter of Gulam Mahomed and another beneficiary under the will " are managing the litigation together in consultation." The passage in her evidence on which Mr. Bhojsing relies is the following "Khatun was not in the Kot when Gulam Mahomed died. She then lived in her father's house. She had left the Kot before I came in after my marriage," and in Ata Mahomed's evidence the following passage is relied upon. " I have been visiting the family for the past 20 or 25 years. During that period I did not find Khatun living there." This last witness is referred to as the family priest and has apparently had a good share of luck since Gulam Mahomed's death. He states that Bhagbari has given him in charity 10 jirebs out of the property of Gulam Mahomed, 5 of which he has disposed of for Rs. 500, he has also received a mare which he describes as worth Rs. 50 and one was given to his brother worth Rs. 80, he also got two buffaloes in charity and a full dress and bedding worth about Rs. 40. He adds that since the death of Gulam Mahomed, Bachi, Bhagbari and Khatun visit him to obtain his blessing. Even if we were to accept this evidence in its entirety all that it proves is that Khatun has not resided in the family house for a period of about 20 years, and not a single question has been asked of Bachi in cross-examination as to how Khatun was maintained during this period. On the other hand there is a fair amount of evidence which is to the effect that Khatun lived in the family house till the death of Gulam Mahomed, occasionally visiting her parents' house. Vide Allahdino Ex. 262, Nizamdin the brother of Khatun Ex. 298, Sabhai Ex. 456 and Khatun herself Ex. 312. It appears to us that adverse possession has not been proved as against Khatun and her suit is within time.

Next with regard to the question whether Fatma's claim to share is statute-barred. Mr. Bhojsing contented that her case is on all fours with Bibi Hafiza v. Lalsha and others referred to above. Fatma was a sister of Gulam Mahomed and was married to one Allahbux who died about 20 years before the suit. Adverse possession as against her is based on her living in her husband's house and non-participation in the profits of the immoveable property belonging to her father. It is also urged that the fact of Fatma not being examined as a witness to repudiate the allegation of her being excluded from the family estate is a strong piece of evidence in favour of adverse possession. Now it appears to us that if Fatma had lost all claim to any share in the estate by the Statute of Limitation, then it is difficult to explain the clause in the will of Gulam Mahomed referring to her executing a release-deed relinquishing the larger rights to which she was presumably entitled. The testator must have recognised that she was entitled to her share in the estate according to Mahomedan Law, and even if Gulam Mahomed was not the author of the will those that were instrumental in bringing it into existence, must have felt the necessity of binding Fatma by a declaration that she waived all her rights to the property, a proceeding which was perfectly unnecessary if Fatma's claim was time-barred. Probably Fatma never urged her claim to any share in the estate during Gulam Mahomed's life-time as the consciousness of her own brother managing the estate, and her position in life as a pardanishin woman may well have been two important factors in influencing her conduct. There is no evidence on the record to show that her right to a share in the estate was ever denied or that she was expressly excluded from participating in the profits of the property. She was apparently on affectionate terms with her brother, admittedly she was in the family house at the time of his death and Sobhai Ex. 406 states that " Fatma lived in the Kot for 2 or 3 months during the illness of Gulam Mahomed and all the females had their meals together. " In short, the evidence as to adverse possession against Fatma is based on her living in her husband's house and not in the family house since her marriage and on the allegation that she has not obtained any maintenance from the estate We do not consider these circumstances sufficient to prove adverse possession and as we are far from being satisfied that Fatma was excluded from the family estate, we are of opinion that equally with Khatun her claim to a share is not time-barred.

The next question for consideration is the exclusion of Hayat Khatun from a share in the estate, however, on a different ground. Appellants contend that on the 27th August, Gulam Mahomed who died about a fortnight later, executed a divorce-deed which was attested by several witnesses and registered, and which recited the verbal divorce given on the 25th August, that is two days previously, to Hayat Khatun by throwing three clods of earth at her, the said divorce being irrevocable. Respondents argue that even if the verbal divorce and the written deed in confirmation thereof be proved, yet the divorce is not valid as Gulam Mahomed died on the 11th September 1919, that is, within the period of Iddut, and as thedivorce was pronounced on his death-bed, it has not the effect of depriving Hayat Khatun of her right to a share in her husband's estate. The question may be thus formulated:—" Was the divorce pronounced during Gulam Mahomed's death-bed illness, if so what is its legal effect on Hayat Khatun's right to inherit, in view of the fact that Gulam Mahomed died during the period of her Iddut? There is no dispute and there can be none that where a Mahomedan husband in health pronounces an irrevocable divorce and dies within the period of his wife's Iddut, she has no claim to inherit to her husband. What is then the effect of a divorce in death-illness or Marz-ul-maut as it is styled in Mahomedan Law ? The leading case on the subject in the Bombay High Court is that of Sarabai v. Rabiabai (19) where it was held that in order to establish Marz-ul-maut there must be present at least three conditions :—

(1) Proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension or Khouf that at a given time death must be more probable than life ;

(19) 30 B. 537 ; 8 Bom. L. R. 35.

(2) There must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person ;

(3) There must be some external indicia chief among which would be the inability to attend to ordinary avocations.

The conditions here laid down are gathered from the authorities and text books on Mahomedan Law and were adopted as a correct exposition of the Law in a subsequent case Rashid Karamali v. Sherbanoo (20). There is an earlier ruling to the same effect Fatma Bibi v. Ahmed (21), confirmed on appeal to the Privy Council. There is equally a consensus of opinion in the commentaries on Mahomedan Law that if a divorce is pronounced in death-illness, and the husband dies before the completion of the wife's Iddut, the wife is entitled to inherit to him. Wilson's Mahomedan Law 178, Tyabji's Mahomedan Law 151 and Mulla's Mahomedan Law 144.

Adopting these principles we pass on to the consideration of the evidence on this point. Unfortunately there is no medical evidence on the record which would help us to form an opinion as to the nature of the disease that Gulam Mahomed was suffering from for a period of about 7 months prior to his death. There is evidence to show that he was treated by an Indian physician but he has not been examined as a witness. The evidence on the record describing Gulam Mahomed's ailments and his physical condition at the time he pronounced the divorce is most conflicting, undoubtedly due to the fact that practically all the witnesses in the case whether for the appellants or the respondents seem to be inspired by the one motive of doing as much damage as possible to the opponent's case. Witness Allahdino Ex. 262 states in his evidence "Gulam Mahomed was ailing for long. He suffered from diabetes. I visited him to enquire about his health." Nizamudin Ex. 298 states "Gulam Mahomed lay ill for 7 months before his death." Sher Mahomed Ex. 299 says "Gulam Mahomed lay ill for 6 or 7 months before his death. During the last month or two he did not come out of the Kots. Khatun Ex. 312 states "Gulam Mahomed lay ill for about 7 months. During the first 3 months he did not move out of the otak and during the last 3 months he could not leave his family house. He was moved by others for all his necessary purposes during that period. He was bed-ridden all the time. He was not conscious during the last 14 or 15 days of his illness. Pir Mian Sala visited Gulam Mahomed during his last illness. He was not conscious then. He could recognise a little and talk very feebly. Gulam Mahomed had fever in his illness. He could speak very feebly till his death." Rahim Khan Ex. 314 says "Gulam Mahomed was ill for about 7 months before his death. During the last 2 or 3 months he was lying unconscious. He was moved about by others. He did not take any food. He was suffering from continuous fever. Sher Mahomed Shah once visited him and declared the case hopeless about 15 or 20 days before his death. Pir Allamdin treated him." These are the witnesses that were examined on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents in the lower Court. Now on behalf of the defendants-appellants on the same point we have first of all the Sub-Registrar Rijhumal. He says "When Gulam Mahomed admitted the execution of the will and the divorce-deed he was conscious. When I went in he sat up on his cot and greeted me. He also shook hands with me. He presented the divorcedeed himself. I enquired from him about his health and asked what he was ailing from. He replied I have fever and suffering from heavy breathing and I have been ailing for the last 8 or 10 months. He did not appear to me to have got emaciated. His body looked well nourished." Aishising Ex. 341, the writer of various documents produced in the case was with Gulam Mahomed for about 3 days taking instructions and drawing up the respective deed and he states that during this period Gulam Mahomed was in his proper senses. But he also adds that when the messenger Total came to call him he told him that Gulam Mahomed was ill and unable to move about and, therefore, needed his services in the house. Gulam Rasul Ex. 343 says "Gulam Mahomed was ailing for about 12 months before his death. He had bad digestion and vomited his food." Ramu Ex. 354 states "Gulam Mahomed lay ill for 2 or 3 months before his death and was bed-ridden." Raman Ex. 379 states "Gulam Mahomed's illness lasted for 4 or 5 months. He suffered from diabetes. He passed the whole period of 4 or 5 months within the Kot. He had no fever but he got emaciated from day to day." Amul Ex. 381 states, " Gulam Mahomed lay ill for 2 or 4 months before his death. I attested the deeds. Gulam Mahomed was ill." Bago Ex. 383 states " Gulam Mahomed remained ill for 6 or 7 months and was all the time within the Kot." There are three more witnesses Sabhai, Jamzadi and Ali Mahomed whose interests in the case are identical with those of the plaintiffs-respondents who say that Gulam Mahomed's illness lasted for about 7 months and that during this period he never left the family house, that he was very much emaciated and was scarcely in his senses during the last 3 months of his life.

With this resume of the evidence as to the physical and mental condition of Gulam Mahomed at the time he pronounced the divorce, one circumstance appears abundantly clear and that is, his inability to attend to his ordinary avocations, and thus fulfilling one of the conditions of Marz-ul-maut. With regard to the first of the conditions whether there was a preponderance of apprehension that at a given time death was more probable than life, there is the important consideration, apart from the direct evidence, that on the 29th August 1911 Gulam Mahomed is said to have made a will. Now this will was either the result of free and independent action on the part of Gulam Mahomed or had been fabricated at a time when the prospect of Gulam Mahomed's early death was extremely probable. In either event there was an apprehension that death was more probable than life. In spite of the conflicting evidence on the record it may be taken as established that Gulam Mahomed had been ailing for a period of about 6 or 7 months immediately prior to his death and that there was no indication of any improvement in his physical condition, on the contrary there were signs of approaching dissolution. He was a man of about 58 years of age and this would be regarded as old age for some of the Sind Zamindars with a multiplicity of wives and accustomed to an indolent existence. Obviously he was unable to move out of his otak else he would not have sent for the Sub-Registrar to the family house. Whether we accept the evidence that he was suffering from diabetes or consumption or fever accompanied by heavy breathing, one thing is clear that he never rallied up to the day of his death and must have apprehended that his death was near. Some of the witnesses for the appellants have said that for 2 or 3 months before his death Gulam Mahomed was bed-ridden, Gulam Rasul and Rahman say he got emaciated from day to day thus confirming the evidence of Khatun on the point. The only evidence that may have appealed to us of a disinterested character is that of the Sub-Registrar, but for several reasons which will be alluded to later we hesitate to accept it. We feel in short that the circumstances of the case and the evidence on the record clearly established (1) the illness of Gulam Mahomed (2) the expectation of a fatal issue and (3) his inability to attend to his ordinary avocations. As was said in Hasarat Bibi and others v. Gulam Jafer alias Fukhrullah and others (22) too narrow a view must not be taken of the doctrine of death-illness, and in this case the doctrine was stated as follows " was the disease of such a nature or character as to induce in the person suffering, the belief that death would be caused thereby or to engender an apprehension of death and was the illness such as to incapacitate him from the pursuit of his ordinary avocations or standing up for prayers, a circumstance which might create in the mind of the sufferer an apprehension of death? We agree with the view of the Lower Court that the divorce was pronounced in death-illness and as Gulam Mahomed died within the period of Hayat Khatun's Iddut, she is entitled to inherit to his estate.

The exclusion of plaintiff No. 3 Jamal Khatun from a share in Gulam Mahomed's estate is based on the allegation that both she and Umedan were the illegitimate daughters of Gulam Mahomed as their mother Namoi was a mistress of Gulam Mahomed and the question for determination is whether Namoi was a legally wedded wife of Gulam Mahomed or was only his mistress. Appellants have strongly relied upon two pieces of documentary evidence in the case in proof of their assertion that Namoi was a concubine of Gulam Mahomed. The first is a passage in the will of Gulam Mahomed Ex. 328 which is as follows "Musammat Namoi remained with me like a concubine for about 5 or 6 years. I had no Nikah or temporary marriage with her but she also becoming disobedient went away from me about 24 years ago. She has 2 daughters. Leaving them with me she went away. Considering myself liable for maintaining these poor girls I duly brought them up and looking to the necessity of getting them married, I had them married among my poor caste brothers." The next piece of documentary evidence is a statement of the witness Rahim Khan made on the 28th May 1912 before the Mukhtyarkar of Mirokhan where it appears that he said "I do not know that Gulam Mahomed had any Nikah with Musammat Namoi but she was kept by him." Taking the latter statement first, this very witness Rahim Khan has stated in his deposition in Court "I know Namoi. She is the Nikah wife of Gulam Mahomed. I read the Nikah 34 or 35 years ago. Since the Nikah she lived with Gulam Mahomed as his wife." This was in examination-in-chief, and when confronted in cross-examination with his statement before the Mukhtyarkar, he had the impudence to reply "I made the statement which is not true because Bachi made me do it on the faith of the Koran." I shall discuss the unreliable character of this witness later on when commenting on the will, but his statement before the Mukhtyarkar may easily be brushed aside. With regard to the reference in the will to Namoi being the mistress of Gulam Mahomed it appears intrinsically improbable that after the lapse of about 30 years a respectable Mahomedan gentleman should publicly proclaim, that Namoi was his mistress and that his two daughters by her, Jamal Khatun and Umedan whom he had reared in his own house with his legitimate children and had them married respectably, were not his daughters. One fails to understand what possible advantage Gulam Mahomed was to gain by this open declaration, Namoi being dead, and the daughters recognised by the world as the legitimate children of Gulam Mahomed. Further I have no hesitation in saying that the words in the will "I had them married to my poor caste brothers" are not only untrue but it is highly improbable that Gulam Mahomed would have made a statement of this description. Jamal Khatun was married about 25 years before the suit to Mahomed Parial, and the latter's sister Khatun was given in exchange to Mahomed Fazul. Mahomed Parial must have, therefore, been fairly respectable in life and was not likely to take in marriage in exchange for his sister an illegitimate daughter of Gulam Mahomed. Umedan the other daughter of Namoi was married to Ali Mahomed who was a cousin of Gulam Mahomed's and who has stated in his evidence that he would not have married Umedan if she were the daughter of a mistress of Gulam Mahomed.

A very important piece of evidence in the case in favour of Namoi being the legally wedded wife of Gulam Mahomed is to be found in the deposition of the witness Raman Ex. 379. He was examined on behalf of the appellants in the lower Court and there can be no doubt to judge by his evidence that he is a witness deeply interested in Bachi. He has stated in his evidence that "both Jamal Khatun and Umedan were Gulam Mahomed's daughters by his wife Namoi. Namoi his wife also lived with him within the Kot. So also the daughters who continued to live with him even after their mother left the Kot." It is true that he added in his re-examination that he was not present at the Nikah of Namoi but his acquaintance with the family dates from a time before the death of Mahomed Fazul and he seems to know a good deal of Gulam Mahomed and his family affairs. Animated with the motive of helping Bachi in this case it is difficult to imagine this witness describing Namoi as the legally wedded wife of Gulam Mahomed if it were not the truth. According to the evidence, Namoi must have been brought to the Kot during the life-time of Fazul Mahomed and it is most unlikely that the latter would consent to his son bringing in a mistress and placing her on an equal footing with his own or his sons' Nikah wives. Khatun states that both Mahomed Fazul and Gulam Mahomed were too respectable to admit a mistress into the Zenana. It is naturally difficult to bring direct evidence of a Nikah that took place about 24 years back, Rahim Khan deposes to having read the Nikah but unfortunately it is difficult to place any reliance on his evidence in view of his interest in the case and contradictory statements that he has made in respect of other matters. There is, however, one witness Ex. 20, Nizamuddin Ex. 298, who states that he was present at the Nikah of Namoi and that the Nikah was read by Rahim Khan. He is 70 years of age and though he is a brother of Musammat Khatun the widow of Mahomed Fazul, no sufficient reason appears for him to describe Namoi as the wife of Gulam Mahomed if she were only his concubine. In the absence of any satisfactory evidence to displace the presumption that does arise from the various circumstances in the case that Namoi was the Nikah wife of Gulam Mahomed, we cannot but hold it proved that Namoi was the legally married wife of Gulam Mahomed, and consequently her daughters Jamal Khatun and Umedan are entitled to a share in the estate of Gulam Mahomed.

We now turn to the Will, Ex. 328, purporting to be executed by Gulam Mahomed which is an important document in this case. It is dated the 29th August 1911 and was registered on the same day at the Kot of Gulam Mahomed where the Sub-Registrar Rijhumal had been taken for the purpose. It bears the attestation of the following persons Gulam Rasul, Ramun and Total of whom the first two only have been examined as witnesses, in the case. It is also signed by the writer Aishising and the Sub-Registrar Rijhumal. By this will the bulk of the property is bequeathed by the testator to Bhagbari and Rahim Khatun the daughters of Gulam Mahomed by his predeceased wife Khatun, and to his daughter Karam Khatun by his wife Bachi. Further, by the same Will, to the following undoubted sharers in the estate, viz. the widows of Gulam Mahomed, Jamzadi, Bachi, and Sabhai, his daughter Inayat Khatun and his sister Fatma, certain small portions of the immoveable property have been bequeathed which are admittedly far below their legitimate shares in the property according to Mahomedan Law. The daughters of Namoi have been excluded from any participation in the inheritance apparently on the ground that the testator regarded them as illegitimate, and equally Hayat Khatun who the testator alleged had been divorced by him. Now the 5 persons mentioned above in the Will to whom much less than their legitimate share has been allotted have executed release-deeds Exs. 418 to 422, which are all in the same form. These also have been attested and registered, and bear the same date as the will, 29th August 1911. The executants of these release-deeds declare thereby their assent to the terms of the Will and their satisfaction with the shares allotted to them, and the release-deeds further contain an undertaking by them not to dispute the Will or prefer any claim to any other portion of the property which is admitted to be exclusively that of Gulam Mahomed. At this stage the third document may also be referred to viz., the divorce-deed Ex. 316, which is also registered and attested and is dated the 29th August 1911 and confirms the divorce of Hayat Khatun on the 25th August 1911.

All the three documents are written by the same Munshi Aishising and registered by Rijhumal at the Kot of Gulam Mahomed.

Now, holding as we do, that Khatun's share in the estate is not time-barred, that Hayat Khatun is entitled to a share in the estate for reasons set forth above, and that Jamal Khatun and Umedan are equally entitled to their portion in the estate as the legitimate daughters of Gulam Mahomed, there arises the initial objection to the Will, that so far as their shares in the estate are concerned, they remain unaffected by the Will. It is not alleged that they ever assented to the Will or consented to validate any legacy exceeding the legal third and they can certainly now come forward in spite of the Will and claim their legitimate share. Further, as regards the assent to the terms of the Will given by the various executants of the release-deeds, it is a well-known rule of Mohamedan Law that bequests by a Moslem can only take effect to the extent of one-third of the net assets remaining after payment of his funeral expenses and debts, unless the excess is rendered valid by the consent, given after the death of the testator, of the inheritors whose rights are infringed thereby, and a bequest to a person entitled to inherit is void unless the other inheritors give their consent, after the death of the testator, to its taking effect. The release-deeds that have been filed in the present case and which embody an assent to the terms of the Will by the executants are executed on the 29th August 1911 whereas, Gulam Mahomed died on the 11th September 1911, and a consent by the other heirs before the death of the testator is of no avail. Now what do the release-deeds amount to? They are a transfer or renunciation of a right of inheritance before it has vested. But this is clearly prohibited under the Mahomedan Law. Rights of inheritance only arise after the death of the person whose estate is in question. A Mahomedan cannot renounce his right of inheritance before that right had become vested by the death of the person to whom he is entitled to succeed. In the present case the release-deeds except in the case of Fatma mean in point of fact the giving up that which had no existence. As was said in Asa Beevi and others v. S. K. M. Karuppan Chetty (23), " there is a large preponderance of authority in favour of the view that a transfer or a renunciation of the right of inheritance before that right vests is prohibited under the Mahomedan Law." In Sumsuddin Gulam Hussein v. Abdul Husein Kalimuddin (24), it was held " that the chance of an heir apparent succeeding to an estate is under Mahomedan Law neither transferable nor releasable." At page 171 of the same case Sir Lawrence Jenkins says as follows "By the Transfer of Property Act it is provided that the chance of an heir apparent succeeding to an estate cannot be transferred [section 6 (a)]. It is true that in section 2 (d) it is enacted that nothing in the second chapter of the Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Mahomedan Law but so far from there being any rule that conflicts with this provision, such a transfer would seem to be opposed to the principles of Mahomedan Law." See also on this point Macnaghten's principles of Mahomedan Law Case 11, Tyabji's Mahomedan Law, page 282, para. 371, and Roland Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Mahomedan Law, pages 255, 254. The release-deeds, therefore in the present case being transfers by heirs expectant are not binding on the executants.

Mr. Bhoj Singh undoubtedly recognized the futility of establishing assent to the terms of the Will by the release-deeds executed in Gulam Mahomed's life-time and was, therefore, compelled to call in aid the indications of assent given both directly and after Gulam Mahomed's death. For this purpose he relied, in the first instance, on certain statements made by the executants of the release-deeds, on the 29th September 1911, that is, after Gulam Mahomed's death and recorded by Tapedar Mahomed Maluk. These statements are exs. 362 to 365 in the case and are substantially in the same form to the effect that the deponents have been given their share in the land in the life-time of Gulam Mahomed, that they have executed release-deeds and that only the property mentioned in them should be entered in their names, and that they have no concern with the other property. The ladies concerned admit their thumb marks having been taken to these statements by the Tapedar but with the exception of Bachi, declare that they did not understand the purport of these statements as they were not read out then and that they were under the impression that their names were being entered in the Land Records as the heirs of Gulam Mahomed. However, apart from their assertion of their ignorance of the true character of the statements to which they appended their thumb marks, there is the important point to be considered as to their social status and the circumstances under which their assent was secured. It appears to us as established beyond all reasonable doubt, despite the stray bits of evidence emanating from a few interested witnesses, that the women-folk of Mahomed Fazul and Gulam Mahomed may be correctly described as parda-nishin, with the possible exception of Bachi who too observed parda as long as Gulam Mahomed lived. Now as was said by the Privy Council in Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (25). " In the case of a deed executed by a parda-nishin lady the law protects her by demanding that the burden of proof shall in such case rest not with those who attack, but with those who rely upon the deed and it must be proved affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to and really understood by the grantor. It must also be established that it was not signed under duress but by the free and independent exercise of her will." In another Privy Council case, Shambati Koeri v. Jago Bibi (26) it was said that "It is a well known rule of this Committee that in the case of deeds and powers executed by parda-nishin ladies, it is requisite that those who rely upon them should satisfy the Court that they had been explained and understood by those who executed them. These observations are of particular significance in this case both in respect of the release-deeds and the statements recorded by the Tapedar. Now in the present case we have to depend practically on the evidence of this Tapedar in determining the question whether the ladies whose statements were recorded by him clearly understood what it was to which they subscribed their assent, and his evidence appears to us of a highly suspicious character. The Sub-Judge has discussed the evidence of this witness at considerable length and we entirely concur with him in his conclusions that very little reliance can be placed on the evidence of Mahomed Maluk, the Tapedar. We need only refer to two points in his evidence which appear to us to sufficiently discredit him, the first is, his remarkable answer to the very first question in cross-examination that "I recorded the statements for my personal satisfaction and in order that none of the parties concerned should subsequently change. They were ladies and I wished to bind them." It is inconceivable why this witness should display such feverish anxiety in binding these unfortunate women and for that purpose depart from the practice which has the sanction of the Law on presentation of documents for making the requisite entries. When Bhagbhari presented the documents to him it was his duty, as he himself admits, to issue a notice under r. 5 to the other side to file any objections that they may have, and this brings us to the second reason for doubting his evidence, that not only he did not issue the notice which he knew the Law required of him, but he proceeded to the Kot to record the statements of these women before the expiry of 30 days allowed for the filing of objections. Further the two attesting witnesses to these statements are Atta Mahomed and Ramun, the latter being sent for by Maluk, and Atta Mahomed was in the Kot when Maluk arrived. Atta Mahomed states in his evidence that the Tapedar did not read out the statements to the ladies other than the beneficiaries under the Will, and Ramun at first stated the same though later on he tried to improve upon his previous version. Both these witnesses have manifested keen interest in attempting to support the appellant's case by not over-scrupulous means, and in their dealings with parda-nishin ladies who apparently had no independent advice or guidance, we are not at all satisfied that the statements recorded by the Tapedar were understood by and explained to the ladies. The probabilities are that the ladies were under the impression that owing to the death of Gulam Mahomed their names were to be entered in the Khata Badal as his heirs. Despite, therefore, the admission by some of the ladies that they affixed their thumb marks to the statements recorded by the Tapedar, we are not prepared to hold it proved that the nature of the document has been explained to them, and, therefore, any assent to the terms of the Will after the death of Gulam Mahomed has not been proved. We may further remark at this stage that Fatma after the death of her father Mahomed Fazul had a vested interest in the property to the extent of her share under Mahomedan Law, and it is difficult to understand her relinquishment of rights that had accrued to her even before Gulam Mahomed's death.

It was further argued by Mr. Bhojsing that by their conduct the ladies had indirectly assented to the terms of the Will, and this conduct consisted in their taking possession of the lands awarded by the release-deeds and managing them and appropriating the produce thereof, and though no doubt assent indirectly given may be a good assent in the eye of Law : Ghulam Kadir v. Musammat Sardozi (27), Doulatram Khushalchand v. Abdul Kayum Nurudin (28), yet in the present case we are of opinion that the evidence on this point is too meagre to indicate any assent on the part of the ladies. What is relied upon is that payments of land-revenue were made by certain persons in respect of the lands allotted by the release-deeds to the respective ladies and it is contended that these payments were made on behalf of the latter. There is no satisfactory evidence on the record to establish that the payments of land revenue were authorised by the ladies whose names were entered in the Land Register and there is nothing to prevent the payments being made by persons independently of the person in whose name the land stands. The ladies deny that they ever took possession of the land referred to in the release-deeds, and we are not prepared to hold that any assent to the terms of the will was indirectly given. The question however, still remains, is the will Ex. 328 a genuine document? Of the heirs of Ghulam Mahomed interested in upholding the will are his widow Bachi, the mother of Karam Khatun one of the beneficiaries under the will, and Ghulam Mahomed's daughters by his predeceased wife Khatun, Bhagbari and Rahim Khatun who equally benefit under the will. In bequeathing to these three daughters the substantial part of his property, the testator gives as a reason "they have served me well and I have a liking for them". Now by the will as already remarked, Hayat Khatun and the daughters of Namoi are entirely excluded from inheritence for reasons stated above, and as regards Hayat Khatun and Namoi the testator declares that they have been disobedient to him and failed to act in conformity with his wishes, but why the daughters of Namoi whom he had maintained and married respectably in life, and who we have held to be his legitimate daughters should be entirely debarred from inheritance is a matter for considerable surprise. But even assuming that the testator had grounds for excluding these, it is difficult to appreciate the reason for the marked difference in his treatment of the beneficiaries under the will and the others who apparently had been faithful to him till his death. One may well understand the allotment of a small share in the property to Bachi, as her daughter Karam Khatun acquires a very substantial share in the estate, but why allot to the two widows Jamzadi and Sabhai, what may comparatively be deemed a scanty pittance barely sufficient to enable them to live in comfort, why treat the sister Fatma similarly when she had already acquired a large share in her father's estate on his death, and why finally discriminate between his daughter Inayat Khatun and the other daughters that benefit under the will? The evidence does not disclose any reason for the inequitable treatment as revealed by the allotment of about 1,800 acres of land to the three daughters under the will, and the grant of about 20 acres to the widows Jamzadi and Sabhai, about 50 acres to Inayat Khatun and about 30 acres to Fatma. In a case of Jagarni Kunwar v. Durga Prasad (29), the Privy Council laid down that "In the case of a will reasonable, natural, and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of which the opposite can be said, namely that they are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety." We are of opinion that it may well be predicated of this will that it is unnatural, unreasonable, and improper and hence calls for a rigorous scrutiny.

The will has been attested by Gulam Rasul, Ramu and Total. The writer is Munshi Aishising, who also wrote out the divorce deed and the 5 release-deeds. This munshi has admitted that he was convicted of forgery in respect of a bond, though he adds that it was 24 or 25 years ago. He was not acquainted with Gulam Mahomed before he went to the Kot and was introduced by Rahim Khan to him. Total had gone to call him to the Kot to write the deeds and both he and Sub-Registrar Rijhumal, had come together. Now was it a mere coincidence that of all the bond writers in Miro Khan, and admittedly there were others, the very man that had been convicted of forgery in respect of a bond that he had written should be selected by Total, and introduced by Rahim Khan who in all probability must have been well acquainted with the character of Aishising. The conduct of Rahim Khan in connection with the various documents in the case and the nature of his evidence stamp him as a clearly unrealiable witness. He was a cousin of Gulam Mahomed and in fact the only male agnate relation in Gulam Mahomed's family. In terms of the will the three daughters of Gulam Mahomed, the beneficiaries under the will, are entrusted to the guardianship of Rahim Khan and he is authorised by the will to have the land cultivated and to attend the Government calls, and there is a declaration in the will that "he as the owner like me will look after my property and my daughters." There can be no doubt that in these circumstances Rahim Khan was entrusted with the management of the whole estate of Gulam Mahomed both moveable and immoveable. Now Rahim Khan has stated in his evidence that "Bachi had promised on the Koran to marry me and allow me to have the whole property according to the terms of the will. She has not yet married me. She is not now on good terms with me." In respect of the witness Rahim Khan, Bachi has stated as follows "Rahim Khan was on good terms with us till the death of Gulam Mahomed. He quarrelled with us one or two months later. There was no actual quarrel, but he would not look after us." Though it is difficult to say what truth there is in either of these pieces of evidence, there can be no doubt that Rahim Khan and Bachi were on good terms prior to the death of Gulam Mahomed and even for some time after it. The suit was filed in February 1912 and it was in May of the same year that Rahim Khan made a statement Ex. 315 before the Mukhtyarkar that Namoi was the mistress of Gulam Mahomed, a statement which he afterwards retracted, and explained it by saying that "Bachi made him make it on the faith of the Koran." Now a witness who admits that he himself had read the Nikah of Namoi with Gulam Mahomed and has the audacity to state that Namoi was the mistress of Gulam Mahomed, to a person in the position of Mukhtyarkar is one who can expect very little credence to be attached to his statement. There is another remarkable piece of evidence in connection with Rahim Khan, which is also useful from another point of view. A codicil is said to have been executed by Gulam Mahomed about 3 or 4 days before Gulam's death, it was, however, registered after his death. One of the attesting witnesses to it is Rahim Khan and his evidence with regard to his attestation is as follows "The document shown to me bears my signature as a witness. I did not read the document at the time. It was not read out to me. Bachi and Total got my attestation after the death of Gulam Mahomed. I was induced to attest it because she promised to marry me on the faith of the Koran and in order that Hayat Khatun may not claim a share." The citation of these two passages in the evidence of Rahim Khan will suffice to reveal his unscrupulous character. It is this man who figures prominently in connection with the preparation of the various documents in this case and with the so-called identification of the executants thereof. Next to Gulam Mahomed, his was the influence in the surrounding country and his weight thrown on the side of Bachi, a strong-minded woman herself, enabled them to completely domineer over a batch of illiterate and helpless pardanashin women. Now the codicil Ex. 341 appears to us a very suspicious document, and if it is spurious which we think it to be, the authors of it would neither have much difficulty nor be below in putting forward a fictitious will. There is nothing on the record which would serve to explain the circumstances under which this codicil came to be written. It is said to have been written by Total. He is one of the attesting witnesses to the will, and according to Bachi, he and her sister's husband Bago are the two persons that have been helping her in the conduct of her case. It is very significant that though Total was present throughout the hearing of the case in the lower Court, he was not examined as a witness despite the fact that he was the only person that could explain the circumstances under which the codicil was written and what became of the original codicil in view of the Sub-Registrar's declaration that he delivered it to him after registration. Further as one of the attesting witnesses to the will which is vehemently disputed his evidence was very material. We feel that his evidence has been deliberately withheld. The original codicil has not been produced though according to Bachi it remained in the possession of Bhagbhari after execution, and as it was the latter that presented it to the Sub-Registrar Rijhumal for registration, it must have been, therefore, either with Bhagbhari or Total; its non-production has not been accounted for except by the convenient statement that it is missing and a certified copy of it was filed. Now why should this codicil be registered after Gulam Mahomed's death, if as a matter of fact it was executed three days before it. It does affect a material alteration in the will in one substantial point and that is that it cancels the power given to Rahim Khan over Karam Khatun's Nikah and entrusts it to Bachi. Three days before his death Gulam Mahomed must have felt that his end was drawing nigh, and if he thought it necessary to see to the registration of the will, he would have certainly felt the necessity of registering the codicil in his life-time.

We feel that the suppression of the original codicil was done with a purpose. In respect of this codicil Bachi states that she was present at the time that it was written and that it was written by the same munshi, that is, Aishising, who, however, denies it. She further adds that she was not consulted when it was made nor was it made at her request, a very likely statement, inasmuch as all the documents previously written including the Will are alleged to have been read out to the parties concerned, and as the codicil was effecting an important alteration in the Will in favour of Bachi it is scarcely conceivable that Bachi would not have been informed of it and that she also would not have taken the necessary steps to get the codicil registered in the life-time of Gulam Mahomed. Now, besides Rahim Khan, the two other attesting witnesses to this codicil are Atta Mahomed and Mahomed Maluk the Tapedar. We have already referred to the unreliable character of these witnesses, but besides, Atta Mahomed in his evidence states "Gulam Mahomed made no Will in my presence. I have not attested any Will of Gulam Mahomed." Mahomed Maluk says "Gulam Mahomed asked me to attest a writing on a plain-paper when I visited him in his last days. None else attested in my presence. I cannot say whether it bore any attestation before mine. I got the paper which bore his signature already." To judge from the certified copy produced, the signatures of Rahim Khan and Atta Mahomed as attesting witnesses were taken before Mahomed Maluk was asked to sign the document, and Rahimkhan states that his signature was taken after Gulam Mahomed's death. We are strongly inclined to the belief that the codicil has been manufactured after Gulam Mahomed's death, its registration does not imply much, because it was not a difficult matter for Total and the attesting witnesses to declare that the codicil bears the signatures of Gulam Mahomed. And if the codicil is a document that has been fabricated for the purposes of this case, it is not unlikely that the Will is also the output of some person determined to play a foul game. Now the attesting witnesses to the Will are Gulam Rasul and Ramu and Total the last of whom has not given any evidence. Ramu is a man who on his own admission earns about Rs. 5 to 10 a month. He has a shop on Gulam Mahomed's land and the haris on these lands have accounts with him. Bachi is well acquainted with him and sends for him when his services are required. We feel it difficult to believe that Gulam Mahomed would have thought, not of calling the Mukhi of the village to attest the signature but an impecunious Bania. A man of the position of Ramu would be easily dominated by the personality of Rahim Khan. The next witness is Gulam Rasul. He states that he is acquainted with Bachi for about 25 or 30 years and that she is on visiting terms with his family but none of the other females of Gulam Mahomed's house. Now Gulam Rasul is a witness who supports Bachi's defence in this case from start to the finish. He deposes to being present when Hayat Khatun was orally divorced, he has attested the divorce-deed and so also the release-deeds. He has only no knowledge of the codicil. A careful perusal of his evidence makes on me the impression that he is not an over-truthful witness and does not hesitate to lie when he can do so with impunity. The only evidence that remains to be considered is that of the Sub-Registrar Rijhumal. In his judgment the learned Sub-Judge refers to this witness in the following terms "In the present case I am unable to believe him. He appeared to me to give his evidence not with a free conscience. He often got nervous over questions put to him, although he was given a chair and otherwise treated with consideration throughout his evidence." Both Rijhumal and Aishising drove together to the Kot of Gulam Mahomed on the 27th August 1911 being summoned thither by Total, and on this day Rijhumal states he registered the divorce-deed which was handed to him by Gulam Mahomed. On the 29th August he registered the 5 release-deeds and the will, the former first and the latter next. He adds that there were 5 ladies in the room in which Gulam Mahomed was but as they were all parda-nishin he did not see their faces nor did he read out the release-deeds to them. Curiously enough, whilst he was engaged in reading the release-deeds the ladies left the room, and when he asked for them he was told to step in the adjacent room, where Rahim Khan accompanied him and identified the ladies, and the release-deeds were then registered. It is rather remarkable that Gulam Mahomed should not himself have identified his women-folk at the time he handed the release-deeds to the Sub-Registrar and when they were still in the same room. Further, it seems strange why the Will and the divorce-deeds were not registered on the same day, for Rijhumal states that he enquired of the execution of both the deeds and Gulam Mahomed admitted it and it could not be that Rijhumal could have asked about the registration of the divorce-deed on the 29th August as it had been already registered on the 27th. It also does not clearly appear at what stage the Will was registered for according to Rijhumal his time was first taken up with the registration of the release-deeds and after he had completed their registration in the room where the ladies were, "I returned to the room of Gulam Mahomed took his leave and left the Kot." Rijhumal's evidence is certainly not as explicit and convincing as one may have expected from a person in his position and there appears some ground for the comment upon his evidence by the Sub-Judge.

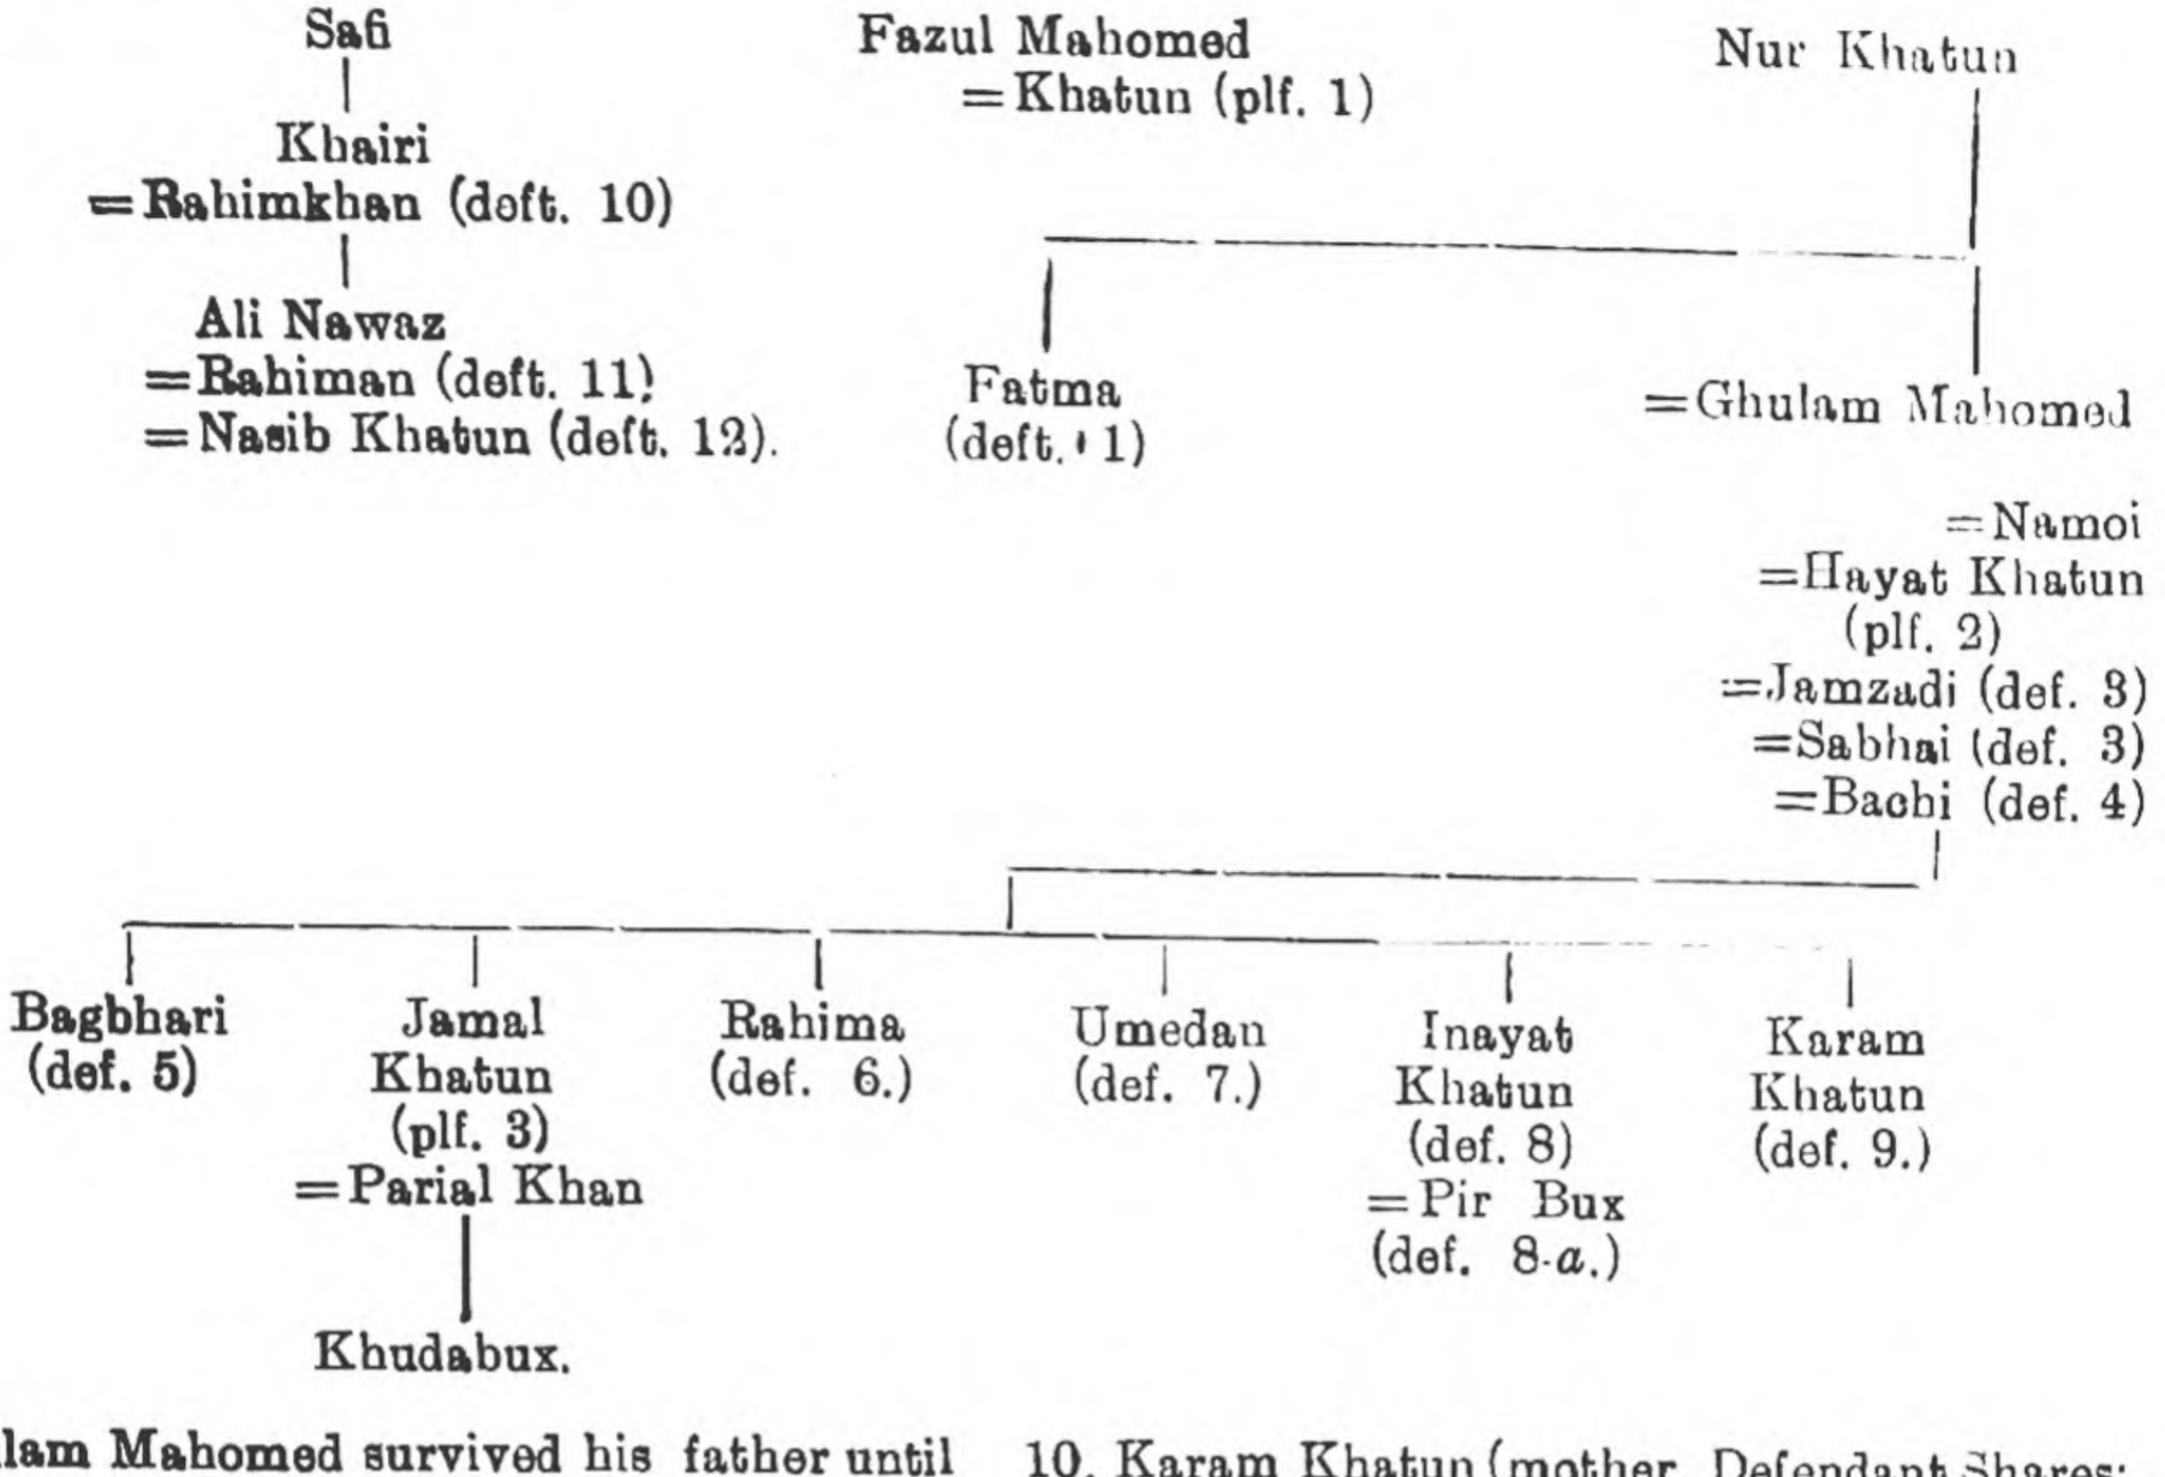
The burden of proving the Will lies on those by whom it is propounded and the question that arises in this case is whether that burden has been discharged. We have in the first instance Bachi, strongly interested in supporting the Will, ably backed up by an influential and unscrupulous scoundrel like Rahim Khan, a convict Aishising convicted on a charge of forging a document is brought in as the writer of the Will, one of the attesting witnesses an impecunious Bania, and the other an intimate friend of Bachi of 25 years standing, add to these, the assistance of Total who was a Kamdar of Gulam Mahomed, and of Bago a brother-in-law of Bachi. Tapedar Mahomed Maluk had no doubt also been rendering active assistances in this case, he was seen in the Kot on the 29th August by Rijhumal though he denies it. What have we on the other hand? A number of parda-nishin women who probably looked to Rahim Khan for guidance after the death of Gulam Mahomed as his nearest male relative. But Rahim Khan was not to be deterred from the object he had in view of securing a large portion of Gulam Mahomed's estate through the instrumentality of Bachi. He was an influential man and he would not experience much difficulty in securing assistance in his nefarious designs. After careful consideration we are of opinion that it has not been proved that the Will, Ex. 328, is the Will of Gulam Mahomed.

There remains lastly the question whether the property in suit is the self-acquired property of Gulam Mahomed. All the witneses are agreed that Mahomed Fazul was a rich Zemindar and owned large landed property. It is true that already in his life-time there was some property entered in Gulam Mahomed's name in the Revenue Register but this fact does not prove anything, for Mahomed Fazul may have well entered some of his properties in the name of his only son Gulam Mahomed, and, as is well known, entries in Land Registers are only intended for fiscal purposes. Admittedly at his death, Mahomed Fazul left considerable property both moveable and immoveable, very probably Gulam Mahomed added to it, but there should have been some definite and tangible evidence to show the precise extent of his accretions. In the absence of any such evidence we must hold that it has not been proved that the property in suit is the self-acquired property of Gulam Mahomed.

The appeal is dismissed with all costs on the appellants.

Kincaid, J. C.—The facts of this interesting appeal are shortly as follows :—A certain Fazul Mahomed died on 24th December 1890 leaving considerable property and several relatives. The family tree is as under:—

BHAGBHARI v. KHATUN



Ghulam Mahomed survived his father until 11th September 1921. He left several widows and six children. In 1912 Khatun, Fazul Mahomed's widow, Hayat Khatun, Ghulam Mahomed's widow and Jamal Khatun daughter of Ghulam Mahomed and wife of Parial Khan brought suit 15 of 1912. They claimed that they were entitled on partition to the following shares :—

	Shares.
1. Khatun (Plaintiff 1)	432
2. Fatma (Defendant 1)	1008
3. Ghulam Mahomed	2016
	3456

As Ghulam Mahomed had died 7 months before the suit they alleged that these following heirs had also shares as under :—

	Shares.
1. Hayat Khatun (widow Plaintiff 2)	63
2. Jamzadi (widow, Defendant 2)	63
3. Sabhai (widow, Defendant 3)	63
4. Bachi (widow, Defendant 4)	63
5. Jamal Khatun (daughter, Plaintiff 3)	224
6. Bagbhari (daughter, Defendant 5)	224
7. Rahiman (daughter, Defendant 6)	224
8. Umedan (daughter, Defendant 7)	224
9. Inayat Khatun (daughter, Defendant 8)	224
10. Karam Khatun (mother, Defendant 9)	224
11. Khatun (mother, Plaintiff 1)	336
12. Fatma (sister, Defendant 1)	84

The Defendants 4, 5, 6 and 9 made various pleas of which we need only consider the following. The suit was time-barred. The property was the self-acquired property of Gulam Mahomed. The Plaintiffs were entitled to nothing because Gulam Mahomed had willed his property away to Defendants 5, 6 and 9 and had obtained release from Defendants 1, 2, 3, 4 and 8. Hayat Khatum had been divorced and was, therefore, entitled to nothing. Jamal Khatum and Umedan were illegitimate. The questions which have arisen for our decision are :—

1. Is the suit time-barred as against Hayat Khatum and Fatma ?
2. Was Hayat Khatun divorced ?
3. Were Jamal Khatun and Umedan illegitimate ?
4. Was the property all Mahomed Fazul's?
5. Is the Will valid ?

I shall deal with No. 2, Hayat Khatun's divorce first. The chief evidence of this divorce is the divorce-deed Ex. 318. It is dated 27th August 1911 and recites that Ghulam Mahomed married Hayat Khatun some two years previously, that on the 25th August 1911, he verbally divorced her by throwing three clods at her and on the 27th August 1911 he drew up the divorce-deed. This divorce has been assailed from many points. But I shall only consider one, namely, that it was invalid as made during the period of Hayat Khatun's Iddut, i. e. within three months of Ghulam Mahomed's death and at a time when he was suffering from a Marz-ul-maut a mortal sickness. The learned Sub-Judge has held that Ghulam Mahomed was ill at the time of the execution of the Will. It is also admitted that he deid of that same illness. Further he had been ailing for several months before. It is not certain what the disease was. One witness has said consumption, another diabetes. But it was certainly a mortal illness and this he must have known and he could not attend to his ordinary pursuits. I have but little doubt an incurable one. In these circumstances, as it seems to me, all the indicia mentioned by Batchelor, J., in Sarabai v. Rabiabai, (19) were present.

"(a) Proximate danger of death so that there is, as it is phrased, a preponderance (ghalba) of khauf or apprehension, that is, that at the given time death must be more probable than life ;

(b) There must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person ;

(c) There must be some external indicia, chief among which I would place the inability to attend to ordinary avocations."

As upon the evidence furnished by these indicia I hold that Ghulam Mahomed was suffering from a Marz-ul-maut when he divorced Hayat Khatun.

The divorce therefore was invalid. To use the learned Judge's words "the principle appears to be that a wife's accrued rights shall not be suddenly defeated by the caprice of the husband while labouring under such mental infirmity as usually accompanies the approach of death."

3. Were Jamal Khatum and Umedan illegitmate ? It is contended that their mother Namoi was Ghulam Mahomed's kept mistress. The first piece of evidence is the following passage in the Will—

> "Namoi remained with me like a concubine for about 5 or 6 years. I had no Nikah or Baksho with her, but she also becoming disobedient went away from me about 24 years ago. She has had two daughters. Leaving them with me she went away. Considering myself liable for maintaining these poor girls I duly brought them up and looking to the necessity of getting them married, I had them married among my poor caste brothers. But according to law they were not my daughters."

Had the Will been reliable, this statement might, as the learned Sub-Judge has observed, have been of some weight, although a dying man who divorces one wife on his death-bed might easily charge another with being only his concubine. But, as I shall show later, the Will is a most suspicious document. There is also the inherent improbability of any man who had kept a mistress admitting it in a Will. A testator's inclination would rather be to conceal than to proclaim an illicit connection. Again had Namoi been concubine, she would surely have taken her daughters with her when she left Ghulam Mahomed's keeping. He, their father, had no right to retain them. Further she would not have been admitted, at any rate, during Mahomed Fazul's life-time to the Kot. No Mussalman gentleman would force his wives to associate with his step-son's mistress. It is also not correct that Ghulam Mahomed married his daughter by Namoi to his poor caste brothers. Jamal Khatun was married to Parial Khan a man as well born as himself and in exchange Khatun was married to Mahomed Fazul. It is unlikely that an illegitimate daughter would have been considered a fair exchange for one in wedlock. Umedan was married to Ali Mahomed who has sworn that he would not have married her, had she been the daughter of Ghulam Mahamed's mistress. Lastly Khatun, Ex. 312, has sworn that Namoi was Ghulam Mahomed's wife. It is unlikely that any lawful married woman would allege that her step-son's mistress was a wife, unless it was strongly to her interest to do so. Here Khatun has nothing to gain by falsely asserting the marriage of Namoi or the legitimacy of her daughters.

I, therefore, hold that 'Jamal Khatun and Umedan were legitimate.

4. Was the propety all Mahomed Fazul's?

The property was originally Mahomed Fazul's. He was a large land-holder. Ghulam Mahomed has so far as I can see from the record had no private sources of income. He may have added to the estate after Mahomed Fazul's death. But the burden lies on Mr. Bhojsing's client to show what land did he add. Mr. Bhojsing has relied on pages 169, 175, 177 and 167 to show that Ghulam Mahomed did own certain numbers during Fazul Mahomed's life-time. But mere entries in Government records mean little or nothing. Mr. Bhojsing should have produced the deeds by which Ghulam Mahomed acquired these numbers. I agree with the lower Court in holding that the land in suit was Mahomed Fazul's.

5 Is the will valid? This is the most important issue of all.

The Mussalman Law as regards bequests has been laid down by Sir R. Wilson (Digest of Anglo Mahomedan Law, page 30) as follows:—

> "Bequests by a Mussalman can only take effect to the extent of ⅓rd of the net assets remaining after payment of his funeral expenses and debts, unless the excess is rendered valid by the consent, given after the death of the testator, of the inheritors whose rights are infringed thereby or by the fact of there being no such inheritors."

And again at page 303 "A bequest to a person entitled to inherit is void unless the other inheritors give their consent, after the death of the testator, to its taking effect."

Now the will, Ex. 328, clearly violates these provisions. Hayat Khatun, the testator's wife, the daughter by Namoi, his step-mother Khatun get nothing. They have not consented in any way to their exclusion. The absence of their consent is by itself enough to nullify the will so far as they are concernd. Further the testator's wives Jamzadi, Bachi, Sabhai and his daughter Inayat Khatun, his sister Fatma have been given very much less than their proper shares. It has been contended that they have consented. The Farkaties or release-deeds of Jamzadi, Bachi, Sabhai, Inayat Khatun and Fatma have been filed to show their consent. But these are useless. They are all dated 29th August 1911, whereas Ghulam Mahomed died on 11th September 1911. They are thus executed before his death and, therefore, are not evidence that the other inheritors gave their consent after the death of testator. It has however been argued that although the release-deeds do not amount to consent after the death of testator, they were a family arrangement by which the ladies resigned their rights out of affection to Ghulam Mahomed. But it has been held both by the Bombay and Madras High Courts that a Mussalman cannot transfer an expectancy. In Sumsuddin v. Abdul Hussein (1), Sir. L. Jenkins observed "By the Transfer of Property Act it is provided that the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to an estate cannot be transferred (Section 6 (a)). It is true that in section 2 (d) it is enacted that nothing in the second chapter of the Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Mahomedan Law, but so far from there being any rule that conflicts with this provision, such a transfer would seem to be opposed to the principles of Mahomedan Law; see the opinions of the majority of the Law Officers in Musammat Khanum Jan v. Musammat Jan Bibi (30) and Abdul Vahid Khan v. Musammat Nuran Bibi (31). And in the absence of clear proof to the contrary I certainly am not prepared to hold that there is any rule of Mahomedan Law that sanctions the transfer of an expectancy."

In Asa Beeri v. Karuppan Chetty, (23) their Lordships held:—

> "On the whole we think that there is a large preponderance of authority in favour of the view that a transfer or a renunciation of the right of inheritance before that right vests is prohibited under the Mahomedan Law."

This view is also supported by the high authority of Sir Roland Wilson (see pages 254, 255 Digest of Anglo-Mahomedan Law.)

BHAGBHARI v. KHATUN

Mr. Bhojsing, however, has relied on some statements made by these ladies on 29th September 1911. These certainly were made after the death of testator. But there is another equally grave objection to them. By assenting to the will these ladies were resigning very valuable rights. This was more especially so in the case of Fatma in whom her rights as daughter of Fazul Mahomed had already vested. Now the leading case on documents by parda-nishin ladies is Shambati Koeri v. Jagobibi, (26). The Judicial Committee there observed :

" It is a well-known rule of this Committee that in the case of deeds and powers executed by parda-nishin ladies, it is requisite that those who rely upon them should satisfy the Court that they had explained to and understood by those who execute them. Sudishtlal v. Sheobarat Koer (32)."

What evidence then is there that the statements were fully explained to these ladies in this case ? The chief witness is the Tapedar Mahomed Maluk, Ex. 359. But it is impossible to believe his evidence. He has stated that a few days after Gulam Mahomed's death Bhagbhari one of the three main beneficiaries under the will produced it and the deeds of release in order that he might make the necessary changes in the Record of Rights register. He then went to the ladies who had executed the deeds of release and took their statements. He also issued notices to them. The Deputy Collector, moreover, had never disapproved of his action. Afterwards, however, he was forced to admit that he never issued notices as required by law and that the Deputy Collector in consequence called upon him to explain this conduct. In view of this tergiversation I entirely disbelieve his man's word. It is most unlikely that any thing was explained to the ladies when their statements were taken. These statements are virtually the same. What seems to have happened is that a number of copies were drawn up and the ladies induced by some misrepresentation, put their marks on them.

Lastly it has been urged that ladies have given their consent to the will by their conduct. Had they done so their conduct added to the release-deeds (if genuine) might have been interpreted as consent after death (see Wilson page 301). But there is no evidence of such consent by conduct. It has been asserted in Court that they, however, received their shares and the present suit was brought some months after the death of Gulam Mahomed.

The first question alone remains. I do not agree with the learned Sub-Judge that the case comes under Article. 127. This question was finally decided by a Full Bench in the case of Isap Ahmed v. Abhramji Ahmadji (5). There is not in my opinion in Mahomedan Law either a joint family or joint family property. In this connection I find support in the following passage of Beaman and Heaton J. J's judgment.

" The joint family as a legal entity invoving definite legal notions, incidents, and consequences is unknown to any other great system of law prevailing in the Empire. So that where property is spoken of as belonging to a joint family, it must primarily be referred to a Hindu joint family, and only secondly to such group of non-Hindus as can prove that they have by custom adopted the Hindu Law of the joint family."

In a case such as this, Article 144 applies. But as the learned Sub-Judge has observed in his admirable judgment, it is of no consequence in this suit whether Article 144 or Article 127 applies. Under Article 144 the defendant who claims adverse possession has to show when his possession became adverse to the plaintiff. The only main evidence as regards Khatun's exclusion is in the will. Therein Gulam Mahomed purports to state that Khatun left his father's house 22 years previously and that, therefore, under a will of Mahomed Fazul she was entitled to no interest in the property. Gulam Mahomed adds too that she has also no right in it as it " has been extended by his labour." But as Mr. Wadhumal has pointed out this is not admissible in evidence. It is the statement of a dead man and, therefore, can only be admitted under one or the other of the sub-clauses of section 32, Indian Evidence Act. Mr. Bhojsing has relied on sub-clause (7). It runs as follows:—

"When the statement is contained in any deed, will or other document which relates to any such transaction as is mentioned in section 13, clause (a).

(32) 7 C. 245; 8 I. A. 39 ; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 222. 5 Ind. Jur. 270; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 707, (P. C).

Section 13, clause (a) is as under:—

"Any transaction by which the right or custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognized, asserted or denied or which was inconsistent with its existence."

But a statement that Khatun has left her husband's house 22 years before and that the property in suit has been extended by the labours of Gulam Mahomed, is not a transaction by which any right or custom was created, claimed, recognized, asserted or denied which was inconsistent with its existence.

Mr. Bhojsing has further relied on the evidence of Bachi, Atta Mahomed and Sher Mahomed. Bachi, however, is deeply interested in the case. Atta Mahomed has received a very handsome present of land worth about Rs. 1,000, since Gulam Mahomed died, and is quite unreliable. Lastly Sher Mohomed's version is different both from those of Bachi and Atta Mahomed and that in the will. He has merely said that she lived with her relations 15 or 20 years ago before Gulam Mahomed's death. But he has not said that they had any quarrel. Moreover Mr. Wadhumal has asserted and with justice as it would seem from Sher Mahomed's evidence that he has been tampered with. On the other hand Khatun Sabhai, Mahomed Parial and Allahdino have deposed that Khatun lived with Gulam Mahomed until his death.

There is even less evidence in proof of Fatma's exclusion. She lived no doubt in her husband's house. But that was only natural, and her rights are mentioned in the will and she was given certain lands in satisfaction of them.

I agree in holding that the appeal should be dismissed and the lower Court's finding confirmed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—The suit property belongs in jenman to Kannancheri Devaswam of which the Uralas are the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant. Plaintiff's predecessor and the 3rd defendant leased it to the 1st defendant for a period of 12 years under Ex. A on 10th August 1897. Plaintiff brought the suit to recover the property on behalf of the Devaswam. The Munsif dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge decreed it. The 1st and 3rd defendants appeal.

The first point argued is that the suit filed by the plaintiff (one of the Uralars) without consulting the 3rd defendant is not maintainable. It is true that, in any transaction which creates or destroys rights, all the Uralans must be consulted (V.A. Istoop v. K. Ayappan (1) a case of demise ; Matamulla Mani Koth Pathur Chandu v. Kuttiyil Rayiru (2) a case of melcharth). But this principle does not apply to suits, provided the other Uralans are also parties (Mariyil Raman Nair v. Narayanan Nambudripad (3); Kunhan v. Moorthi (4),The decision in Savitri Antarjanam v. Raman Nambudri (5) was distinguished in the former of these cases and has scarcely any authority after the latter. The remarks at p. 689, of Angamuthu v. Ramalinga Pillai (6) in (1) (in so far as they refer to suits) are obiter. This is conceded by the counsel for appellants in reply. I hold that the suit cannot be dismissed for non-consultation of 3rd defendant provided it is otherwise maintainable.

The second point argued is that the suit is bad for want of notice to quit. Though the 1st defendant's tenancy under Ex. A was only a tenancy for a term, it was converted into a tenancy from year to year by the payment and acceptance of rent after 1897 (see para 3 (2) of the plaint which shows that rent was paid after 1897). This is conceded by the respondent. The first respondent, however, contends that the 1st defendant, having accepted, by Ex. II, a renewal of the original lease by 3rd defendant only, cannot fall back on the tenancy from year to year. The Courts have found that Ex. II is invalid. That being so, the prior lease was not extinguished by Ex. II. It is true that the 1st defendant insisted on the validity of Ex. II in his written statement but the plaintiff repudiated it and as Ex. II has been proved to be invalid, the rights under the prior tenancy did not cease. Moreover, the 1st defendant's plea in para. 12 of the written statement— "This suit which is brought by the plaintiff alone to recover possession under the prior lease is not maintainable" shows that he meant to rely on his rights under the prior lease as a defence to the suit. The prior lease has not been surrendered or otherwise legally put an end to (See Ramunni v. Kerala Varma Valiya Raja (7) and Kuthiprnath Kunhunni Panikkar v. Raman (8). The respondent also contends that the clause "You must give (me) the value of the Kuzhikoors and Chamayamas ..... when, I am evicted at any time after the expiry of 12 years" in Ex. A dispenses with a notice to quit. I do not agree with this contention. A proper notice to quit is, therefore, necessary.

The next question is whether Ex. C. which was issued by the plaintiff alone is enough. It is true that, in England it has been held that one of the several joint tenants may issue a notice to quit and put an end to a lease created by all of them (See Doe d Whayman v. Chaplin (9), Doe d Aslim v. Summersett (10), followed in Doe d Kindersley v. Hughes (11), (Alford v. Vickery (12), 3 I. C. & Mar 28). Apart from the fact that this rule has not been followed in India by the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts, as to which I express no opinion, it cannot apply to the present case where there is no joint tenancy. The Devaswam is the only owner of the property. It is represented by the Uralans both of whom must act to determine a tenancy lawfully created. None of the English cases is a case of trustees (See Passim Ahmed Molla v. Eusuf Haji Ajam Pepardi (13), which is a case of joint receivers). I, therefore, hold that the notice Ex. C is not a valid notice. The other question argued, whether the notice is a sufficient notice (only 15 days being allowed for quitting the land) need not be considered.

The appeal is allowed and plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs of 1st defendant throughout.

Wallace, J. :—I am in full agreement with my learned brother as to the necessity for a notice to quit and as to the invalidity of Ex. C which is the only notice given in the matter of the determination of the suit tenancy. This finding is sufficient to dispose of this second appeal. I own to some doubt on the proposition whether plaintiff was in law entitled to file his suit without consulting his colleague, since to adopt the language of Kunhan v. Moorthi (4) the remedial right in this case, viz., the right to eject 1st defendant would not accrue to the trustees until they as a body after consultation had signified their will to determine the lease of 1st defendant and had communicated that will to him. As there was neither such consultation nor communication the remedial right did not accrue, and, therefore, on the principle laid down in that case, it would not be competent for plaintiff alone to sue. I prefer at present. however, not to rest my decision on this point which is not necessary for the disposal of this appeal. I agree that the suit be dismissed with costs of 1st defendant throughout.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT NO. 240 OF 1921.

TRUSTEES OF THE FIRM OF MOTHARAM DOWLATRAM—PLAINTIFFS
PAHLAJRAI GOPALDAS—DEFENDANT.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Co-parcener engaged in business—Family business—Presumption—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (e)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (e), O. VI, r. 14—Provincial Insolvency Act (VII of 1920), ss. 37, 39—Mere right to sue, transfer of—Transfer of estate with remedy for recovery—Property, meaning of in Insolvency Law—Claim for breach of contract, whether vests in Receiver—Plaint, signing of—Co-plaintiffs—Plaint not signed by all plaintiffs, effect of—Amendment.

Although a person carrying on business may be a co-parcener in a Hindu joint family, it does not necessarily follow that all his coparceners are his partners in that business, unless it is shown that the business was set up with the help of family funds.

There is no presumption that a business carried on by one co-parcener in a Hindu joint family is a family business.

ORDER.—Certain preliminary issues relating to the maintainability of suits Nos. 114, 235, 236, 240 and 600 all of 1921 and applications for leave to amend the plaint have been heard together. All the five suits are filed in the names of the Trustees of the firm of Motharam Doulatram against different defendants. Evidence has been recorded in suit No. 240 of 1921 which has been treated as a test suit.

The facts material to the present inquiry are that one Doulatram, son of Metharam who described himself as trading in the name of Metharam Doulatram was adjudicated insolvent on his own application by an order, dated 12th September, 1919 Ex. 13. He subsequently entered into a deed of arrangement, Ex. 7, with his creditors by which five persons were appointed Trustees viz., (1) Hassasing Lalsing, (2) Jettaram Manghumal, (3) Seth Khiluram Dayaldas, (4) Gopaldas Parumal, and (5) Rameshardas Shivanthrai. In the deed they are described as arbitrators and as a committee of inspection, and are authorized to settle disputes between the insolvent and the creditors to take charge and possession and assume control over all the property of the insolvent including outstandings due from the debtors of the insolvent and it is expressly stated in the deed that all the estate of the insolvent was to vest in them. This deed of arrangement was accepted with slight modifications by Kennedy, J. C. by his order, dated 15th October 1920, Ex 10. The material part of which order is as under :—

> " I, therefore, sanction the composition deed as amended. I annul the order of adjudication and direct that the property vests in the Trustees appointed by the composition deed subject to payment of the Official Receiver's fees."

On the 16th January 1923 all the five trustees have purported to execute a power of attorney in favour of Doulatram Metharam, but the power has been actually signed by only four of them. Rameshardas' signature does not appear on it. This power inter alia recites that as the firm of Metharam Doulatram was adjudicated insolvents and as under the composition deed they had been appointed trustees or receivers, they had resolved at a meeting held by them to appoint Doulatram as their attorney and they empowered him to collect the outstandings of the insolvents and to file suits on their behalf.

Suit No. 240 of 1921 has been filed against one Pahlajrai Gopaldas for recovery of Rs. 7,500-0-0 said to be due by him to the firm of Metahram Doulatram in respect of several transactions of sale and purchase of certain goods between the 2nd June 1917 and the 25th January 1918. The plaint was presented on the 24th January 1921 and was headed as under :—

"The trustees of the firm of Metharam Doulatram which lately carried on business at Karachi but now dissolved viz. :—

(1) Seth Hassasing Lalsing
(2) Seth Jettaram Manghumal
(3) Seth Khuluram Dayaldas
(4) Seth Gopaldas Perumal
(5) Seth Ramasherdas Shivnathrai, by their duly constituted attorney Seth Doulatram Metharam, Hindu adult merchant now residing in Karachi."

The plaint is signed by three of the five trustees, that is, Nos. (1), (3) and (4). It is attested by the attorney Doulatram. The Vakalatnama in favour of the pleaders has been signed by Nos. 1, 3 and 4 and also by the attorney Doulatram.

The defendant in this suit inter alia contended that the suit having been instituted through a person who was not a recognized agent, was not properly instituted, and that the claim in suit being for unliquidated damages for the breach of certain contracts, could not be validly assigned to the trustees and that the trustees had, therefore, no right to sue. On these pleadings the following two issues were raised by the Court :—

1. Is the suit properly instituted ?
2. Have the plaintiffs any right to sue ?

More or less similar issues were raised in the connected suits. At the hearing, however, the defendant in this suit and the defendants in the other connected suits amplified their defence and the following further points were raised by them in connection with all the suits :—

(a) That the Trustees, or at least some of them being in Karachi on the date of these suits, the attorney could not file the suits ;

(b) That the Trust Deed having been executed by Doulatram son of Metharam one of the partners of the firm of Metharam Doulatram is not valid ; and that the firm of Metharam Doulatram consisted of more than one partner ;

(c) That the vesting of the property in trustees does not give them power to sue ;

(d) That under any circumstances claims in the nature of damages do not vest in the trustees ;

(e) That the plaints are not properly signed or verified or presented.

In order to meet the different contentions raised by the parties, the plaintiffs have at the close of the case filed two applications in each suit for amendment, the first being an application to permit the trustees who have not signed the plaint and Vakalatnama to do so. and a second, to permit the name of Doulatram Metharam to be brought on the record as a co-plaintiff.

I shall deal with the different points in issue generally in this suit which has been treated as a test suit and record my findings on the issues in this suit so far as they relate to it and I shall formally record my findings in the connected suits by separate judgments.

Issue No. 2. It is alleged that Doulatram, his nephew Chandumal and his son Lachmandas, all three carried on business in partnership in the name of Metharam Doulatram. The only witness examined on this point is Doulatram himself. He has denied that he had any partner in the business. He has stated that Chanumal worked with him as a paid servant for ten months only and has produced entries from his books to show the salary credited to him. The entries with regard to the payment of salary are somewhat suspicious, having been made after the date of insolvency, but in the absence of any evidence to the contrary I hold that the defendant has failed to prove that Chandumal was a partner. "With regard to the part taken by Lachmandas in the business of his father, Doulatram has admitted that his son was joint with him and used to work at the shop. The drawings of Lachmandas have been debited to the profit and loss account. He admits that up to the date of insolvency Lachmandas used to live and mess with him. He states that he started this business only about four years before his failure and as Lachmandas is said to be 26 years old now, he was about 18 years of age when he joined his father's business. I cannot hold on this evidence that Lachmandas was a partner with his father. "Partnership" is defined in section 239 of the Indian Contract Act as "the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business, and to share the profits thereof." There is no evidence in the present case of an express agreement. Can the Court infer an agreement to share the profits from the fact that Doulatram's son who had attained the age of 18 years when his father started the business, became a partner by working at his father's business and that it was agreed that he would get a share in the profits? The son had no property of his own to share the loss of the business. It is not urged that the business was an ancestral business or that it was started with assets in which the son was interested. In Vadilal Lallubhai v. Shah Khushal Dalpatram (1), Chandavarkar, J. held that from the mere fact that certain persons are members of a joint family, it does not necessarily follow that they are partners in the firm which one of them says is his, unless such firm was set up with the help of family funds and that there is no presumption that a business carried on by one co-parcener is a family business. In Sawanmal Pinanmal v. Pinanmal Danmal (2) a Bench of this Court non-suited a son who claimed a share from his father in the property said to have been acquired by the father and the son in the course of the business carried on in the joint names of both of them and in which the son took part. The position of a Hindu son in his father's business has been admirably summed up by Crouch, A. J. C. as under :—

> "The circumstances of this case are quite common occurrence in this country. A son enters his father's business, and takes an active part in its management. It is convenient that he signs hundis, and receipts and contracts as if he were a partner; to do so involves no risk, for the son has no fortune apart from his father's. But no definite arrangement is made as to the son's remuneration, and nothing whatever is said between them as to a partnership. When the son needs money he draws it out of the business, without any objection by the father. The son, partly out of filial respect, and partly because he thinks that were a definite arrangement to be made, he would be no better off than he is already, forbears to press the matters. If it be necessary to give definition to the vague terms of the agreement between the parties, I should say that the son had agreed to serve in the business, at such remuneration as his father might from time to time choose to give him."

It is contended that prior to Doulatram's insolvency he had filed certain suits in the name of the firm of Metharam Doulatram showing thereby that he had partners. It is not impossible that the misdescription in those plaints was due to the same negligence and carelessness which has been shown in the filing of the present suits. Though Doulatram applied to the insolvency Court as carrying on business by himself, and though the deed of arrangement is signed by him as such, the heading of the plaint in this suit and the other connected suits describes the plaintiffs as the trustees of the firm of Metharam Doulatram now dissolved. I hold on the evidence of Doulatram uncontradicted as it is, that he alone traded in the name of Metharam Doulatram and had no other partners in the business.

It is next contended that the claim in suit being in the nature of damages does not vest in the Trustees. Any property or interest in property which a person can in law or in equity transfer or assign or dispose of inter vivos or by a testamentary instrument can be affected by him with a trust by an instrument inter vivos or by a testamentary instrument provided the objects of the Trust are lawful. (Halsbury, Vol. 28, paras 44 and 45 and section 4, Indian Trust Act). The claim in suit is part of the estate of the debtor and would ordinarily devolve at his death on his legal representatives. As said by Lord Abinger in Raymond v. Fitch (3). "The authorities are uniform that a personal representative may sue not only for all debts due to the deceased by speciality or otherwise but for all covenants and indeed all contracts with the testator broken in his lifetime and the reason appears to be that these are choses in action and are parcel of the personal estate in respect of which the executor or administrator represents the person of the testator and is in law the testator's assignee." The claim in suit is not in the nature of a personal action for any tort done to the person which according to the maxim Actio personalis moritur cum persona would die with the death of the assignor and cannot, therefore, be assigned.

Section 6, clause (e) of the Transfer of Property Act does not prevent the assignment of the whole estate of the assignor being transferred to the trustees, but prohibits the transfer of a mere or bare right to sue on grounds of public policy. As said by Saunderson, C. J., in Jeevan Ram v. Ratanchand (4), the question for the Court to decide in such a case is whether the subject matter of the assignment by the assignor is in view of the Court property with an incidental remedy for its recovery or whether it is a bare right to bring an action within the meaning of the words "a mere right to sue." The deed of arrangement vests in clear terms the whole of the estate of the insolvents in the trustees for certain lawful objects and does not purport to transfer a mere right to sue in the trustees, though no doubt it confers incidentally the remedy on the trustees to sue for recovery of all funds due to the Trust estate and imposes an obligation on them to do so.

The trustees acquired their rights in the present case not only by virtue of the deed of arrangement but by the order of the Court, Ex. 10, passed in the exercise of its Insolvency Jurisdiction.

Section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides that when an order of adjudication is annulled by the Court the property of the debtor shall, subject to the reservation contained therein, vest in such person as the Court may appoint and shall revert to the debtor only in default of such appointment.

Section 39 of the Act makes the provisions of section 37 applicable to orders of annulment of adjudication on compositions and schemes of arrangement being approved by the Court.

By Ex. 10 the Court has ordered all the property of the insolvent to vest in the trustees and has made no reservation in his favour. All property which vested in the Official Receiver does, therefore, vest in the trustees. "Property" under the English Insolvency Law does include claims in the nature of damages which have accrued due prior to the date of the insolvency except such as arise from bodily or mental suffering or personal inconvenience of the bankrupt or from injury to his person or reputation. Brake v. Beckhan (5), Rodgers v. Spencer (6). Halsbury Vol. II, para. 236.

The learned pleaders for the defence have however, contended that clause (5) of section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides that such property as is exempted from attachment and sale under section 60, Civil Procedure Code did not vest in the Official Receiver, and that the claim in suit being in the nature of damages is exempted from attachment under clause (e) of section 60. Clause (e) of section 60, Civil Procedure Code like clause (e) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act refers to a mere or bare right, and not to every right, and the ruling in Jeevanram's case equally applies. Generally an important item in the assets of an insolvent trader is his claims for breaches of contracts which have become due to him prior to his insolvency and have not been paid to him, and the bulk of his liabilities are similar claims which he has failed to pay. The very object of the insolvency law would be defeated if claims in the nature of damages arising out of his dealings in trade were intended to be excluded from vesting in the Official Receiver.

In Pinto v. Firm of Tulsidas Mulchand (2), Suit No. 221 of 1921, Aston, A. J.C. has taken the same view that similar claims do vest in the Official Receiver, under the Provincial Insolvency Act. Raymond, A. J. C. has also arrived at the same conclusion in Official Assignee of Bombay v. Chandulal Chimanlal (7), though on some-what different grounds.

I hold that the claim in suit did vest in the Official Receiver and that by virtue of the order Ex. 10 as also the terms of the deed of arrangement it does vest in the Trustees. I am further of opinion that under O. XXXI, r

1, Civil Procedure Code the Trustees can maintain suits in respect of property vested in them in their own name.

I hold on this issue in the affirmative.

Issue No 1. All the trustees must join together in the execution of the trust except where it is otherwise provided by the instrument of trust (section 48, Indian Trust Act). It is also open to any of the trustees to appoint an attorney on his behalf to do a ministerial Act (section 47, Indian Trust Act).

Clause 9 of the deed of arrangement reads as follows:—

> "That the decision of the majority of the arbitrators or committee of inspection shall be binding on the parties, and in case of the death or absence through any cause whatsoever of any of the arbitrators or committee of inspection the remaining arbitrators shall have power to act in these presents provided there is no disagreement between them. In case of disagreement the remaining arbitrator shall wait for the absenting arbitrators or in case of his death appoint an Umpire in these presents and whose decision shall be final and binding."

As I interpret this clause, it provides—

(a) that as between the insolvent and the creditors the decision of the majority shall in any dispute between them bind the parties, all the five persons being present and acting together.

(b) That in any matter whether it is a dispute between the insolvent and the creditors and also in any other matter whatsoever relating to the deed of arrangement, if one of the trustees dies or is absent the remaining four trustees can act jointly, the words used being "in these presents."

(c) If, however, there is a disagreement between the four trustees, they shall postpone their action till the absentee trustee returns or if the fifth trustee is dead, till a fifth trustee is appointed in place of such deceased trustee. This deed empowers any four trustees present to act in any matter provided they are unanimous. It does not, however, empower only three of the five trustees to act except in disputes between the insolvent and his creditors under certain circumstances.

It would, therefore, appear that any suit authorised by four of them and which is not objected to by the 5th trustee is competent.

The suit has been authorized by four trustees, three of them have signed the plaint. The vakalatnama in favour of the pleaders is signed by three trustees and the attorney acting on behalf of the fourth trustee As the fourth trustee was absent from Karachi the plaint could have been signed on his behalf by the attorney. The suit would have been competent even if it had been filed in the names of four of the trustees unless there was evidence to show that the fifth trustee objected to it. The learned pleaders for the defence were misled by the heading of the plaint and urged that the attorney could not file a suit or sign the plaint on behalf of the trustees present in Karachi. As the plaints are signed by such of the trustees who were present, they have not pressed this point but have urged that as the plaint purports to be filed on behalf of five trustees it is not properly presented having been signed by only three of them.

In Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddan Saha Das (8), where a suit was filed by one of the three joint creditors, the other creditors being named as co-plaintiffs, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there is no rule that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint. In Basdeo v. John Smidt (9), at page 61, Strachey, C. J. pointed out that the object of the signature to the plaint is to prevent as far as possible disputes as to whether the suit was instituted with the plaintiff's knowledge and authority, and that such authority may be established by other means besides the signature. In the matter of the petition of Bisheshar Nath v. Emperer (10), it was held that O. VI, r. 14 Civil Procedure Code which requires a pleading to be signed by a party is merely a matter of procedure and it is the business of the Court to see that this provision is carried out and that though the authority to bring a suit is a question of principle, the proper signing of the plaint is a matter of practice only, and any mistake or omission therin may be amended at any time. At page 152 Walsh, J. has observed: "It can not be impressed too often upon the inferior Courts what Bowen, L. J. said in Cropper v. Smith (11), The object of Courts is to decide the rights of parties, and not to punish them for mistakes which they make in the conduct of their cases, by deciding otherwise than in accordance with their rights. Courts do not exist for the sake of discipline, but for the sake of deciding matters in controversy." Of course where it is sought to abuse the process of the Court, or to over-reach the other party by some fraud it is another matter."

In the view I take of this case, the signature of the fourth trustee or his attorney if he is absent, would be sufficient and the name of Rameshердas who is said to have been absent from Karachi throughout could be deleted from the plaint The plaintiffs are prepared to obtain the signature of the remaining two trustees to the plaint, I see no reason why I should not allow them to have the plaint signed by them or if any one of them is not in Karachi, by his attorney duly constituted in that behalf.

I hold that the suit has been properly instituted. There has been a considerable waste of time of the Court and delay in the disposal of this suit and the connected suits owing to the indifference and carelessness of the plaintiffs and I order that the plaintiffs do pay to the defendants as costs the sum equal to one-fourth of the pleaders' fees which are taxable under the rules.

In the view I take of this case, the application of the plaintiff to bring the name of the insolvent on the record is dismissed with no order as to costs.

The plaintiffs should obtain signatures of the two Trustees who have not signed the plaint within fifteen days of this date, and should also deposit the costs awarded within that period. The suit may be called up again for further orders on 18th December 1923.

P. B. A. Order accordingly.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 257 OF 1920.

September 5, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Phillips and Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao.

LOORTHIA ODAYAR — PLAINTIFF— APPELLANT

GOPALASAMI AND ANOTHER— PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT— RESPONDENTS—

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Transfer to prefer creditors and to defeat others, validity of—Consideration, passing of, effect of.

In a suit on a promissory note, the defendant filed a written statement denying its execution but allowed it to be decreed ex parte. A few days after the written statement was filed and before decree, the defendant executed a usufructuary mortgage of all her immoveable properties for a term of 10 years in favour of her brother's son who was not a man in well-to-do circumstances.

There was no pressure from any creditor nor was there any necessity for creating a mortgage over the entire properties for such a long period of time. No provision was made for the payment of the pro-note debt. It was, however, found that out of the consideration of Rs. 10,000 a sum of Rs. 7,000 went towards the discharge of debts due to third parties by the defendant and the recitals as to the rest of consideration were made with the object of defeating and delaying the plaintiff who had brought the suit on the pro-note.

Held, that although the effect of the transaction was to defeat and defraud the plaintiff creditor the transaction could not be regarded as wholly void and effect must be given to it to the extent of Rs. 7,000, which was applied towards the discharge of the transferor's debts.

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question to be decided in this appeal is : Is the mortgage (Ex. I) executed by the 1st defendant in favour of the 2nd defendant liable to be set aside at the instance of the plaintiff under Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act?

The 1st defendant and her son had executed in favour of the plaintiff a promissory note and the plaintiff filed a suit for the recovery of the amount due under it. The first defendant filed a written statement in that suit denying the execution of the promissory note. This statement was filed on the 7th of February 1916. On the date of the hearing, the 1st defendant did not appear and an ex parte decree was obtained by the plaintiff in about June 1916.

In the mean-time, that is, a few days after the filing of the written statement but before the decree aforesaid was passed, the 1st defendant mortgaged her properties to the 2nd defendant by Ex. I, dated 26th February 1916. The 2nd defendant is the brother's son of the 1st defendant and it is admitted that the mortgage deed comprised every item of immoveable property possessed by the 1st defendant. At the time of the mortgage, the suit against the 1st defendant was pending and a false defence was presumably put in, in order to gain time. The mortgage purports to be for Rs. 10,000 but it is in evidence that the 2nd defendant was not himself possessed of much property but it is said that his father and mother were wealthy and that he was in management of his father's properties. The 2nd defendant also admits that before the date of this transaction, he had not lent any large sums of money and that the maximum amount lent by him on any single occasion was about Rs. 300 or Rs. 400. The admissions made by him clearly show that the mortgage was not taken in the usual course of business but that it was a transaction of an unusual kind from the point of view of the 2nd defendant. No explanation is forth-coming as to why he suddenly turned a money-lender and lent such a large sum of money. As a fact, he admits that he had only with him Rs. 2,000 on the date of Ex. I and that he had to borrow the major portion of the consideration from his maternal aunt's husband and it is remarkable that this man had not even been examined. It is also significant that the mortgage that was created was a usufructuary mortgage for a period of 10 years. It seems to me that the object of creating such a mortgage was to diminish the value of the equity of redemption even granting that it was worth anything at all. What necessity was there to create a mortgage over the entire property of the 1st defendant, which was to subsist for such a long period of time? It is stated in Ex. I that the object of executing the mortgage was to raise money to pay off several creditors of the 1st defendant. There is nothing in the evidence to show that there was any pressure brought to bear by the creditors except in regard to one debt ; whereas, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, he had actually filed a suit but it is curious that the mortgage deed makes no provision whatsoever for the payment of the debt due to the plaintiff. That the 1st and 2nd defendants intended to defeat the plaintiff's claim appears further from the circumstance that the mortgage deed was registered not in the Registrar's Office nor even at the residence of either the mortgagor or the mortgagee but at the house of one Dharmalinga Pillai in a place called Settiapuram. On a consideration of the probabilities of the case and of the evidence, I have come to the conclusion that the 1st defendant executed the mortgage with the intention of defrauding the plaintiff and that the 2nd defendant was aware of that intention.

The consideration for the mortgage deed is said to consist of.

(1) Rs. 7,037-12-10 which is the aggregate amount of the debts due by the 1st defendant to third parties and which the 2nd defendant claims to have discharged. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that these debts were really not due and that the recital in the mortgage deed regarding their existence is false. I was first inclined to agree in this view but on further consideration I am not prepared to accept this finding. The transaction, as I pointed, is no doubt extremely suspicious but documents were produced to evidence the previous debts and witnesses were examined to prove those documents, and I find that there was no cross-examination directed to attack the genuineness of the documents. If they were seriously impugned it would have been open to the 2nd defendant to produce further evidence and I cannot draw any inference adverse to him from his omission to examine more witnesses on this point. As it is, he examined Ponnusami Pillai who proves not only the promissory note executed in his own favour but also Ex. 3 b executed in favour of Radhakrishna Pillai. Sadasiva Pillai proves Ex. 3-c and Narayanaswamy Iyer proves Ex. 3-a. In the circumstances, I am disposed to think that the evidence adduced is sufficient to prove the existence of the debts and I, therefore, find that the consideration to this extent did really pass for the mortgage document.

(2) Rs. 1,873-8-0 said to be the amount which was due by the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant on a promissory note of a prior date, namely, 20th May 1913. Has the 2nd defendant made out the existence of this debt to himself ? I am satisfied that he has not. He was cross-examined in regard to his capacity to advance money. He had also to admit that he did not keep any accounts. A specific question was put to him as to whether he had lent any monies before the date of Ex. I. In the plaint, it was expressly stated that the promissory notes mentioned in the deed of mortgage were not genuine. The 2nd defendant was, therefore, bound to give clear evidence of the debt alleged to be due to himself. Beyond his word, no evidence has been adduced. The promissory note in his favour Ex. II, bears the attestation of Samiah Udayar and Srinivasa Iyar. Neither of them has been examined. I may note that this Samiah Udayar has also attested Exs. 1, 3-A and 5, and this shows that he is more or less intimately connected with the defendants. It is still more strange that the 1st defendant has not been examined at all. The 2nd defendant admits that the relations between him and the 1st defendant have continued to be friendly. There is another circumstance to which I may advert though I do not propose to base my finding upon that. From a comparison of the documents filed in the suit, Ex. II appears to have been written by D. W. 4 and although he was examined, with reference to the other documents with which he was connected, not a single question was put to him bearing on Ex. II. The mortgage document having been executed in circumstances which show that the object of the transaction was to defeat the plaintiff, the onus was heavily upon the 2nd defendant to prove the existence of the debts alleged to have been discharged from and out of the consideration for the mortgage. In Palamalai Mudaliar v. The South Indian Export Company (1), Wallis J. as he then was states the law thus, "Now if the sale was effected with the object of preferring these two creditors to the plaintiffs and the other creditors it is clear and is admitted, that the sale would not be voidable under section 53 of theTransfer of Property Act, but the burden of proving this where the sale appears otherwise to be voidable is on the defendant and should be established by satisfactory evidence." This principle was also accepted by Mitra and Casperss, JJ. in Rajani Kuwar Das v. Gour Kishore Saha (2). I have come to the conclusion that there was no debt due by the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant previous to Ex. I and that the recital in it to the contrary is false.

(3) Rs. 1,088-11-2 alleged to have been paid by the 2nd defendant to the 1st defendant at the time of the registration of the document. Aiyasami Udayar the 2nd defendant's father is stated to have paid this amount before the Sub-Registrar. This man was not examined. According to the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants the mortgage was taken for his benefit. He is not only alleged to have paid the amount at the time of the registration but he is said to be the person who was responsible for the recitals in Ex. I. Moreover, he attested Exs. 3, 3*a* and 3*b*. In the circumstances I think that the failure to examine him as a witness was deliberate. Once again I may advert to the fact that the 1st defendant was not examined and she also could have given material evidence on this point. Payment before the Sub-Registrar quite often signifies nothing, because to give the transaction an appearance of reality the parties not unusually resort to this device. I am, therefore, not satisfied that this sum was really paid to the 1st defendant. Even assuming that it was paid, I have not the least doubt that the object of the payment was to defraud the 1st defendant's creditors because as pointed out in Palamali Mudaliar v. The South Indian Export Co. (1), converting immoveable property into cash is the most obvious and effective method of defeating and delaying creditors.

Having thus found on facts, I must now consider what the law on the subject is. In Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Aiyar (3), it was held that where a transfer, though in part was for valuable consideration, was as regards the other part only, an arrangement to defeat creditors it was wholly void under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. In that case, the assignment, that was impeached, was in favour of the creditor and the money obtained by the assignor was partially utilized for the payment of his debts. Nevertheless it was held that as the arrangement was to some extent a device, intended to defeat the assignor's other creditors, the transaction was entirely invalid and no effect could be given to it. The reason for this decision, as I understand it, appears to be this. A mere preference of one creditor to another does not render the transaction voidable under section 53 of the Transfer of property Act. But if it is shown that the object of the transaction is not merely to prefer a creditor but in addition is to defeat or to delay the other creditors, it then ceases to be a transaction by which merely a creditor is preferred but becomes a transaction to which section 53 is directly applicable. The next step in the argument seems to be that the inclusion of a fictitious debt furnishes evidence of an intention to defeat the creditors and the transaction is thus wholly void against them. I may remark that this case is not an authority upon section 53, because the learned Judges expressly state in their judgment that the question before them was to be decided with reference to general principles of justice and good conscience, the property with which they were dealing not being immoveable property and section 53 not having therefore direct application. Apart altogether from this, the recent decisons of the Judicial Committee Mushar Sahu v. Lala Hakim Lal (4), and Minakumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (5), place the matter beyond doubt. In the former at page 525 an extract is given from the judgment of Palles, C. B, In Re Moroney where it is stated that although the effect of the transaction or even the interest of the debtor in making it may be to defeat another creditor, it is not a fraud within the statute. Their Lordships towards the close of their judgment say that a preference of one creditor to another is no ground for impeaching the deed even if the debtor was intending to defeat an anticipated execution by another creditor. In the latter case Minakumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (5), equally strong observations were made. Their Lordships say at page 671 "It may be that the judgment-debtor preferred the plaintiff..... ...and that he did this of set purpose, yet this would not stamp the transaction as a fraudulent transfer." On these authorities it is perfectly clear that the transaction before us cannot be regarded as wholly void as against the plaintiff.

I may add that in Rajani Kuwar Das v. Gour Kishore Saha (2), Palamalai Mudaliar v. South Indian Export Company (1), and Ummachakutti v. Ummerkutti Haji (6), the transactions were not held to be wholly invalid and effect was given to the deed to the extent to which the consideration was applied for the discharge of the transferor's debts. I, therefore, hold that the mortgage in favour of the 2nd defendant is good to the extent of Rs. 7,037-12-10 and that the property is liable to be sold subject to this right of the 2nd defendant. The appeal will be allowed to that extent. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Arbitration—Award—Error of law, apparent on face of award, what amounts to—Sale of goods—Dispute as to quality—Burden of proof—Reference stipulating survey of goods—Award made without survey—Jurisdiction.

An error in law on the face of the award which is sufficient to vitiate the award means that the award or some document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, contains a legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which is erroneous.

Ordinarily, where there is a dispute between a buyer and a seller with reference to tha quality of goods, it is the duty of the seller to prove that the goods are of the quality contracted for.

Disputes arose between the parties out of a contract for the sale of goods, relating to the quality of the goods and the matter was referred to arbitration, the arbitrators being required to make an award after a survey of the goods. The arbitrators made the following award :—"We have considered the papers and as the buyers are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract;

Held (1) that the mere fact that the buyers were unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection was not by itself a sufficient reason for making an award against them, especially as it was the duty of the sellers to prove that the goods were of the quality contracted for ;

(2) that, therefore, the award was vitiated by an error of law which was apparent on the face of the award ;

(3) that the award having been made without a survey of the goods was made without jurisdiction and was invalid.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for a declaration that an award dated the 3rd September 1921 made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is invalid and in-operative.

On the 2nd January 1918 the parties to this suit entered into an agreement containing terms under which they would conduct business with each other, and amongst other terms the second provides that "in the event of any dispute arising as to inferiority of quality, defects or differences in the goods, the same shall be referred within 90 days of the arrival of the goods in Calcutta to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce unless a special agreement exists on the subject between the said parties, and no claim will be entertained if made after 90 days from date of arrival of goods. The latter part of the same clause provides that "the Chamber shall arrange for survey in accordance with its rules, that surveys shall be held on the actual goods and not on shipment samples, and that all survey reports, accompanied by samples, signed and sealed by the surveyors, showing the basis on which their award has been made must be forwarded to the sellers whenever the award has been given against them." On the 7th December 1920 the parties entered into a contract whereby the Plaintiffs agreed to buy from the Defendants 60 bales finished Dhootis of rangin descriptions at prices stated in para. 1 of the plaint. The goods in due course arrived and disputes arose with reference to the number of counts and lengths of the Dhootis. The parties accordingly went to arbitration and on the 1st March 1921 there was submitted to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal an application signed by the Plaintiffs applying for the "appointment of two arbitrators and the issue of an award for cancellation of the contract or allowance or such other relief as the arbitrators may think fit to award upon the under-mentioned complaint and upon investigation of all facts arising out of the contract." On the same form against the printed title "Buyer's Complaints" are the words "see letter dated the 1st March," and against the printed title "Seller's Remarks" some five lines of typed matter are succeeded by a copy of a letter dated the 15th November 1920 from the Defendants to the Plaintiffs. This is succeeded by further type-written matter which is signed by the Defendants. At the conclusion appear the words: "The survey should be held on the goods and not on the shipment samples." For some reason or other which is not clear, a further document had to be, or, at all events, was filed before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. It purports to be a brief memorandum of agreement made on the 5th April between the parties and recites that disputes have arisen between the parties as per Buyer's Statement of 1st March 1921 submitted with Application Form No. 1 and as per Seller's Statement of 1st March 1921 submitted with Application Form No. 1, and then proceeds to say: "The matters in dispute are referred to the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to be determined in accordance with the rules for the time being of the said Tribunal as far as such rules be applicable to the submission." This document which bears an eight annas stamp is signed by the parties. In due course the arbitration was held and on the 3rd September 1921 the award was communicated to the parties over the signature of the Registrar of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce Tribunal of Arbitration and is in the following terms:—

"We have considered the papers and as buyers Messrs. Chandmul Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract.

Buyers to pay cost of this reference, amounting to Rs. 101."

It is now contended that the award should be set aside, firstly, for an error of law apparent on the face of it and secondly on account of the arbitrators having exceeded their jurisdiction in that they made an award without first having held a survey of the goods in question.

The first point, therefore, which I have to consider is whether or not there was an error of law apparent on the face of the award.

The most recent decision on this subject is that of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Bulloo Spinning & Weaving Co., Ld. (1). There, in approval of the statement of the law of Mr. Justice Williams in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), which is quoted in the judgment of the Board, "an error in law on the face of the award is taken to mean that you can find in the award or a document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can then say is erroneous." The passage quoted from the judgment in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), also shows how very narrow is the compass which, in fact, is limitted to the award itself or matter incorporated in it, within which the error upon which the award may be impeached is to be found.

CHANDMUL MULCHAND v. S. & C. NORDLINGER

In this case there is no note appended by the arbitrator and I have to look at the award itself alone. It is contended that the words "as the buyers Messrs. Chandumul Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld" state reasons for the award which are erroneous in law.

With reference to consideration of the reasons stated by arbitrators in an award as grounds for impeaching it, the passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee itself indicates that reasons stated by an arbitrator for his award are matters to be considered and in this connection learned Counsel has also drawn my attention to Landauer v. Asser (3). In that case the umpire in his award said: "I decided that as the parties to the contract, dated 3rd November 1903, were by the terms thereof principals thereto, their interest and liability in insurance is defined to be the value of the invoices plus 5 per cent. etc." This led to the award being set aside, and the concluding passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kennedy indicates the ground, for he says: "My view is that as the award wrongly decides that in point of law under the contract Messrs. Asser have a title in the sum in dispute, it is bad on point of law and must be set aside."

I may therefore consider whether or not in this case the arbitrator's reasons for the award are sufficient or good in law. In my judgment they are not. The plaintiffs were the buyers: the Defendants were the sellers. The contract related to 60 bales. There was a dispute as to quality. The mere fact that the buyers were unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection is not by itself a sufficient reason for making an award against them. I do not desire to go further than I should having regard to the strict limitations laid down by the authorities as to what may be considered in a case such as this, but, ordinarily, where there is a dispute between a buyer and a seller with reference to quality, it could be the duty of the seller to prove that the goods were of the quality contracted for. No question such as this might have arisen and it might have been extremely difficult for the Plaintiffs to succeed had no reasons been stated for the award. But in view of the reasons stated for the award, in my opinion, the Plaintiffs are entitled to impeach it and I hold that the award is bad upon the face of it.

The other question that has been argued is as to the arbitrators having exceeded their jurisdiction. This is based upon the contention that it was the duty of the arbitrators before making any award to survey the goods. This contention is met by learned Counsel for the Defendants by the submission that the original agreement of the 2nd January 1918 did not contain the submission under which the arbitration was held, for which the subsequent documents to which I have already referred must alone be looked at. Incidentally I may observe that notwithstanding the cross-examination of the record-keeper of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce I have no doubt that the copy of the agreement of the 2nd January 1918 which has been produced by the Defendants was before the arbitrators. Learned Counsel's cross-examination, in the course of which he put a number of questions suggesting fraud against some individual or individuals whom he did not name, was not pressed to the extent of making a definite charge though I pointed out to him that if he were going to argue anything of the sort it would be his duty to do so. Why a subsequent document in the form of a submission had to be signed or filed before the Chamber of Commerce has not been made clear. One may possibly conjecture that it was required, among other reasons, because the copy of the agreement which had been produced before them was not stamped, though the copy in the hands of the Defendants does bear a stamp. Be that as it may, it is clear that according to the original agreement the parties intended that there should be a survey of the goods and that any award made by the arbitartors should be upon the basis of such survey. The subsequent application was not signed by both parties, and I am relegated to the agreement of 5th April which incorporates the points in dispute by reference to the parties' statements of the 1st March 1921 submitted with the application form bearing that date. In the remarks offered by the Defendants it is stated that the survey shall be held on the goods shipped and not on the shipment samples. The language does not merely suggest that a survey is necessary but takes it as a matter of course that there will be such a survey, the gist of the observation relating to what should be surveyed. I do not think there can be any question but that there was a common agreement between the parties which was never rescinded or varied in that respect, that there should be a survey by the arbitrators of the goods out of which the disputes arose and that that must be taken to have been a term of the submission. That being so, unless the arbitrators held their survey they were not entitled to make an award and the award made by them must be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction.

In the result, the suit must succeed and I declare that the award, dated the 3rd September 1921, is invalid and inoperative. The Plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the suit on Scale No. 2.

Bill of Lading—Exemption clause—Damage to goods consigned—Suit to recover damages—Perils of the sea, proof of—Onus—Negligence, what constitutes.

In a suit for damages to plaintiffs' goods consigned on defendants' schooner on a Bill of Lading containing the usual exemption clause as to "dangers and accidents of the sea and navigation of whatever nature or kind," it is for the defendant to plead and prove 'perils of the sea.' If he makes out a prima facie case, the plaintiff can rebut it by proving defendant's negligence.

The plaintiffs consigned a number of cases of safety matches by defendant's schooner. Four days later, there was a strong wind and rough weather though not amounting to a storm or cyclone and the steamer was driven away from the place where she anchored. The wind then changed its direction with the result that the schooner swung round and sat on her anchor causing a hole on her port side. The vessel stranded and there was water in the hold. The cases of safety matches were damaged by the sea water. In a suit for damages by the plaintiff against defendant alleging negligence on the part of the master in anchoring in shallow water :—

Held, that the facts proved amounted to a peril of the sea and the defendant had not been guilty of negligence;

The mere fact that the accident might have been avoided by greater foresight does not make it negligence. There is no difference between ordinary and extraordinary perils.

The cause need not be extraordinary in the sense that the cause must be uncommon. Although negligence does not save defendants' liability, if reasonable care is taken, the perils of the sea while not including the effect of mere ordinary wear and tear will include the consequences of any kind of accident ending in damages by seawater.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in O. S. No. 6 of 1918.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and K. S. Sankara Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, K. V. Sesha Iyengar and K. R. Rangaswamy Aiyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for damages to plaintiffs' goods consigned on defendants' schooner Sahul Hameed. The schooner left Colombo on the 25th August 1917 and arrived at Tuticorin on 28th August with 250 cases of safety matches entrusted by plaintiff to the master. The goods were landed on the 30th in a damaged condition. On a certificate of Survey (Ex. C.) by the Secretary of the Local Chamber of Commerce, the goods were sold by auction on 30th October 1917 (Ex. G.) and realized Rs. 3,142 (Ex. D). The market value is alleged to be Rs. 31,750. The suit is for the difference.

Ex. II is the bill of lading issued by the defendants' agent. It contains the usual exemption clause—

> "The act of God, King's enemies, Fire and all and every other dangers, accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation of whatever nature or kind soever excepted."

Though there has beenconsiderable argument on the question of burden of proof and several cases have been cited before us, the matter seems to be clearly settled in the present state of authorities. It is for the defendant to plead and prove 'perils of the sea'. If he makes out a prima facie case, the plaintiff can rebut it by proving defendant's negligence. See the jugment of Court of Appeal in The Glendarroch (1). Esher M. R. at p. 232 explains certain expressions of Lord Harschell in Wilson v. Xantho (2) ; See also Norway v. Ashburner (3); Scrutton on Charter Parties (10th Edition) Article 79 Note 1 and Article 83 note at page 293, Carver on Carriage by Sea (Section 87).

We have, therefore, to see what the facts alleged and proved are. The defendants claim that the damage to the goods was on account of a peril of sea i.e., that there was a strong wind on the night of the 29th and the ship was driven away from the place where she anchored at first towards the south. The wind then changed its direction with the result that the schooner swung round and sat on her anchor causing a hole on her port side. The vessel stranded and at 6 A. M. there was 5 feet of water in the hold. The cases of safety matches were damaged by the sea water. The plaintiff denies any change in the position of the ship and alleges negligence on the part of the Master in anchoring in shallow water.

Before discussing the evidence on these allegations, I may observe that the Subordinate Judge found on the 2nd issue that the liability of the defendant as carriers continued till the 30th and on the 9th issue, he found against their allegation that the Master was ready and anxious to deliver the goods on the 29th. It is on this footing that the appeal has been argued before us.

I will now discuss the evidence as to what happened on the 28th and 29th.

(Firstly), the weather on the 29th—P. W. 1 says that no signal of high and violent wind was given on that day. But this evidence is useless as it is proved by D. W. 1, the Port Officer, that no observation was taken during night. The extract from the log book Ex. K also shows that no entries were made for the night. D. W. 1 says that he recollects that the weather on the 29th was unsettled. We see no reason to reject this evidence. D. W. 3 the owner of another schooner M. S. Hydross which was alsc anchored in the barbour that night (See Ex. IX. This is also admitted by P.W. 2) says that there was high wind. D. W. 4 who was tandal of that Schooner says there were violent winds from 2 A. M. up to 3 or 3-30 A.M. But D. W. 5 says that there was not strong wind but only average wind. On the whole it seems to me that, there was some rough weather in the night though it is possible D.W. 4 was exaggerating. It might not have amounted to a storm or a cyclone.

The next question is—where did the schooner first anchor and did it move to another place further south on account of the wind. The coast here runs from north to south. A little to the south of the port and harbour there is an island called Hare Island on which there is a lighthouse. During night, lights were prohibited as the war was then going on. On account of the island the contours of equal depth near it recede towards the east and further from the coast.

If a ship anchoring due east of the port at a proper depth drifts towards the south, parallel to the coast, the water would be getting shallower on account of the nearness of the island.

On the 30th the ship was found in 7 feet of water (ebb). This is conceded by all the witnesses (Vide also Ex. E). According to P. W. 2, she was then 2 or 3 miles away from the pier and the other schooner was about half a mile to the north in 10 or 12 feet of water. He was not asked as to where the ship anchored on the 28th—a curious omission—nor was P. W. 3 questioned on this matter. P. W. 1 says that she was standing on the 28th at a point one mile from the beach. The distance given by P. W. 1 for the 28th and that by P. W. 2 for the 30th suggest that the ship changed its situation. The evidence for plaintiffs throws no further light either way. D. W. 3 says that the suit schooner was east of his own schooner (which it may be remarked was in 10 feet or 12 feet of water according to P. W. 2) by half a mile. To the same effect is D. W. 4 but his evidence is not intelligible being too briefly recorded. D. W. 3 says that she had moved on the morning of the 30th ¼ furlong off, D. W. 5 says that the ship had moved about 4 or 5 furlongs towards the shore on the southern side. D. W. 6 says that it had moved half a mile from its original place which must have been at 9 feet (ebb). He also says that it was 2 or 2½ miles away from the shore on the 28th and that he noticed its changed situation with reference to a buoy ¼ mile off. He appears to be disinterested and his evidence seems to me the most reliable. Taking all this evidence I am inclined to think that the other schooner was 1½ miles east of the port probably in 10 feet high water or 8 feet (ebb); the suit schooner was half a mile from the east i.e., 2 miles from the shore and that she must have been in 9 feet (ebb). It may be that D. W. 2 slightly exaggerated when he said he anchored in 12 feet (high water) in Ex. III. The place where the schooners were anchored was the usual place for them. Here it must be remembered that the difference in the tonnage between the two schooners is only 14 tons (Ex. IX) and half a mile towards the east is a proper distance between the two. The draught of the suit schooner aft is 7 feet (Ex. IX) and it is unlikely that on the 28th it anchored in 7 feet of water (ebb). It must have moved towards the south parallel to the coast thus getting into shallow water. A slight gale causing such change or even a wreck in the native craft is not uncommon (See also D. W. 5). The only difficulty in the case is caused by the reports of D. W. 1 —Ex. X and Ex. N. where he expresses his opinion that, from the beginning, she must have been in 7 feet of water. I have already observed that this is unlikely. His first report Ex. N. (dated 4th September 1917) shows that the holding ground where the ship was said to have been first anchored was not good. He then says that the evidence is not conclusive so far as the vessel's dragging of the anchor is concerned. Probably he had not at all the evidence we have now before us and his conclusion is, therefore, not decisive. He repeated it in the second report (Ex. X dated 8th September 1917). The learned Vakil for the appellant drew our attention to Ex. V, a protest made by the Master on the 30th August. This is in English, a language not known to the Master. That he relied on a change of situation, on the 4th September appears from Ex. N and he mentioned it expressly in his later protest Ex. III dated 7th September 1917. It may be that the Scribe of Ex. V omitted part of what was mentioned to him. Anyhow it must have been prepared in a hurry and the omission of the change in the position of the vessel in that document is not conclusive (in the face of the other evidence) to show that the explanation of the Master was an after-thought of the 4th September. I have not relied on the evidence of D. W. 2 as it may be said to be interested. I, therefore, find that the ship dragged its anchor and moved towards the south from its original position (8 feet ebb and 10 feet flow) to the later position (7 feet ebb). If it was fully loaded, 8 feet (ebb) of water could not be enough, but, with its actual load, it was sufficient (See D. W. 5).

The next question is whether the facts so proved amount to a peril of the sea. If the vessel had anchored from the beginning in 7 feet of water, one may say it was sheer carelessness but on the facts proved it cannot be described negligence. It may be that if the vessel had anchored in deeper water, further off towards the east, it would not have stranded even if it drifted towards the south on account of the wind. The mere fact that the accident might have been avoided by greater foresight does not make it negligence. The difference between ordinary perils and extraordinary perils suggested in Story on Bailments (section 512) has not been accepted by the authorities (Carver section 87). The cause need not be extraordinary in the sense that the cause must be uncommon. It is true that negligence does not save the defendants' liability (Willis, J. in Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co. (4). But if reasonable care is taken, the perils of the sea while not including the effects of mere ordinary wear and tear, will include the consequences of any kind of accident ending in damage by sea water (Abbot on Merchant Shipping, p. 612 citing Fletcher v. Inglis (5) Scrutton article 83, Coyecoran v. Gurney (6), Laurie v. Douglas (7). The Thrunscoe (8). The Catharine Chalmers (9) Bishop v. Pentland (10) where a rope broke, Dudgeon v. Pembrkeo (11).

In Amies v. Stevens (12). A sudden gust of wind was held to make all the difference. On the question of what is a proximate cause, the latest decision in Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society (13) especially the judgment of Lord Shaw of Dunferline may be referred.

The appellants pointed out that while the other schooner had 3 or 4 anchors (P. W. 3), it does not appear that the suit schooner had more than one. I do not think this matters. She had 15 fathoms of cable (Ex. N). The crew had put out more chain to prevent the dragging but without success (Ex. X). Some of the cases relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellants (Davis v. Garrett (14), and Morrison & Co.., v. Shaw Savill and Albion Co. (15), are cases of deviation. In Travers & Sons. Ltd. v. Cooper (16), clear negligence in leaving the barge unattended at night was proved and then it was for the defendant to show that the loss was not caused by the negligence. Negligence was

We think the defendants have not been guilty of negligence and have proved a peril of the sea. In view of this finding we have not heard arguments on the question of damages.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM LAHORE HIGH COURT.

February 21, 1924.

Present :—Lords Shaw, Blanesburgh and Sir John Edge.

NABI BAKSH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

AHMAD KHAN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom (Punjab)—Partition of estate—Collateral succession—Pagwand and Chundawand—Presumption.

Where a person governed by customary law, having different wives, makes a division of the property among the members of his complex family, with the result of creating a number of single families, then the portion of property succeeded to by the children of each wife becomes a separate entity and the rules of succession to it are the rules of succession to the owner of it and not to the ancestral owner to whom prior to distribution the whole property belonged. When the smaller entity thus formed is succeeded to, the pagwand system may still apply but it applies within the smaller family only and not within the range of the original entire family. In short, when a separate entity, created by division or partition, comes into being the full range of the succession to that entity is determined by whatever system is in fact proved to be in operation in that simple family, and it may quite well be assumed that within that simple family, the generally prevailing system of pagwand was not abandoned.

Ghulam Muhammad v. Muhammad Baksh, 4 P. R. 1891 (F. B.), approved.

Messrs. R. Montgomery and A. Majid, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of the Punjab at Lahore, dated 24th January, 1920, reported as 55 Ind. Cas. 171, reversing a decree of the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Shahpur at Sargodha, dated 10th July 1915.

The point for determination in the case relates to the succession to the property of a certain Bahadur Khan who died on the 26th April, 1907. The pedigree table is as follows :—

NABI BAKSH v. AHMAD KHAN

The case raises the question whether that property (of Bahadur Khan) devolves on Sahib Khan, son of Sher Khan, or whether it devolves also upon the descendants of Khanjar Khan and Bhai Khan. Reduced to a still simpler form, which, if necessary, can be particularised in the genealogical table, the question in the appeal is,—in the succession of Bahadur Khan, does the full-blood exclude the half-blood? If it does, then the appeal fails and Sahib Khan succeeds, he and Bahadur being descendants of Shahadat Khan by his second wife. If it does not, then the appellants, being descendants of Shahadat by his first wife, come in by right of the half-blood to share in the succession to Bahadur.

It is important to state the matter in this way, apart from committing oneself at the outset, on the subject of whether the case is governed by the pagwand rule or by the chundawand rule. This, for a reason to be afterwards specified.

Shahadat Khan, by his first wife, had two sons, namely, Khanjar and Bhai. He had also two sons by his second wife, namely, Langar and Sher. He died in the year 1860. In the year 1855, however, he purported to divide the property of Kot Bhai Khan under sanad of date 30th March of that year, from which sanad it clearly appears that the two sons of the first wife obtained certain specified lands and that the two sons of the second wife obtained certain other enumerated lands.

After a year or two, however, differences arose in regard to the payment of certain debts by the descendants of the first wife. On the 27th January, 1858, a petition was filed by Shahadat declaring that these two sons, namely, Bhai and Khanjar, had disgraced him and put him to trouble and he accordingly demanded that a parwana be issued to the Thasildar directing him to put the father back into possession and to dispossess these objectionable sons.

An arrangement was speedily come to. In the Court of Pandit Moti Lal, Extra Assistant Collector and Commissioner, there was on the 16th February, 1858, presented an application for partition of the property. Thereafter, on the 10th April, 1858, there was executed by Shahadat Khan a deed of partition, the construction of which has been, the subject of much discussion. Upon that, and generally upon the whole case, the Board had the advantage of a very able argument by Mr. Montgomery.

NABI BAKSH v. AHMAD KHAN

It appears to the Board to be clear that the property "previously divided" as the deed narrates (that is to say, in 1855), is again divided. It may be difficult to identify the names, but there appears to be no doubt that Kot Bhai Khan was again divided by giving to the two sons of the first wife jointly certain named lands or properties on the one hand, and on the other hand by giving certain other named lands or properties for joint possession and ownership by the sons of the second wife.

The phrase, however, occurs viz.,

"All my four sons shall be the owners in equal shares of the lands situated in the Ba." * * * * * * "The property situated at Kot Bhai Khan remains joint among my sons."

This deed, namely of 1858, is executed as a deed of partition "so that it may serve as an authority in future. After my death my four sons shall act upon this deed of partition."

This deed had appended to it an endorsement of a threefold character. This question is put:—"whether or not you have any objection to the deed of partition filed by you." That question is put separately and in the first place to the father Shahadat Khan. In the second place it is put to Khanjar and Bhai, the sons of the first wife jointly; and in the third place it is put to Langar and Sher, the sons of the second wife jointly. No objection is tendered, but on the contrary an acceptance is given, first for the sons of the first wife, and second for the sons of the second wife.

From that time, and for the long period of about 60 years there seems to their Lordships to be little, if no doubt, that as between these two families (or even as between the four sons, a question, however, which it is unnecessary for the purpose of this case to decide), there was a complete separation of the possession and ownership of the properties thus partitioned.

Their Lordships at this stage think it right to observe on the careful and satisfactory nature of the judgments of the Courts below, and they have adopted the narrative as to possession so clearly given in the judgment of the High Court.

The differences of opinion, however, in the Courts below arise in this way. In the Court of first instance, the learned Judge holds it to be proved that in the "village, partition of property takes place according to the pagwand system," and he concludes that, that being so, he is bound to the conclusion that the property in suit, which de facto is part of the property partitioned in 1852 which originally belonged to Shahadat Khan must fall under the rule that the full-blood and the half-blood, as within the family of that propositus, share and share alike, and that accordingly the succession to Bahadur must be regulated upon that footing. The learned Judge is so far confirmed in this that it is established, and it is indeed admitted by the High Court, that the pagwand system did obtain there. But the learned Judge makes no allowance for the true effect of the partition of property which had been made 60 years ago and upon which separate possession had followed. In the opinion of the Board it was necessary to take this carefully into account; and the judgment is erroneous in not having given full and correct effect to that transaction.

The learned Judges of the High Court did not fall into this error. In the opinion of their Lordships they were right in holding that the separate ownership and possession for about 60 years was as stated. But, in so doing, they appeared to be under the impression that the succession to Bahadur's share must not be governed by the pagwand rule, which includes the half-blood, but must be governed by the chundawand rule, which excludes it. They, therefore, preferred the respondents—holding, with accuracy, that "in the distribution of 1858 it was intended that thenceforward each group of sons should hold its own portion in the estate independently of the other." But they introduced into their judgment the following sentences:—

"Chundawand" and 'pagwand' are, however, rules rather of distribution among heirs entitled than rules of succession, and it was pointed out in Ghulam Muhammad v. Muhammad Bakhsh (1), that the above presumption could only be made when the existence of an ancestor with issue by at least two wives, and a pagwand or chundawand distribution of his estate, whether before or after his death, had been proved."

(1) 4 P. R. 1891 F. B.

If this means that the succession to Bahadur in this case must be regulated by the abandonment of the pagwand rule and as a necessary consequence the adoption of the chundawand rule their Lordships cannot agree. They are not quite sure, from consideration of the judgment, whether the learned Judges affirmatively take up that position. In the result, however, they reach the conclusion with which their Lordships entirely agree, to the effect that in the distribution of the succession to Bahadur the full-blood excludes that half-blood which is claiming in this case.

The truth is that, as the learned Judges of the High Court clearly point out, the question being dealt is (1) a collateral succession and (2) a collateral succession to property given to a child of a first wife and partitioned off and separated from property given over to the children of the second wife.

The theory of abandoning the pagwand rule for the chundawand rule need not necessarily be put forward. For when the distribution or segregation which occurred and has been so long acted on arose, each portion of property thus succeeded to by the children of the first wife became a separate entity ; and the rules of succession to it are rules of succession to the owner of it and not to the anterior or ancestral owner to whom, prior to distribution, a much larger entity, inclusive of that portion, belonged. It is, therefore, possible and it is necessary to decide this case on the simple ground that when the smaller entity thus formed is succeeded to the pagwand system may still apply, but it applies within the simple family consisting of Shahadat's second wife's children and not within the range of the complex family consisting of the children of his two wives. In short, when a separate entity, created by division or partition, comes into being the full range of the succession to that entity is determined by whatever system is in fact proved to be in operation in that simple family, and it may quite well be assumed that within that simple family, the generally prevailing system of pagwand was not abandoned.

But the partition was a definite, an accomplished and a long recognised, fact and annot be ignored. And accordingly the mbit of that system is confined to searching for the full-blood and half-blood within the divided and separated area. In that search it is not permissible to undo the distribution and search for the collaterals as if under the succession to the owner of the undivided property.

In affirming accordingly the Judgment of the High Court their Lordships are glad to be able to find that in their judgment the law of the Punjab, in this particular, stands as has now been stated upon what in their opinion is the very highest authority, namely, that of the Full Bench of the Punjab and specially of the very valuable exposition of the law in the case already cited by Plowden, J.

They mention the following passages :—

"That the portion allotted to a group should belong as an entirety to the members, who, for the time being, form or represent the group until the group is extinct, is no departure from the ordinary rule as to the devolution of shares. As to the redistribution of the portion, and devolution of the shares into which the portion is redistributed among the members of a group, that is a matter which concerns them alone, until the group is extinct exactly as in the case of the share of an individual and his descendants qua other sharers and their descendants. On this view, there is not really, at any time, a competition between half-blood and whole-blood, for the sons have been separated once for all at the original distribution, into several groups, such that all the members of each are related inter se by the whole-blood, and so far each group resembles a single family."

In a further passage the same learned Judge further states the question :—

" It is quite intelligible that when, by reason of matters subsequent to a pagwand distribution, the sons of several wives have arrived at condition not distinguishable from the result of a chundawand distribution among groups of sons, the same customary rule should apply in cases of collateral succession, as applies when there has been a chundawand distribution. But the basis of the preference of the whole-blood, when it exists in such a case, clearly is the association of the uterine brothers into distinct groups, the pagwand distribution notwithstanding."

There are other passages in this remarkable judgment which show how clearly the combined issues of a succession which is (1) collateral and (2) to a property after distribution by a common ancestor have been considered. When that ancestor makes a division or partition among the members of his complex family with the result of the creation of a number of single families, then among these simple familes, the question in instances like the present has solved itself, for there is within that limited ambit no half-blood to compete.

Their Lordships do not conclude this opinion without observing upon the expense in curred. It was agreed that the entire points in the appeal were substantially covered by a reference to a few documents; and accordingly these could have been presented to the High Court in a succinct and businesslike paper-book of a few pages. In the present appeal, however, there was printed in India an elaborate book of 1163 pages containing, it may be observed, very many inaccuracies. Their Lordships think it right to say that, in their judgment, this mass of printing is an abuse. When the Registrar looked at the case sometime before the hearing, he was of opinion that a large part of the record could not under any circumstances be necessary to put before their Lordships. He, therefore, communicated with the appellants' solicitors, and the atter, after consultation with their counsel, eliminated more than 540 pages. These were actually taken out of the bound books and were never before the Board. Had the judgment been favourable to the appellants the entire costs of that printed matter would have been disallowed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal shall be disallowed.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) s. 15 B—Decree ex parte against agriculturist—Execution of decree-Instalments whether can be allowed.

Where a decree is passed ex parte it is open to the judgment-debtor, in execution proceedings, to show that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree and to ask for instalments under section 15 B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 94 of 1922, confirming the order of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar in Darkhast No. 567 of 1921.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a decree was passed ex parte against the defendants for Rs. 3,000 and costs on October 22, 1921, by the Joint Subordinate Judge of Dharwar. The defendants were described in the plaint as being occupied in business. When the plaintiff applied for execution, the first defendant asked to be allowed instalments on the ground that he was an agriculturist at the date of the decree. The Subordinate Judge said: "The defendant is not an agriculturist in the decree. I cannot grant him instalments." The learned District Judge upheld the order on the ground that the decision of this Court in Devu Jetiram Gujar v. Revappa Sattappa (1) was applicable. All that that case decided was that the Court cannot under the provisions of section 15B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act grant instalments under a decree to a person who at the time the decree was passed was not, but has since become, an agriculturist. What the defendant sought to prove was that he was an agriculturist at the time of the decree, and unless it can be said that that question has already been decided against him, and is now res judicata, there is no reason why he should not be allowed to prove it in execution. Otherwise whenever an ex parte decree is passed and the defendant is not described as an agriculturist, he would be debarred from proving that fact thereafter, because he was not described as an agriculturist in the plaint and in the decree. In these proceedings we see nothing from which it can be held that the matter is res judicata. Therefore, the appeal will be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside, and the Darkhast sent back to the First Class Subordinate Judge to try the question whether the 1st defendant was an agriculturist at the time the decree was passed. No order as to costs.

Under section 52 of the Civil Procedure Code, the income of landed property which has passed from one Zemindar to the next, the property being an impartible raj, is liable in execution for the debts of the deceased Zemindar.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO THE FULL BENCH.

Oldfield, J.—The essential facts in these appeals lie in a small compass. The decree in Original Suit No. 65 of 1897 on the file of the Subordinate Court, Tinnevelly, was for the recovery of the amount due on a usufructuary mortgage by sale of the impartible zemindari of Gantamanayakkanur. The Zemindar against whom the decree was passed, died and was succeeded by his son 6th Defendant, the present Appellant, in 1908, before any of the proceedings to be referred to. They began with an abortive attempt to recover by sale and the appointment of a Receiver to collect the profits and credit them against the decree. The Respondent Company then became solely entitled to execute it and at a sale, confirmed on 8th September 1914, purchased the zemindari taking delivery in January 1915, and the Receiver was then discharged. On 25th March 1915, a personal decree for the balance still due was passed by the lower Court against 6th defendant. That decree was set aside, as passed without jurisdiction. But previously on 24th April 1915 another Receiver had been appointed to collect certain rents and profits outstanding for the years 1910—1913, after appellant became Zemindar, but before the sale, and it is the right to the amount collected by him, which is now in dispute. After the personal decree was set aside by this Court, another personal decree was obtained in the Subordinate Court, Tinnevelly, and was transferred to the lower Court for execution by recovery of the balance due from this fund. Appellant in E.A. No. 619 of 1917 asks for restitution of a portion of it, which was paid out to Respondent, under the first personal decree, since set aside, and in E.A. No. 274 of 1919, he claims the balance still with the Receiver against the Respondent's attachment. The lower Court in the orders under appeal dismissed these applications.

In the lower Court the claim was also to certain properties said to have been bought in by the Receiver at Court sales in the course of his recovery of the rents. But here it is not disputed that these purchases were made by him, not as Receiver, but in the capacity, which he also held, of Manager of the zemindari under the respondent Company; and, therefore, nothing more need besaid of that part of the claim. The claim to the fund is the sole matter now in dispute; and it has been argued, it is material, only with reference to the question whether the fund should be regarded as liable in the hands of respondent for the deceased Zemindar's judgment-debt and the personal decree obtained against respondent as his legal representative, no objection having been made to the assumption that the realizations by the Receiver were made on 6th defendant's behalf, as though he had received them directly.

The provisions of law in question are sections 52 and 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, the former being relevant in case appellant claims the zemindari and, therefore, the fund, which accrued from it, by survivorship and it is to be deemed to be property liable in his hands under Hindu Law for the payment of the debt of his deceased father; the latter in case he claims it by heirship. The point is that, if respondent can proceed in execution against the fund at all, a question to which I return, different objections to his doing so are relied on according to the nature of appellant's right to the estate. For it is urged that, if he took the estate by survivorship, the fund, its income, nevertheless reached his hands as his absolute property and was not subsequently merged by him in it by any course of dealing; and it, therefore, is not liable as part of his share of joint property for his father's debt. If, on the other hand, the estate was his inheritance and was liable for the last owner's debt in his hands, the question raised is whether its subsequent income would not also be so, as an accretion to it. Before dealing with these questions I observe that no issue was joined and no evidence was given in the lower Court as to the nature of his succession; and no suggestion was made and no finding was recorded as to any conduct by him indicative of an intention to merge these profits, which in the first instance were certainly separate property, in the zemindari and, if the zemindari was family property, to impress them with that character. On the latter point the only possible conclusion is no doubt in the negative. For he never obtained the profits, which were with the Receiver from their realization, and had no opportunity of treating them as possessing one character rather than the other. The former also is not material. For, if the zemindari is ancestral or family property, I still hold that the fact is relevant only for the purpose of determining the person entitled to succeed to it, not the nature of his rights in it on succession, which will in any case be a right to it as separate property with the full power of enjoyment and alienation, which has been recognized fully by authority. It will serve no useful purpose to state my reasons for this conclusion at any length, since I can add nothing to the enumeration of authorities at the date of decision of the Privy Council in Bijinath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (1) in Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 9th Edition 796, except that this decision seems to me in no degree to entail the conclusion reached in Shiva Prasad Singh v. Banimahab Chowdhury (2), or to displace that reached by this High Court in Rajah of Kalahasti v. Achigadu (3), Zamindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati, etc., Devasthanams (4), Maharaja of Bobbili v. Zamindar of Chundi (5), and Avalappa Naicker v. Murugappa Chettiar (6).

On the basis, however, that the zamindari is separate property inherited by appellant and that, therefore, only section 52 need be considered, two questions of some difficulty and importance have been raised, which should, we think, be laid before a Full Bench. The first is whether in such a case not only the inherited property is liable for the debts of its deceased owner but also the profits, such as the fund at present in dispute, which have accrued from it after his death; and the second whether clause 1 of section 52 authorizes execution against a deceased's property in the hands of his legal representative in this extended sense and by any method other than that actually specified in it, attachment and sale. The first question is one of substantive right, the second one of procedure and construction, its importance being that, if it must be answered in the negative and if respondent's attachment cannot in consequence of the nature of the property be followed by a sale, that attachment was not authorized by the section and can be no obstacle to appellant's claim.

On the first of these questions there is no doubt the clear principle that the deceased's assets are liable for his debts. But it is argued on behalf of appellant that the assets include only what is available during deceased's lifetime and can be described as accruing to him, not what may become realizable only after his death. On the other hand, the contrary is argued in accordance with general principle as supported by English authority and with the Satute Law of India regulating the distribution of estates by executors or administrators. As regards the former, it seems clear that in England goods which have accrued by increase since the death of a testator are assets, this having been so always in respect of personal property, vide Williams on Executors, 11th Edition, 1272; and, although real property became assets only in consquence of a course of legislation ending with the Land Transfer Act (60 and 61 Victoria, Ch. 65), there has never been any doubt that so far as it is assets its profits also are liable as assets because they are accretions to it. In re Hyatt Bowles v. Hyatt (7) explained in In re Moon Holms v. Holmes (8). In India the Succession Act (X of 1865) and the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) no doubt contain no general provision as to accretions, but they are dealt with in connexion with specific legacies and in connexion with the residue in sections 309 and 310 of the former and 128 and 129 of the latter and under other sections of both Acts they are liable subject to the other rules laid down for the distribution of the estate equally with property, with which they are connected. It is true, that there is nothing in the latter Act regarding accretions to the estate of an intestate Hindu and their liability in the hands of the administrator for his debt. But it may fairly be contended that their liability will be the same, whether there is or is not a will and further whether or no the estate is distributed by an administrator appointed by the Court. This reference to the Statute Law, which is not directly applicable to the fund in dispute is of course relevant only as indicating that the English Law as to accretions has been adopted in India; but even such an indication is important, when very little authority regarding them and their liability for debts has been adduced. For only two decisions, which are really in point have been cited, and in one Azeemoonisa v. Ameeroonnisa Khatoom (9) the liability is maintained but without any discussion. So also it was negatived in Rani Kunno Dai v. Lacy (10), the portion of the judgment at present material being, however, obiter, since the right to execute against accretions was then negatived also by an agreement with the heir. In Rajah of Kalahasti v. Prayag Dossejee Varu, (11) however, the creditor's right to proceed against accretions was recognized, on full consideration, the case last mentioned being distinguished and In re Hyat Bowles v. Hyatt (7) being referred to. There is certainly very little authority on a question, which, it might be supposed, would have been raised and decided in all the Presidencies. But we have been shown no reason for refusing to follow the decision of this Court just cited, and I should have been prepared to decide in accordance with English Law and the rule to be deduced from Indian Statutes that accretions are liable, if it were not advisable to leave the matter open for determination in connexion with the further question now to be stated.

On the assumption that the conclusion just suggested is correct, we have next the facts that section 51 of the Civil Procedure Code in terms authorizes execution only by attachment and sale and that this method of execution is not applicable to a fund, such as that now in dispute. Execution by attachment and sale is applicable only to the descriptions of property, to which that method of execution is applied in O. XXI and this fund is not one of them, since other methods of realisation are provided, when money in the hands of a third person is concerned. No doubt a debt due to the judgment-debtor may be attached and sold under O. XXI, r. 46 (1) (a) and 79 (3). But, although the fund in the hands of the Receiver may be payable to the Appellant or to Respondent, if he can'claim it in any other way, for instance in administration proceedings, it is not a debt due to the former for money had and received or otherwise, when it reached and is being retained by the Receiver (in spite of the invalidity of his appointment) in consequence of and subject to the orders of the Court and on'its behalf. The case in fact is covered, as regards attachment by r. 52 and as regards further proceedings by the reference to the further orders of the executing Court therein; and if the reference to attachment and sale in section 52 is to be read literally, the Respondent's claim based on the application of that section must be rejected. This, it may be observed, refers directly to the portion of the fund, which is still with the Receiver. As regards the portion already paid to Respondent, restitution of which is asked for in E. A. No. 619 of 1917 it may be pointed out that it was in fact paid out on the order of the Court and without execution by sale.

The question is then whether the limitation to attachment and sale of the methods of execution open to decree-holders, such as Respondents, which a strict construction of section 52 entails, should be sustained. It is true that a reason for such limitation is difficult to conjecture, particularly in view of the general reference to execution without specification of any method in section 50, dealing with decrees obtained against the deceased himself and only to be enforced against his representatives. Against this, however, it may be suggested that the intention of the legislature was to restrict execution against the deceased's property to cases in which liability is clear and identifiable, moveable or immoveable items of it are available for sale, insisting in accordance with some principle corresponding with that of the Administration of Estates Act (3 and 4, William IV, Ch, 104) on the creditor obtaining an administration judgment in others, vide In re Moon Holmes v. Holmes (8) already referred to. That Act, it may be pointed out, did not deal with claims such as those covered by section 50, which had not become merged in a judgment before the testator's death and which were left to be recovered in India, as they were recoverable in England, by ordinary execution, vide Williams on Executors, 11th Edition I, 778. And the use in the Code of the expression "property" instead of "assets of the deceased" may be consistent with this view; for the latter term has been in use in India since the Succession Act of 1865 and it is possible that the former, replacing the term "estate" in the Code of 1882, may have been deliberately preferred in order to avoid the implications, which a reference to "assets" would have entailed.

(9) 15 W. R. 285.

(10) 19 A. 235 ; A. W. N. (1897) 88 ; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 154.

(11) 35 Ind. Cas. 224 ; 30 M. L. J. 391 ; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 92.

All these, however, is conjectural; and the actual wording of the section is the firmer ground for a conclusion. Respondent contends that a free construction is made necessary by the inconvenience, if not the absurdity, of the result of adherence to the wording as it stands and that for "attachment and sale" we should read "attachment or attachment and sale" or else that the sentence should run simply "it may be executed against any such property," the words "attachment and sale" being merely a generic reference to execution procedure other than that relating to arrest. But it may be doubted whether the inconvenience or absurdity involved by a literal construction is great enough to justify these violent suggestions. As regards the first, more would still be required in the present and other cases, since attachment alone would not be sufficient to give the decree-holder his remedy and a reference to his obtaining the further orders of the Court would be required, vide O. XX, rr. 52 and 53; and provision for equitable execution by the appointment of a Receiver under O. XL, r. 1, would still be wanting. As regards the second, it is true that the enumeration in section 51 of methods of execution specifies, apart from the residuary item (e) and the appointment of a Receiver as item (d), only attachment and sale, item (b), as an available method of recovering under a money decree from the judgment-debtor. But, if section 51 is read in the light of O. XXI, it cannot be regarded as exhaustive and, as it was first enacted in any form in the present Code, it cannot control the interpretation of section 52, which is almost identical with section 252 of the Code previously in force. Neither suggestion is in any degree probabilized by the context and the improbability that the legislature through oversight excluded the remedy appropriate in certain cases is really all that respondent can rely on.

As observed already in connexion with another portion of the case, there is very little authority regarding the liability of a fund such as that now in dispute and there is not likely to be more regarding the way in which that liability can be enforced. In Rajah of Kalahasti v. Prayag Dossjee Varu (11), already referred to, the latter question did not arise, as execution was being taken against the legal representative's own property under section 52 (2); and no decision dealing with that question in connexion with other descriptions of property for which sale is not the appropriate method of execution, has been shown us. My learned brother is, I understand, more inclined than I am to a construction of section 52, such as respondent contends for; and it is advisable that the rights of decree-holders against the property of a deceased person in the hands of his legal representative should be clearly defined. We, therefore, refer for the decision of a Full Bench the questions above stated.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.— As my learned brother has very fully dealt with the questions raised, I shall in a few words state what my own view on the point is. Subsequent to the passing of the decree against the Zemindar he died and was succeeded by his son, the Appellant before us. The respondent Company, assignee-decree-holder, executed the decree and purchased the Zemindari at a sale confirmed on 8th September 1914 and took delivery thereof in January 1915. On 23rd March 1915 a personal decree for the balance due was passed against the Appellant, and on 24th April 1915 a Receiver was appointed to collect rents and profits outstanding for the faslis 1321 to 1323 (1911 to 1913), that is for the period between the death of the previous Zemindar and the sale referred to above. The personal decree was, however, set aside on 5th March 1917 as passed without jurisdiction and another personal decree was obtained on 24th September 1917. The following items of property were attached on 6th March 1918:—"(1) Amounts due under decrees in rent suits obtained by the Receiver, (2) arrears of rent due to the judgment-debtor for faslis 1321 to 1323." The learned District Judge observes: "The real dispute relates to the outstandings of the estate in the shape of rents and mesne profits for the faslis 1321 to 1323, whether decreed or not and whether realized or not."

The lower Court upheld the right of the respondent to the items attached.

Two questions were argued before us, one relating to mere procedure and the other to substantive rights of the parties.

Dealing first with the question of procedure raised, I find it difficult to understand how on the facts stated by the District Judge the points urged by the learned Vakil for the Appellant arise at all. His contention is this: under section 52 of the Civil Procedure Code when a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, the decree may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property. The personal decree in execution of which the Receiver was appointed having been subsequently set aside, the appointment of the Receiver was void and any amounts realized by him or decrees obtained by him should be regarded as monies in his hands or decrees obtained by him not in his character of Receiver but as an utter stranger But I do not find it stated that the Receiver was in possession of any monies at all. But whatever the true facts may be, the assumption underlying the argument is that under section 52, there cannot be an attachment of property unless the property can be sold in execution. Turning to the words of the section the argument is put in this way: "The decree may be executed by the attachment and sale of the property." If the property against which execution is taken out happens to be property which cannot under the Code be sold subsequent to the attachment, the attachment cannot be effected at all. I assume that there is such property in the hands of the Receiver. For instance, if he had cash or currency notes, the property may be attached but it cannot be sold. In that event, is there immunity in the case of cash or currency notes on the mere ground that when attached there cannot be a sale under the provisions of the Code? O. XXI, r. 56 provides that when the property attached is coin or currency notes the Court may direct that such coin or notes be paid over to the decree-holder. Thus the plaintiff obtains satisfaction of the decree without having to sell the property attached. To take another similar instance, under O. XXI r. 53 when the property attached is a decree the creditor who has attached the decree may proceed to execute the attached decree and the net proceeds may be applied in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed. If the argument of the appellant is correct, if a debtor dies leaving assets in the shape of decrees obtained by him or ready cash, they will not be available to his creditors for the mere reason that the assets left happen to be in that shape. One would expect that if a debtor died leaving cash and there was no question of the cash having been secreted or otherwise disposed of the creditor would be most easily enabled to obtain satisfaction of his debt. There would be no need to go through the lengthy execution proceedings which should be had if the assets left happened to consist, say, of immoveable property. But the contention curiously is that in that very event the creditor is without a remedy. What are the further implications of this position? If a decree is passed against a legal representative of a deceased person the decree-holder can never ask for appointment of a Receiver in execution. Section 51 clearly lays down that one of the methods of executing a decree is by appointing a Receiver. O. XL, section 1 enacts that the Court may appoint a Receiver of any property whether before or after decree. If a decree is obtained against a debtor in his life-time, a Receiver may be appointed in execution to realise the debts due to the debtor; but if a decree is obtained after his death against his legal representative such a course is not open to the decree-holder; and that is the argument and I need hardly say that this leads to an absurdity. O. XXI, r. 46 provides that in case of a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument, the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting the creditor from recovering the debt and the debtor from making payments thereof and that a debtor so prohibited may pay the amount of his debt into Court and that such payment shall discharge him effectually. If the contention of the appellant is correct, the debt attached must be sold and the debtor cannot pay the amount into Court. Even if the debtor offers to pay the amount into Court, it is beyond the power of the Court to receive it, but the debt must be sold. I cannot believe that the legislature intended that such absurd consequences should ensue.

HEM SINGH v. BHAGWAT SINGH

In my opinion the words "attachment and sale," in section 52 must not be literally construed, as a too literal interpretation leads to inconvenience and absurdity. Section 50 refers to execution of the decree where judgment-debtor dies after the decree but before the decree is satisfied. Section 52 contemplates proceedings in execution when the decree is passed against the legal representative himself. The object of the two sections seems to be to enact that the property of the deceased debtor shall alone be liable. Section 51 provides various methods of execution and when any of those methods is appropriate, it is not the scope of section 52 to exclude that particular method. The words used are inapt but the construction which I am inclined to adopt seems to be the only reasonable construction.

Next dealing with the construction of substantive rights raised, my learned brother has dealt with it at considerable length and it will serve no useful purpose to once again discuss the various English authorities that were cited before us. The result of the authorities appears to be that in England the income is treated as assets for the purpose of payment of debts. Is there any reason for refusing to give effect to this rule in India? I see none. I shall first take the case of a man dying leaving property which his successor inherits. Why should the successor in such a case be treated differently in India and be held not to be under an obligation to pay the deceased's debts out of the income of the property in his hands? The heir or successor may, if he chooses, sell the property immediately after the debtor's death. In that event he gets no income whatsoever from the property. Or the heir may derive income from the property and pay debts from and out of the income. If the income so derived is sufficient for the payment in full of the debts, the corpus remains in the hands of the heir and it will remain at his absolute disposal. But if the heir chooses to derive an income and the corpus itself is not sufficient to pay the debts, I fail to see why the income should not be available to the creditors. That is to say, there is no reason why a successor who postpones the sale of the corpus or defers the payment of the debts should be in a better position than one who the moment after the deceased's death disposes of the property or discharges the debts. In the case of a son liable to pay out of joint family property his father's debts there is even greater reason to apply the rule. The son is liable under the Hindu Law to pay the debt not only out of his father's share of the property but also out of his own share. How then can he be heard to say that the income from the property is not liable?

Turning to the case of an impartible estate I find that it is difficult to distinguish it for this purpose from the case of an ordinary partible estate. Whether in the hands of the father it was self-acquired property or joint family property and whatever the rule of succession applicable may be, I cannot imagine how the case of an impartible estate can be put on a different footing for this purpose from any other kind of property. The argument that accretions are the absolute property of the successor does not in the least touch the question. They may be the son's absolute property in one sense. But they are not necessarily his absolute property in the sense that they are not available to the father's creditors to the extent they are required for the discharge of his father's debts.

In the result, I agree in the Order of Reference proposed by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This reference ought not to have been made to this Bench. The two Judges who heard the matter were agreed, and I see no reason for adding anything to their statements on the points on which they were agreed.

The first point is quite a simple one, whether under section 52 of the Civil Procedure Code the income of landed property which has passed from one Zamindar to the next, the property being an impartible Raj, is liable to execution for the debts of the deceased zamindar, that is to say, in this case, the father of the appellant. Olagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (12) is a direct authority for the proposition that the income of such property is liable. The English Law is perfectly plain, and to the same effect, as laid down in a long series of cases relating to the income from realty which has descended to the heir-at-law. Stratford v. Ritson (13) is a good instance, in which it was held that the income of such real property is liable for the debts of the deceased as his assets in the hands of his heir, though it is not to be taken until the corpus is exhausted.

There is a further point raised by the reference as to whether the money, income accrued since the late Zemindar's death, which has come into the hands of the new Zemindar can be attached and sold. It can be attached, and it is unnecessary to sell it. The Code has made ample provision for execution upon the money belonging to a deceased person in the hands of another. There was no necessity to refer that point, nor do I think it necessary to say anything about it.

The appeals are dismissed with costs.

Coutts-Trotter, J.—I think that this case is covered by the decision in Olagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (12) and I venture to put in my respectful protest against the reasoning on which this case was referred to this Bench. My brother Oldfield says :

> " It is advisable that the rights of decree-holders against the property of a deceased person in the hands of his legal representative should be clearly defined."

Personally I protest against a Bench being called upon to define generally the rights of decree-holders and I entirly decline to do so. It is enough to say that this case is covered by Olagappa Chetty v. Arbuthnot (12) and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Ramesam, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The sole question for determination in this appeal is whether the defendants are full proprietors and are, therefore, entitled as such to share in the village shamilat on partition. The learned District Judge has held that they are not so entitled and has decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs in both Courts.

NIHAL CHAND v. GURDITTA MAL

The defendants have now come up in second appeal to this Court, and it has been contended on their behalf that the finding is vitiated by reason of the fact that certain important documents on the record have been misread and misconstrued while some have not been considered at all by the learned Judge of the Court below. It is further contended that the onus of proving that the defendants were only malikan qabza and were not full proprietors was upon the plaintiffs and that they had failed to discharge this onus. In our opinion there is no force in any of these contentions. The question of onus of proof only arises where there is a question of fact to be determined and there is no evidence one way or the other which will enable the Court to come to a conclusion. Where evidence is adduced by both the parties, then the question of the burden of proof becomes immaterial, and the Court has to determine on the evidence before it vide Hari Singh v. Tokharam Marwari (1); Ram Khelawan Singh v. Ram Nath Singh (2); Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachela Gounden (3).

As to the second contention, Bakhshi Tek Chand, the learned Advocate for the appellants, has taken us through the whole facts of the case and has specially invited our attention to the documents (P. 2 and D. 1) which, he says, have been misread and have not been correctly construed by the learned District Judge. P. 2 is a copy of the judgment passed in 1857 between the predecessors-in-title of the present parties. It appears that in 1857 the predecessors-in-title of the present plaintiffs brought a suit against the predecessors-in-title of the present defendants for redemption of certain lands in Patti Massu in Mangowal village of the Shahpur Tahsil. This suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that the lands were under mortgage with the then defendants. It is contended by Bakhshi Tek Chand that this document does not in any way determine the rights of the defendants in the village shamilat and does not prove that they are merely malikhan qabza and not the full proprietors. The learned District Judge, however, does not base his judgment on his document alone. He merely takes this document into consideration as a relevant piece of evidence and holds that it was found in 1857 that the defendants had acquired title in the village by purchase, that they were not the descendants of the original founders of the village and that this fact lends support to the plaintiff's contention that the defendants are malikan qabza and not the full proprietors. This inference he was certainly entitled to draw from the judgment and we do not think that in drawing this inference he has misread or misconstrued the document or that he has committed any error of law which vitiates his judgment.

The next document objected to is D. 1. It is contended that this document does not help the plaintiffs in any way whatever, and that the learned District Judge was wrong in holding otherwise. D. 1 is a copy of the Shajra nasah of certain proprietors in this village and shows that they acquired title either by purchase or gift or by long possession. The learned District Judge was of opinion that as the present plaintiffs were grouped together with these proprietors, they must belong to the same category and that their rights could not in any way be superior to those of other non jhamat proprietors who acquired title by gift or purchase. This was a perfectly correct interpretation of the document, and we do not think that the defendants are right in contending that the interpretation put upon it by the learned District Judge is wrong.

It is further contended that D. 15 has not been considered by the Court below, which showed that the defendants were co-sharers in the shamilat Patti Messua. This document has certainly not been referred to in the judgment, but we do not think it was necessary that the learned District Judge should have referred to each and every piece of oral and documentary evidence which he had taken into consideration. The evidence had been considered as a whole and there is nothing to show that this document was ignored. There was no error or defect in the procedure, and there is abundant authority for holding that the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding. In our opinion there was sufficient evidence before the learned District Judge to support his finding and we do not see any reason to differ from the conclusions arrived at by him.

(2) 1 P. L. T. 640.

(3) 56 Ind. Cas. 117 ; 43 M. 567 ; (1920) M. W.N. 61 ; 27 M. L. T. 102 ; 11 L. W. 399 ; 38 M. L. J. 476 ; 22 Bom. L. R. 576 ; 18 A. L. J. 707 ; 47 I. A. 76 ; 25 C. W. N. 485 (P.C.).

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLI, r. 23—Suit not decided on preliminary point—Remand by appellate Court—Appeal—Inherent powers of remand.

A remand under the inherent powers of the Court can only be made where the justice of the case requires it.

The mere fact that an order of remand contravenes the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code does not mean that it is made under the inherent powers of the Court and to say that there is no right of appeal in such a case would be to refuse an appeal in every case in which the order of remand is erroneous.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Twenty-Four Parganas, dated the 19th July 1921.

Messrs. A. N. Bose and S. N. Mukherjee, for the Appellants.

Messrs. J. Kanjilal and S. Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This is an appeal from an order of remand. A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies as the order has not been made under O. XLI, r. 23 Civil Procedure Code, the Trial Court not having disposed of the suit on a preliminary point. It appears to us that this order was not made under the inherent powers of the Court to order a remand which can be made only where the justice of the case requires it. To say that there is no appeal where the Court acts in contravention of r. 23 of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code and reverses the judgment of the Trial Court and remands the case would be to refuse an appeal in every case where the order of remand is erroneous. We are, therefore, of opinion that in this case, the appeal is competent.

Then with regard to the order complained of, it appears that the learned Subordinate Judge has sent back the case for trial of the second question mentioned in his judgment, namely, whether the plaintiff's alleged right was extinguished by an user for more than twelve years before the suit. This question was tried by the first Court under the first and the fifth issues and decided against the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the mode in which this question was decided by the Trial Court was erroneous and he accordingly remanded the case for retrial of the question having regard to the observations made by him in his judgment. It seems to us that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have decided the question himself and, if he thought that further evidence was necessary, he might have acted according to the provisions of r. 27 and 28 of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code and come to a decision on the question himself. We, therefore, set aside the order of remand and direct that the Subordinate Judge do rehear the appeal and try all the questions himself.

An objection has been taken on behalf of the appellants that the finding of the Subordinate Judge with regard to point No. I stated in his judgment is erroneous and the contention, that the question can be raised in this appeal, is based upon the argument that if the learned Subordinate Judge had found the question in the defendant's favour as the Trial Court has done, there would have been no occasion for deciding the second point or for sending the case back on remand to the Trial Court. As we have heard both the parties on the question, it is not necessary for us to say whether it is competent to the appellants to raise the question at this stage of the case but we should decide it now as both parties desire it. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in saying that the plaintiff No. 1 had title to the land in dispute. It is urged that, although he was a co-sharer of the defendants and was the representative of a party to the partition suit, No. 79 of 1884, he was not given any right of passage over this strip of disputed land as he was not given any land by the partition contiguous to the disputed land. But the fact is that this piece of land was included in the partition suit which shows that it belonged to all the co-sharers, and that it was not allotted to any one person as appertaining to his share by the decree in the partition suit. The result is that the plaintiffs remain joint owners of the disputed land with the other co-sharers and, therefore, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this question appears to be right.

Then objection is taken with regard to the finding of the Subordinate Judge as regards the right of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. The Trial Court found that the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 had no right to the disputed land. The Subordinate Judge does not come to any definite finding on the question but simply says " even if the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 had no right to the land, the right of the plaintiff No. 1 could not be questioned. It was necessary for him to find, in order to pass a proper decree whether the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 had any right or not. It is stated on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are the representatives in interest of some of the parties to the previous partition suit. The Subordinate Judge will, therefore, decide the question as regards the title of these plaintiffs.

The order of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the case sent back to that Court for being dealt with having regard to the observations made above. We make no order as to costs.

Walmsley, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Inheritance, exclusion from—Dumbness, whether must be congenital—Widow-Maintenance, assessment of, principles governing—Settlement, deed of, whether can be set aside at instance of person entitled to maintenance.

It is not necessary according to Hindu Law that dumbness must be congenital in order to disqualify a person from sharing in the inheritance.

Charu Chander Pal v. Nobo Sundari Dasi, 18 Cal. 327; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 219, relied on.

Case-law discussed.

The principle which should govern the Court in fixing the maintenance of a Hindu widow is first to look to the mode of life of the family during her husband's lifetime and the amount fixed must be sufficient to allow the widow to live as far as may be consistently with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's life-time, then to see what the husband's estate is and also to see how far that estate is sufficient to supply her with maintenance on this scale, without injustice to other members of the family who also have their rights to maintenance out of the estate, like hers.

Sm. Karoonamoyee Dabee v. The Administrator-General of Bengal, 9 C. W. N. 651 at p. 653, relied on.

A deed of settlement executed by a Hindu widow cannot be set aside at the instance of a person who has only a right of maintenance out of the estate.

BAI PRATAPGAVRI v. MULSHANKAR

Mr. V. S. Bhandarkar, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has filed this suit for a declaration that she, as the heir of her deceased husband, is entitled to all the properties left by him and that Bai Premcore, her mother-in-law, had no right or interest in the estate left by her son except that of maintenance and residence and for a declaration that the deed of settlement made by Premcore is null and void and does not affect the plaintiff's interest in her husband's estate; and that the first defendant has no right or interest therein as a trustee and in the alternative for a declaration that Bai Premcore had no right to fix the amount of her maintenance and the amount so fixed is not binding on her.

It appears that the plaintiff was married to one Maganlal Ghelabhai in the year 1915 when she was about twelve years old and Maganlal Ghelabhai died on October 27, 1916, leaving him surviving the plaintiff his childless widow and a mother named Bai Premcorebai. There is no dispute that the plaintiff should have been the heir of Maganlal Ghelabhai according to Hindu Law but the defendant's case is that the plaintiff is disqualified from inheriting the estate left by her deceased husband because she is deaf and dumb.

The plaintiff's case is that in order to disqualify her from sharing in the inheritance she must be proved to have been deaf and dumb from birth or in other words congenitally. The plaintiff's case is that she was attacked with plague in Samvat year 1964 and in consequence of that disease she lost her power of speech and also her sense of hearing. The plaintiff's case is that unless it is satisfactorily proved that she was deaf and dumb by birth she is not disqualified from sharing in the inheritance.

On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the defendants by Mr. Setalvad that it is not necessary that dumbness must be congenital or by birth. It is enough if it is proved that the dumbness is incurable and that the plaintiff was dumb at the time when the inheritance opened, i. e., at the time when Maganlal died; and he further states that if it is held that dumbness must be congenital, the evidence in this case sufficiently and satisfactorily proves that the plaintiff was dumb and deaf from her birth. It is common ground that the plaintiff was dumb at the time of the death of her husband, viz., in October 1916. It is also common ground that the plaintiff has been dumb and deaf since she was about three or three and a half years old. Therefore the question I have to determine is whether under Hindu Law, to exclude a person from inheritance it is necessary that a person should be deaf and dumb from birth or is it sufficient if a person is proved to be deaf and dumb at the time when the inheritance opens out. Many cases have been cited at the bar. The text from Manu has been cited and it reads as follows:—

"Eunuchs, and outcastes, persons born blind or deaf, mad men, idiots, the dumb and such as have lost the use of a limb are excluded from a share of the heritage."

It has been argued on behalf of the defendants by Mr. Setalvad that under this text, in order to disqualify a person from inheriting he must be blind and deaf from birth, the adjective 'born' does not apply to the other disqualifications which are mentioned, viz., mad men, idiots and those who have lost a limb. It is urged that in the case of Murarji Gokuldas v. Parvatibai (1) Westropp, C. J. has decided that "according to Hindu Law, as prevailing in the Bombay Presidency, blindness, to cause exclusion from inheritance, must be congenital" and under the text in Manu also it is quite clear that blindness must be from birth, i. e., persons who are born blind and the learned Judge in the course of a very exhaustive, learned and considerate judgment considers other grounds of exclusion also and comes to the conclusion that the other grounds of exclusion must also be congenital. Although this dictum was obiter so far as the decision in Murarji Gokuldas v. Parvatibai (1) was concerned, yet coming as it did from an erudite and learned Judge like Sir Michael Westropp it is entitled to very great respect. I have therefore, now to consider whether under Hindu Law, dumbness must be congenital in order to exclude a person from sharing in the inheritance. It has been urged by Mr. Bhandarkar for the plaintiff that the case of Vallabhram Shivnarayan v. Bai Hariganga (2) decides that dumbness must be congenital to exclude a person from inheriting. I must say that having regard to the question that was at issue in that case, it was assumed that the person there was deaf and dumb by birth and the only question at issue there was whether the text applied to females also. The text writers have mentioned other cases showing that dumbness must be congenital. Then the case of CharuChunder Pal v. Nobo Sunderi Dasi (3) has been cited. This case clearly shows that it was assumed that the person there was born deaf and dumb and this question about the exclusion of a person from inheriting on account of dumbness from birth was not decided at all by Norris, J. as appears from his judgment which says (p. 330) :—

"Baboo Umakali contended that dumbness to render the person afflicted therewith incapable of performing religious ceremonies, and, therefore, of inheriting, need not be, as in the case of blindness and deafness, congenital; that if a man was dumb when the succession opened out, he was ipso facto excluded from the inheritance as being a person incapable of performing religious ceremonies, and thereby conferring spiritual benefits on the deceased owner of the property. In the view I take of the first branch of the learned pleader's contention, I think it is unnecessary to express any opinion upon this point."

Therefore, in this case Norris, J. does not express any opinion on the point, viz., whether dumbness must be congenital or not. Similarly Bannerji J. in his judgment at p. 332 also says "a good deal of argument was addressed to us on behalf of the appellant to show that dumbness in order to disqualify a person from inheriting need not be congenital." Therefore, it is quite clear that both the learned Judges did not decide whether dumbness must be congenital or not, but Bannerji, J. goes further and expresses an opinion that "if it were necessary to decide that question in this case I should have felt inclined to answer it in favour of the appellant's contention." Further it must be observed that Sir Michael Westropp in Murarji Gokuldas v. Parvatibai (1) has stated that blindness also should be congenital to exclude a person from sharing in the inheritance. On that point both the Madras and our own High Court have subsequently decided that it need not be congenital, for in Muthusami Gurukkal v. Meenammal (4) it is held that insanity, as a ground of exclusion from inheritance under Hindu Law, need not be congenital, and our present Chief Justice in Bapuji Narso v Dattu Aniaji (5) has stated that (p. 407) : —

"It would appear from the judgment of Sir Michael Westropp in Murarji Gokuldas v. Parvatibai (1) that although the learned Judge was only considering the question whether blindness to cause exclusion from inheritance must be congenital, after examination of the texts he expressed the opinion that madness, as well as blindness, to disqualify a person from inheritance, must be congenital. That opinion, although entitled to the very greatest respect, still cannot be regarded as anything else but obiter."

The conclusion he has come to is that it need not be congenital. But having regard to the text of Manu I feel diffident in expressing an opinion on the text of Hindu Law, not knowing Sanskrit, on which the whole interpretation is based. I do not profess to be very learned in Hindu Law but having regard to the position of the word 'born' before the words blind or deaf (I read the text from Manu) it is clear that in order to exclude persons only blind and deaf, these defects must be there from birth. There are no decided cases on this point nor have the text writers given any authority for the proposition that dumbness must be also congenital. On the authority of the expression of opinion by Bannerji, J. in Charu Chunder Pal v. Nobo Sunderi Dasi (3) I hold that it is not necessary according to Hindu Law that dumbness must be congenital in order to disqualify a preson from sharing in the inheritance.

But it is further contended by Mr. Setalvad that the evidence in this case clearly shows

(2) 4 B. H. C. R. (A. C. J.) 185.
(3) 18 C. 327 ; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 219.
(4) 55 Ind. Cas. 576 ; 43 M. 464 ; 38 M. L. J. 291 ; (1920) M. W. N. 253 ; 27 M. L. T. 329.
(5) 73 Ind. Cas. 279 ; 25 Bom. L. R. 404 ; 47 B. 707 ; (1923) A. I. R. (Bom.) 425.

that the plaintiff was dumb by birth. For that purpose it is necessary to examine the oral evidence that has been adduced in this case. [After a discussion of the oral evidence on the point, the judgment proceeded:] Therefore, on the oral testimony I must hold that the facts in this case clearly prove that the plaintiff was dumb congenitally and not as a result of any malady such as an attack of plague she had in Samvat year 1964.

Then the other question which Mr. Bhandarkar has urged is the question of maintenance fixed by Premcore the plaintiff's mother-in-law. Mr. Bhandarkar has urged that the amount of maintenance so fixed by Premcore is inadequate and insufficient for her needs and the plaintiff is not bound to accept the same and that she should be treated more liberally in respect of her maintenance.

Mr. Bhandarkar has urged that under Hindu Law, in a case like this, where a woman but for this disqualification would have become the heir of her deceased husband and got all the property, the basis of awarding maintenance should be the income of the whole property. He cited in support of this a passage from Sircar's Hindu Law, p. 377. Unfortunately the passage does not support him. The passage is in these terms :—

"Hence what the Hindu Law seems to provide is that their shares should be in the possession of the other members who must furnish them and their family with maintenance and defray the expenses or marriage of their daughters."

This does not mean that the income of the whole share which but for this disqualification would have been theirs, should be given to them. It only means that if she is a female and has daughters then the marriage expenses of such daughters must be provided for. If a male member is disqualified by reason of dumbness, not only what is necessary for him must be provided, but what is also necessary for marriage expenses of his daughters should be provided for.

Further he relied on a passage which is cited by Wilson, J., in the case of Sm. Karoonamoyee Dabee v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (6). With every word in that passage I agree viz. :—The principle which should govern the Court in fixing the maintenance of a Hindu widow is first to look to the mode of life of the family during her husband's life-time and the amount fixed must be sufficient to allow the widow to live as far as may be consistently with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's life-time. Then to see what the husband's estate is and also to see how far that estate is sufficient to supply her with maintenance on this scale, without injustice to other members of the family who also have their rights to maintenance out of the estate, like hers.

Mr. Bhandarkar has urged there are no other members of the family whose rights to maintenance out of the estate have to be considered and as there would be no injustice done to any other member of the family, the whole income of the property left by her deceased husband should be given to her.

In fixing the maintenance of a Hindu widow the principles laid down in the above passage have always been followed. Those principles will be followed even in this case but it has not yet been clear in this case what the total income of the properties left by her deceased husband is. For the purpose of fixing the amount of maintenance, I have to take into account the income of the property the subject-matter of the deed of settlement also. Further it was urged that Bai Premcore sold one of the properties to the first defendant. Then Bai Premcore in her application for letters of administration of the property of her deceased son has sworn the property to be worth Rs. 58,000. The Court is not yet in a position to know what income the properties yield. But having regard to the principles referred to above there will be no difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to what amount should be given for maintenance to the plaintiff when the income of the properties is properly assessed.

The last point urged on behalf of the plaintiff is that the deed of settlement made by Premcore must be set aside. It is, however, well-established law that a deed of settlement cannot be set aside at the instance of a person who has a limited interest. It could be done at the instance of even a remote reversioner. In any case I cannot set aside the deed of settlement at the instance of the plaintiff who is only entitled to a right of maintenance. The best course for the plaintiff would be to advertise for the next reversioner and then file a suit for setting it aside.

There was one point which I have omitted to mention and that is about the conduct of Kanji the next friend of the plaintiff. It is urged that Bai Premcore made an attempt to make a Will. Kanji had read it and had approved of the provisions and had undertaken to carry out the provisions of that Will and to-day he is in Court as the next friend of the plaintiff. I do not attach much importance to the conduct of Kanji for on the materials we have in this case there is ample evidence to show that the plaintiff was dumb congenitally. This dumbness was not the result of any malady or the result of the attack of plague she had as testified by Dr. Choksey.

Mr. Bhandarkar urges that there is no sufficient evidence that this dumbness of the plaintiff is incurable. So many people observed her while she was young. The plaintiff is now about nineteen years, a Vaid from Jamnagar had occasion to see the plaintiff and he said that medicine could do nothing in her case. Nothing has been done for the last sixteen years and we may take it for granted that the plaintiff will have to remain in this unfortunate position for the rest of her life.

I must hold that this is a case of incurable dumbness.

The result is that as far as the maintenance is concerned, the suit connot be dismissed but as to the declarations which the plaintiff has asked for those must all be refused and I hold that the plaintiff is disqualified from sharing in the inheritance on account of her incurable dumbness which need not be congenital. But if it is held that it should be congenital the facts in this case clearly prove beyond any doubt that in the case of the plaintiff, the dumbness was congenital.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2545 OF 1922.

March 14, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Justice Moti Sagar.

Mt. CHANDO alias SIVANWALI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SIRI RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Second Appeal—Finding based on no evidence—Conjectural grounds—High Court, whether will interfere.

A finding of fact that is based on no evidence at all or on purely conjectural grounds is not binding and is liable to be set aside in second appeal.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 13th July 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by one Musammat Chando of Kaithal in the Karnal District for recovery of Rs. 770 on the basis of a promissory note, dated the 24th of February 1915. The defendant denied the execution of the promissory note in 1915 and stated that he was at Bikaner at the time when the promissory note is alleged to have been executed. He further stated that he had given a promissory note to the plaintiff in 1911 at Hissar which had been paid off and that the date of that promissory note had been altered from 1911 to 1915 in order to bring the suit within limitation. The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the claim.

The learned District Judge, however, came to a contrary finding and held that the figure 1911 in the promissory note had been altered to 1915 and that the suit was not maintainable on the basis of this promissory-note.

The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court and it has been contended on her behalf that the finding of the learned District Judge as to the alteration of the date in the promissory note is based upon conjectural grounds and should, therefore, be set aside. In my opinion this contention is well founded and must prevail. The learned District Judge has given three grounds for coming to the finding that the date in the promissory note has been altered :—

(1) that the promissory-note is stamped with a King Edward stamp which was probably not in existence in 1915 ;

(2) That the defendant was at Bikaner when the promissory note is alleged to have been executed ; and

(3) That the alteration in the promissory note is obvious.

As to the first ground it is admitted by the learned Counsel for the respondent that it is conjectural and that the learned District Judge was not justified in the absence of any evidence to the contrary to come to a finding that there were no King Edward stamps in existence in 1915.

As to the second ground it is clear from the evidence that it has not been definitely proved that the defendant was at Bikaner in 1915. Certain entries from a school register at Bikaner have been produced, but no attempt has been made to prove those entries. I am unable to hold on the basis of these entries alone which are unproved that the defendant was actually at Bikaner at the time the promissory note is alleged to have been executed. Moreover, I do not think that the defendant's presence at Bikaner in February 1915, is of much consequence so far as this case is concerned. The plaintiff's case is that there were dealings between her and the defendant's wife and that the promissory note in question was handed over to her by the defendant's wife at Hissar. It is quite possible that the defendant may have been at Bikaner and that he may have forwarded the promissory note from Bikaner to his wife at Hissar for delivery to the plaintiff. In these circumstances the cause of action could certainly arise at Hissar and the defendant's absence from that place would not be of any importance and would not have any bearing on the decision of this case.

As to the third ground I am unable to agree with the Court below that the alteration is obvious. I have carefully examined the promissory note in question and am unable to see any alteration therein. In any case the finding of the learned District Judge upon this point is not based upon any evidence whatever. There is no evidence on the record to show that the defendant had executed a promissory note in 1911 in favour of the plaintiff and that the date of that promissory note was altered from 1911 to 1915. The finding not being based on any evidence is not binding on this Court and must, therefore, be set aside.

I accept the appeal, and reversing the order of the Court below, decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

If on the date of the hearing of a suit, the plaintiff does not appear and his pleader has no instructions to conduct the suit, then there is no reason for the Court to raise issues or, if they have been already raised, to find on them. The suit must be dismissed under O. IX, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. In such a case the aggrieved party can apply for a review of the order or apply for an order to set aside the order of dismissal. The fact that the Court erroneously finds on the issues and rejects the claim does not entitle the aggrieved party to move the High Court in revision.

Mr. V. D. Limaye, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has filed this suit to recover Rs. 112-8-0 from the defendant with costs and interest representing the estate of the deceased Chhatrabhuj. The defendant denies the claim. On the record it appears that issues were raised, the Judge found on the issues and rejected the claim with costs. An application was made to this Court, in revision on the ground that the Court, on the day of the hearing when an application was made for adjournment as the plaintiff was ill, rejected the application and dismissed the suit wrongly. If the plaintiff was absent and the pleader had no instructions to conduct the suit then there was no reason for the Court to raise issues or if issues were raised to find on them. If the plaintiff does not appear either in person or by a pleader who has instructions to go on with the suit, then the suit must be dismissed under O. IX, r. 8. In such a case the party aggrieved by the order can apply for a review of the order or apply for an order to set aside the order of dismissal. The plaintiff applied neither for review nor for a rule. Owing to the Judge having found on the issues he thought that the order passed was a decree. That was most unfortunate and it may very well be that the plaintiff was misled in making this application owing to the way in which the case was dealt with by the Subordinate Judge. It is still open to the plaintiff to apply to the Subordinate Judge to restore the suit to the board if he can induce the Judge to excuse the delay. We cannot direct that the delay shall be excused but no doubt when the application is made everything that has been urged before us as regards the misunderstanding, which was the reason why the plaintiff did not make the application sooner, will be heard and considered by the Judge. The rule must be discharged.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 10—Divorce—Petition by wife—Adultery and cruelty—Husband living with another woman—Wife required to live under orders of mistress.

A Kachin christian who was married to another Kachin Christian, reverted to Animism and began to live with a Shan woman. He refused to let his Christian wife live with him except as a lesser wife under the orders of the Shan woman as chief wife. The Christian wife could not bear this indignity and left him. The husband continued to live with the Shan woman and the Christian wife sued him for divorce ;

Held, that the petitioner was entitled to a divorce on the ground of adultery coupled with legal cruelty. In considering the question of cruelty the Court will take into consideration the husband's general conduct towards the wife and if this be of a character tending to degrade her, and subjecting her to a course of annoyance and indignity injurious to her health, will feel itself at liberty to hold the cruelty proved.

Swatman v. Swatman, 4 S. and T. 135 ; 164 E. R. 1467, relied on.

Civil reference for confirmation of a decree for divorce.

JUDGMENT.—In this reference for confirmation of a decree for divorce the parties are Kachins, and were, as found also by the trial judge, Christians at the time of marriage, though the respondent declares that he reverted to Animism a short time before the marriage.

Yet whatever he has done since, he was shortly before the marriage a Christian and asked to be married according to Christian rites. We think he was a Christian at the time of marriage.

JAYAVANT RAO NARAYAN DESHMUKH v. NARSING SAKHARAM DESHMUKH

Shortly after his marriage, he left his wife and went to Rangoon to get veterinary training there.

The course lasted three years, presumably till May 1921, and though in the first two years he had one month's holiday in each year, he did not spend it either with his wife or contribute to her support.

At the expiration of the three years, i.e. about May 1921, he returned to Bhamo as a veterinary assistant and soon afterwards proceeded to live with a Shan woman named Ma Tin.

About a year ago the petitioner went and stayed for about 9 days with the respondent and Ma Tin : she, however, quarrelled with Ma Tin, whereupon she says respondent kicked her and slapped her drawing blood ; she, however, continued to live in the house about 4 days and then finding that she was expected to live as the lesser wife and be under Ma Tin's orders, she left the house for good, being unable to bear the indignity. On these grounds she seeks for a divorce, which the learned Judge granted to her on the ground of desertion coupled with the fact that he was a Christian when he married the respondent and that he had since exchanged Christianity for Animism, and was living in adultery with Ma Tin. The desertion prior to her return to her husband if it was an abandonment contrary to her wish, was condoned by her return to her husband's house, and though I should be prepared to hold that he had deserted her by refusing to let her live with him unless Ma Tin lived with them as the chief wife, the date of this refusal was only about a year ago, therefore, there was no desertion for the statutory period of two years.

The adultery is similarly condoned, though I should hold that the offence was revived by the continuance of the relations with Ma Tin, after petitioner left the respondent's house. So far, therefore, the suit is premature. It remains to consider the last of the grounds found by the learned Judge, which is, that he had exchanged Christianity for another religion, and also, whether, the divorce can be granted on facts not relied on by the trial Court. The change of religion is no ground for a divorce ; it would be absurd if it were, nor is mere change of religion coupled with adultery a ground of divorce ; there has to be a change of religion coupled with the respondent having gone through a form of marriage with some other woman, a clause inserted in consequence of a Madras decision to the effect that a Hindu, who, after his conversion to Christianity and contraction of a Hindu marriage, reverted to Hinduism and re-aquired his rights of polygamy. If the fact that the respondent and Ma Tin lived together openly as husband and wife constitutes marriage amongst Kachins, as it would do if the parties were Burmans, I should be prepared to hold that there was a ground of divorce even though there was no actual marriage form gone through, but I think the decree may be supported on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty, the cruelty being the refusal to let her live with him and Ma Tin except as a lesser wife under the orders of Ma Tin, an indignity which the petitioner says she could not bear, and so preferred to leave the house. "The Court will take into consideration the husband's general conduct towards the wife and if this be of a character tending to degrade her, and subjecting her to a course of annoyance and indignity injurious to her health, will feel itself at liberty to hold the cruelty proved." Swatman v. Swatman (1).

I would confirm the decree.

JAI NARAIN v. RAMJI LAL

It is not competent to a Court to pass a decree against the legal representative of a deceased defendant so as to make him personally liable and the mistake should be rectified even though it is brought to the notice of the Court at a rather late stage of the proceedings.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Nasik, in Miscelleneous Appeal No. 32 of 1921.

Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Applicant.

Mr. D. A. Tuljupurkar, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—A suit was brought against one Narayanrao in the Court of the Joint Subordinate Judge at Nasik, being Civil Suit No. 225 of 1917. Narayanrao died pending the proceedings, and his son was brought on the record as his legal representative on the 16th June 1918. The suit was dismissed on the 20th June 1918. But in appeal the decree of the trial Court was reversed and a decree was passed against the son on the 16th June 1919. The proper decree of the Court would have been against the son as the legal representative of his father to the extent of any assets which might come into his hands from the estate of his father. No one, however, seems to have taken any notice of the error which had been made and even in 1920, when the Darkhast was filed Narayanrao's son paid Rs. 10. A fresh Darkhast was taken out in 1921 asking for the personal arrest of the present petitioner who then applied for a review of the decree of the Appellate Court for the purpose of amending the decree in conformity with section 52 of the Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge considered that there was no error apparent on the face of the decree ; that it would have been an error of this description if the petitioner when brought on the record had asked the Trial Court not to pass a decree against him, and if a decree had been made, it should be made against the estate of the deceased which might come into his hands ; and that no such prayer was made. It seems to me it is not an excuse for an error of this description that the party affected by the error made no application at the time. To pass a decree against the legal representative of the deceased defendant so as to make him personally liable is not, in my opinion, competent to a Court to direct. When the attention of the Court was drawn to the error, even, although it might be at a rather late stage of the proceedings, there was no reason why on that account the mistake should not be remedied. I think the Rule must be made absolute and the decree must be amended so as to direct the payment by the defendant out of the assets which may have come into his hands from the estate belonging to his deceased father. No order as to costs.

Appeal - New plea—Point of law patent on the record.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th July, 1922.

Mr. Amar Nath Chona, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. C. Mehra and Shamiar Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case giving rise to the second appeal are very simple, and may shortly be stated as follows :—

On the 23rd of August, 1910, one Ramji Lal mortgaged a house in village Khera Kalan in the Delhi Province to one Moti Ram for a sum of Rs. 70 by means of an unregistered mortgage-deed. Shortly after, Moti Ram died and was succeeded by his mother Musammat Phulo who sold her rights under the mortgage-deed in question to Jai Narain, plaintiff. On the 26th of March, 1913, Ramji Lal sold the house in question to Nathu, defendant. Nathu has now died and has been succeeded by his sons Lal Chand, Des Raj and Nanhun, defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in this case. On the 17th of August, 1921, the plaintiff Jai Narain brought the present suit for the recovery of Rs. 200 due on his mortgage and prayed that the sum claimed be made a charge on the property mortgaged. The suit was resisted by the defendants, sons of Nathu, on the ground that they were holding the property under a registered sale-deed and that they had no knowledge of any prior encumbrance in favour of the plaintiff.

The following issues were framed :—

(1) Did Ramji Lal execute the mortgage-deed for consideration in favour of Moti Ram ?

(2) Did he promise to pay interest and how much interest is the plaintiff entitled to ?

(3) If the case of the plaintiff is proved what is the effect of the sale in favour of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 ?

The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the claim. The learned District Judge, however, came to a contrary finding and held that under section 50 of the Indian Registration Act the defendants' registered deed of sale had priority over the plaintiff's unregistered deed of mortgage. As a result of this finding the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in its entirety.

The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court, and it has been contended on his behalf that the defendants had not raised any plea in the trial Court on the question of the priority of their sale-deed over the plaintiff's mortgage deed and that in these circumstances the learned District Judge was not justified in allowing plaintiff to raise an entirely new point for the first time in appeal to his Court ; in my opinion there is no substance in this contention and it must be overruled. It is clear from the written pleas filed by the defenants that the plea had been distinctly raised and an issue framed by the Trial Court on this point. In the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court also the point was specifically raised, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the plaintiff was taken entirely unawares or that he was in any way prejudiced by the learned District Judge allowing parties to address arguments upon this point. In any case the point was one of law and patent upon the face of the record, and the learned vakil for the appellant has not been able to cite any authority why in the case of competition between a registered and an unregistered deed, the registered deed is not entitled to have priority. In my opinion there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs throughout.

UMME KHAIR v. AZIZ ALI

Messrs. T. N. Walavalkar and K. M. Bodas, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed a suit No. 283 of 1922 in the Small Causes Court, Bombay, to recover wages from the Opponent. The suit was decreed ex parte because although the Opponent engaged a pleader he did not attempt to contest the suit at the hearing. The Opponent then filed an application for setting aside of the ex parte decree and notice was issued to the plaintiff and the day fixed for hearing was 10th April 1922. That notice was issued under O. IX, r. 9. The notice was struck off for want of prosecution. Again the Opponent presented an application for setting aside the ex-parte decree. That was clearly time-barred, the Court considered that it was an application to restore the application previously made under O. IX, r. 9. Considering the application as restored, it passed an order against the plaintiff for a new trial. The application is made to us to revise that order as being without jurisdiction. It cannot be said that there is any rule in the Code of Civil Procedure that enables the Court to restore an application made under O. IX, r. 9, which has been dismissed for want of prosecution. It is urged upon us that the Court has inherent powers to make orders within the provisions of section 151 and that this was an order made accordingly. There is no reference made in the decision of the Court that the order was made under section 151. It is quite clear that if that section had been considered, the order under revision could not possibly have been made under it. That section gives the Court power to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. The plaintiff has got a decree and the defendant had every opportunity of appearing in Court at the time of hearing and also when notices were issued by him against the plaintiff for a new trial. It cannot be said, therefore, that in any circumstance it is necessary for the ends of justice that he should have yet another opportunity of harassing the successful party. Therefore the rule is made absolute with costs.

Suits, Valuation of—General rule—Value assigned by plaintiff—Value found by Court—Jurisdiction, appellate, how determined—Suit decided unsatisfactorily—Court, inherent power of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1885) s. 151.

The value of the subject-matter of a suit is the value assigned by the plaintiff in his plaint and not the value as found by the Court, unless it appears that either purposely or through gross negligence the true value of the suit has been altogether misrepresented in the plaint.

Mahabir Singh v. Behari Lal, 13 A. 320; A. W. N. (1891) 107; 7 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 202; Madho Das v. Ramji Patak, 16 A. 286; A. W. N. 1 (1894) 84; 8 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 186, followed.

In civil suits the valuation given by the plaintiff determines the jurisdiction both originally and in appeal.

Where the plaintiff fixes the value at a certain minimum plus as much more as the Court may find due on the evidence, the valuation should then be taken to be value as found by the Court.

Where both the Trial Court and the Court of first appeal fail to decide a matter satisfactorily, the High Court should exercise its inherent jurisdiction under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure and wipe out the whole proceedings and send back the case for trial.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The handling of the case both by the parties and by the Courts below has been anything but satisfactory. The plaintiff Musammat Umme Khair instituted a suit in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the first class for arrears of profits. The suit was under the provisions of section 165 of the Tenancy Act. The plaint as it stood should have been sent back for amendment, for it asserted that the mahal in question consisted of 72 sishams of which the plaintiff owned 19 of which Hamid Hasan owned 15 and Nur Jahan owned 16 and that the plaintiff was in possession of 41. The principal defendant is a certain Aziz Ali, who is never mentioned in the plaint as holding anything. The plaintiff should have been asked to be a little more explicit as to the persons against whom she made her claim. Aziz Ali was of course defendant. Aziz Ali put in an objection that he had not collected anything more than what was due to him. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 70 only but added that if anything more was due to her she should receive it. The case then went on to hearing. The Assistant Collector framed the following luminous issue "What is the correct amount of arrears of profit and with whom it is due." That is all. The hearing then proceeded according to the worst traditions of the Revenue Courts. No evidence was called, not even that of the patwari, but a certain Babu Bindeshwari Pershad was appointed as Commissioner. Babu Bindeshri Pershad put in a statement which went to show that Aziz Ali had collected Rs. 158—5—1 more than his share. If this were the case a certain proportion would have been due to the plaintiff and a certain proportion to the other sharers. The Assistant Collector did not trouble to take any further evidence and refused to call Bindeshri Pershad as a witness although he was asked to do so. He decided the case breezily by awarding the whole of the Rs. 158—5—1 to the plaintiff. Aziz Ali appealed. The plaintiff met him on appeal by the plea that no appeal lay because the suit was a suit for less than Rs. 100 and under section 177 of the Tenancy Act, an appeal in such a suit only lies to the District Judge from the decree of an Assistant Collector of the first class, if the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 100. The plaintiff's plea was certainly ingenious. It is to be noted, the plaintiff sued for Rs. 70 and asked more if she could get it. Receiving Rs. 158—5—1, she then objected to the defendant's appealing because she said she only asked for Rs. 70. The Judge, however, refused to pay any attention to this plea and heard the appeal on the merits. On the merits he found that Aziz Ali had been making collection both on behalf of himself and another sharer called Nur Jahan and that he had not collected in excess in respect of the two. He, therefore, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal, the first point taken being that no appeal lay to the District Judge. This is a point of some importance. This Court has undoubtedly laid down in the case of Mahabir Singh v. Behari Lal (1), that the value of the subject-matter of the suit must be taken to be the value assigned by the plaintiff in his plaint and not the value as found by the Court, unless it appears that either purposely or through gross negligence the true value of the suit has been altogether misrepresented in the plaint. This decision was affirmed in the case of Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (2). It obviously is the case that in civil suits the valuation given by the plaintiff determines the jurisdiction both originally and in appeal, but it has nowhere been laid down that where the plaintiff fixes the value at a certain minimum plus as much more as the Court may find due on the evidence, the valuation should then be taken to be the minimum value assigned by the plaintiff in the plaint and should not be taken to be the value as found by the Court. Under the peculiar conditions of the present Tenancy Act it is obvious that unless in a case of this kind the valuation be taken to be the value as found by the Court, the plaintiff is given a most unfair advantage. By putting her relief at Rs. 70 and adding that she wished as much more as the evidence disclosed, she was not confined to a relief of Rs. 70. By paying later an extra Court-fee she obtained a decree for Rs. 158—5—1. She cannot, in my opinion, be allowed thus to turn round and say that no appeal lies. She could either have taken Rs. 70 in which case no appeal would have lain or taken Rs. 158 subject to an appeal. So upon this point I agree with the learned District Judge. But the difficulty in the case is that the learned District Judge had absolutely no evidence before him on which he could find that Aziz Ali had been making collections on behalf of Nur Jahan. True it is urged by the Counsel for the respondent that there was no evidence upon which the suit could have been decreed. But this is not exactly correct. The statement of the Commissioner, unsatisfactory as it is, is evidence of a sort although its value has been very largely diminished by the circumstance that the Assistant Collector did not call him as a witness when requested to do so. I am thus left with a judgment of the Assistant Collector, which is about as unsatisfactory as it can be, and a decision of the lower Appellate Court, which has proceeded upon no evidence. The question is what should be done. It is clearly a case for which section 151, Civil Procedure Code makes provision. The matter having been decided unsatisfactorily, I wipe out the whole proceedings and send the case back to the successor of the Assistant Collector to be tried over again. I trust on this occasion it will be tried more satisfactorily. Costs will follow the result.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Mother succeeding son, whether can adopt.

A Hindu mother, who succeeds to the estate of her son is entitled to make an adoption, where the son has died without leaving any other nearer heir, even though he may have attained the age of ceremonial competence and may have been married before his death.

Appeal from the decision of First Class Subordinate Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 388 of 1921 reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Karad, in Civil Suit No. 18 of 1917.

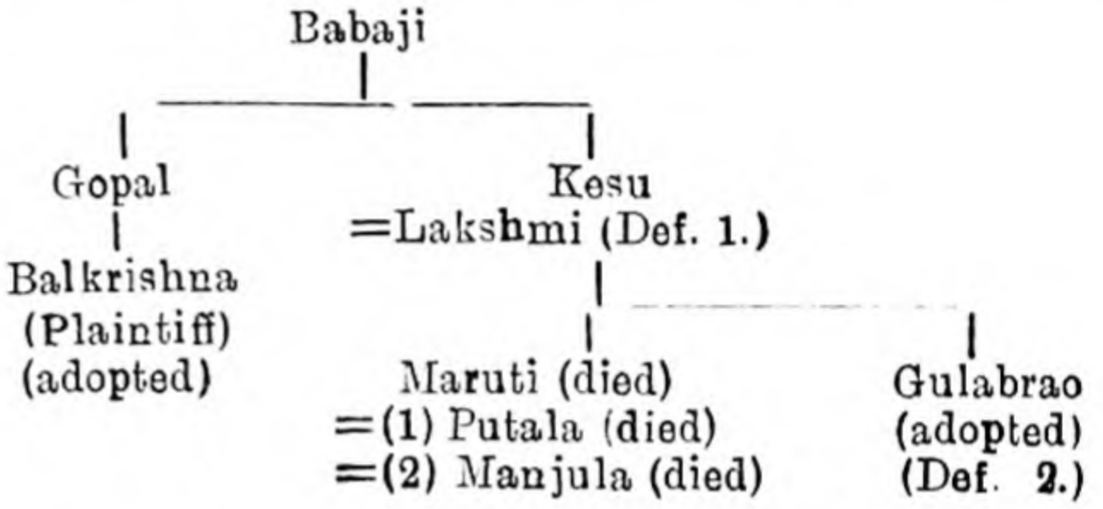
JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The genealogy of the parties in this appeal is as follows :—



Gopal and Kesu, the sons of Babaji, were divided. The plaintiff in this case is the grandson of Gopal. Kesu died leaving a widow Lakshmi, the first defendant, and a son Maruti. Maruti had two wives, but both died before him, so that on Maruti's death his mother Lakshmi succeeded to him as his heiress. Subsequently she adopted the second defendant. The plaintiff seeks to obtain a declaration that the second defendant is not a validly adopted son of the first defendant. The Trial Judge said :—

"As Maruti left no widow or issue, the defendant No. 1 had authority according to Hindu Law to adopt a son to her husband. I, therefore, find the third issue in the affirmative."

The appellate Judge considered himself bound by the authority in Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (1), and consequently, held Lakshmi's power of adoption had come to an end on the ground that Maruti had attained full legal capacity to continue the line, either by the birth of a natural born son or by the adoption to him of a son by his own widow. On a careful consideration of the judgment in that case, it seems to me that the question now in issue was not decided, for, in that case admittedly Brojo Kishore left a widow, and consequently, his estate would go to her and not to his mother.

The point in issue was decided in Venkappa Bapu v. Jivaji Krishna (2). The head-note runs :—

"A mother succeeding as heir to her deceased son who has left neither widow nor issue, is competent to adopt, notwithstanding the fact that her deceased son had attained ceremonial competency by marriage, investiture or otherwise before his death."

So that the plaintiff's adoption was valid inasmuch as it only affected the interests, and did not affect the vested rights of others.

In Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (3), the converse was held, namely, that: —

" Where a Hindu dies, leaving a widow and a son, and that son himself dies leaving a natural born or adopted son or leaving no son but his own widow to continue the line by means of adoption, the power of the former widow is extinguished and can never afterwards be revived."

The opinion expressed by the Court in that case appears to be obiter as the point in issue was whether, where a Hindu grandmother succeeds as heir to her grandson who had died unmarried, her power to make an adoption was at an end. However the principle laid down by Chandavarkar, J., with regard to the case of a Hindu dying leaving a widow and a son was approved of in the case mentioned by the learned appellate Judge, viz., Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (1).

In the Privy Council case of Verabhai Ajubhai v. Bai Hiraba (4), a Hindu died leaving a widow and a son, who died between fifteen and sixteen years of age and unmarried. The widow then adopted a son to her husband, and it was held that the adoption was valid. But the question did not arise how the case would have stood if it had been proved that the son had attained ceremonial competenee. Their Lordships said that that question might be open to controversy, and they saw no reason for pursuing the inquiry.

In Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (1), it is clear that Brojo Kishore left a widow, and the passage in the judgment, which I think might give rise to some difficulty, is as follows :—

" That widow was not a party to the suit, and, whether or not she had power to adopt to Brojo it has not been established against her that she had no such power. Their Lordships think it right to draw attention to this circumstance, but they do not desire to be understood as saying that even in its absence the succession of Brojo and his dying after attaining full legal capacity to continue the line would not in themselves have been sufficient to bring the limiting principle into operation, and so to have so determined the authority of Adikonda's widow, who was not the widow of the last owner and could not adopt a son to him."

Although obiter it is suggested in the last edition of Mayne, p. 154, that that passage left no doubt what their Lordships' view would have been if Brojo Kishore had died having attained full legal capacity to continue the line (by which I presume that their Lordships meant his being capable of begetting a son). The case came from Madras and the circumstances to which their Lordships thought it right to draw attention was the existence of a widow with a power to adopt and the word 'absence' refers to the power and not to the widow. Whether the son's widow has or has not a right to adopt, the decisive factor is her survival of her husband and the vestinig in her of a life estate in her husband's property. Whether the son has attained ceremonial competence or was capable of begetting a son would only be matters of importance as affecting his mother's right to adopt if he died unmarried or if his wife predeceased him, and with all due respect to the learned editor of Mayne, in my opinion these questions in this presidency have remained beyond controversy since the decision in Venkappa Bapu v. Jivaji Krishna (2) the correctness of which has never been disputed in this Court and has not been in any way disturbed by the obiter dicta in Madana Mohana v. Purushothama. (1) It seems to me that we must follow the ratio decidendi in the judgment of Mr. Justice Ranade, at p. 312, where he discusses whether the attainment of ceremonial competence of a son could affect the rights of his mother to adopt in case he died without leaving a son or a widow :—

" The limitation on the widow's powers has reference more to the ceremonial law than to the civil law as administered by the Court, and the whole current of recent decisions has been to base this limitation solely on the question whether the widow's act of adoption derogated from her own rights or the vested rights of others. The vested rights of no other relations were affected by Tulsava's adoption of the plaintiff. "

I think, therefore, this appeal must be allowed and the suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

Shah, J.—I agree. I desire to make it clear that Gopal and Kesu were divided, and that the contention of the plaintiff is that the mother had no right to adopt after the death of her son, Maruti, as he died after attaining the age of ceremonial competence and after he was married. It is found in the case that Maruti's wives predeceased him, and when Maruti died there was no nearer heir to him than his mother. Lakshmi inherited Maruti's estate as his mother and afterwards adopted defendant No. 2. An adoption effected by the mother under such circumstances according to the decisions of this Presidency is valid. See Gavdappa v. Girimallappa (5), Sangapa v. Vyasapa (6) and Venkappa Bapu v. Jivaji Krishna (2). It is quite true that in Verabhai Ajubhai v. Bai Hiraba (4) this question as to the power of the mother to adopt after the son had attained the age of ceremonial competence was raised, but their Lordships of the Privy Council did not decide that question ; and it may be said that in fact there is no decision up to the present day in which the power of the mother to adopt after her son's death when the son has left no nearer heir than herself, has been held to come to an end in consequence of the circumstance that at the time of his death the son had attained the age of ceremonial competence or was married. The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (1) relate to a different state of facts. In that case it is clear that the son had left a widow, and it is not disputed and cannot be disputed, that if the son leaves a widow or any other heir except the mother, then the power of the mother to adopt would come to an end. These observations do not suggest, in my opinion, that if the son had attained the age of ceremonial competence or was married before his death and if the mother inherited his estate, the mother would not be competent to adopt or that in such a case the power of the mother to adopt would come to an end. In the absence of any decisions to the contrary, it seems to me that the view taken by Mr. Justice Ranade in Venkappa Babu v. Jivagi Krishna (2) that the mother is entitled to adopt, when the son has died without leaving any other near heir even though he may have attained the age of ceremonial competence and may have been maried before his death, must be accepted.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91, scope of—Disposition of property—Deed not produced—Oral evidence of transaction, whether barred.

All that section 91 provides is that when the terms of a contract or of a grant or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant or disposition of property, except the document itself. MAKHDUMAN v. SAIYED ALTAF HUSSAIN Appeal against a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

S. M. Mullick and Siva Narain Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts, J.—This appeal is against a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dismissing an appeal against the decision of the Munsif in a suit which was brought by one Saiyed Altaf Hussain and others for a declaration of their permanent mokarrari interest in 10 dams and odd share of village Aurapokhar.

The case of the plaintiff is that 8 annas milkiat of the village originally belonged to the ancestors of Saiyid Abdul Rahim and Sayid Fazl Tauhid. These persons granted mokarrari of their 8 annas milkiat to Musammat Hayatan, the widow of Shah Mehdi Ali, by a patta dated the 4th of February 1805. Out of this 8 annas mokarrari 4 annas went to Shah Rahat Hussain, Mehdi's brother's son and 4 annas remained with Musammat Hayatan. Saiyed Muhammad Nasir, one of the sons of Rahat, got by inheritance 19 dams and odd out of the 4 annas mokarrari which had gone to Rahat and in respect of this he executed a Bainakasha in favour of his wife Musammat Kubra in 1895. In the following year Musammat Kubra executed a kabala conveying this 19 dams and odd to the plaintiff No. 1 in 1915 executed a darmokarrari deed in favour of his sons, plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. During the survey, however, the defendant No. 13 and the defendant No. 6 fraudulently arranged that the defendant No. 1 should get the name of the plaintiff No. 1 recorded only in respect of 1 dam 19 kowris and odd out of the 19 dams as mokarraridar.

The defendant's main plea was that neither Rahat Hussain nor his sons, including Nazir, nor Musammat Kubra had any interest in the mokarrari. He alleged that the suit was barred by limitation as the plaintiff had not been in possession within 12 years, that out of the 8 annas mokarrari defendant No. 1 got 4 annas from her mother-in-law Hayatan as a present and the other 4 annas was divided amongst the heirs of Hayatan. Her husband gave her 18 dams and odd out of his own inherited share in lieu of her dower. Later on she became possessed of 4 annas 18 dams milkat by virtue of a kabala, dated the 22nd of June 1898, and thus her milkiat and mokarrari right became equal in extent and she was accordingly recorded correctly in the khatian.

The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance, and this decree has been upheld on appeal by the Additional Subordinate Judge. The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

The first point urged in appeal is that as the Bainukasha deed has not been produced, the plaintiff is not entitled to adduce evidence of this transaction, and this being so the plaintiff has failed to establish his title. This argument is based on a misapprehension of scope of section 91 of the Evidence Act. All that section 91 provides is that when the terms of a contract or of a grant or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant or disposition of property, except the document itself. This, however, refers only to the method of proof of the terms of contract, grant or disposition of property ; it does not exclude other proof of the transaction itself, and this being so, the Courts below were entitled to consider the other evidence which was adduced in proof of the Bainukasha transaction.

The next point urged is that certain documents which have been relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge are not admissible in evidence. These are exhibits 9, 7 and 3. From exhibit 9 it appears that one Saiyed Mehdi Hussain brought a suit for specific performance of contract of sale against Musammat Kubra and the plaintiff No. 1. In that suit it was urged that Musammat Kubra had entered into a contract to sell her mokarrari share to Mehdi Hussain, and in that suit neither the title of Musammat Kubra nor the title of Rahat Hussain was denied, although the defendant No. 13, the husband of defendant No 1, gave evidence against the plaintiff. It is clear that the husband of the defendants No. 1 has for long been trying to dispossess the plaintiff No. 1 from the disputed share. That document then is clearly evidence for what it is worth. The next document is exhibit 7. This mentions that Nazir gave an ijara of 14 dams and odd share along with other properties to the defendant No. 13, and what the learned Subordinate Judge says in regard to this is that this share although it is stated to be milkiat evidently refers to the mokarrari interest as it is nobody's case that Nazir had any share in the milkiat of village of Rampokhar. The inference may perhaps be a wrong one, but it is certainly a legitimate one to draw and here again the document is clearly evidence for what it is worth. Similarly exhibit 3 also shows that defendant No. 13 had knowledge of the plaintiff No. 1's purchase and this again is evidence. The Courts below were therefore entitled to consider all these documents, and their findings are findings of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal.

The last point urged is that the decree which has been granted to the plaintiff contains a declaration that the defendant No. 1 is the proprietor, and it is contended that this is not a declaration to which the plaintiff is entitled. This is admitted by the learned Vakil for the respondents and this declaration should clearly be omitted from the decree.

In the result, then, I would dismiss this appeal except for the slight modification to which I have referred, namely, that that part of the decree, which declares that the defendant No. 1 is the proprietor, should be expunged. The appellant will bear the costs.

Das J.—I agree.

BHADRAWA KOM DOD BASAPPA PRABHU SHETTI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Second appeal—Finding of fact—Distorted view of evidence—High Court, whether will interfere.

Where the lower AppellateCourt has taken a wholly distorted and indefensible view of the evidence in the case, the High Court will interfere with a finding of fact on second appeal.

Appeal from the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Dharwar, in Suit No. 73 of 1919.

Messrs. Bhadurji and Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Strangman and A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, a minor, filed this suit through his next friend, the natural father, to get a declaration of his title under a Will which he propounded as being the last Will of one Dod-Basappa. This document is a holograph Will, purporting to have been written and executed by Dod-Basappa on the 16th September 1918. Dod-Basappa at that time was a comparatively young man, but he was suffering from chronic asthma; and although a person may be suffering from asthma for many years without any fatal result, it is common knowledge that attacks of asthma are very unpleasant. They may vary in severity, and one of these severe attacks might have induced a desire in Dod-Basappa to make provision for the future.

Briefly, the Will, after reciting that the testator had no heirs such as near Bhaubands etc., and no male or female issue, but only his wife Bhadri, directed his wife to adopt the plaintiff, and no one else. Then there is a further direction that if the plaintiff was not adopted by Bhadri, even then he was to be the full owner of the testator's property.

There is nothing whatever against the possibility of Dod-Basappa having executed such a document. It has been suggested, and this suggestion found favour with the learned Judge, that the very iniquitous nature of the Will was per se a cogent factor against the plaintiff's case. As the learned Judge says "the plaintiff's case totters to the ground by the sheer weight of its own wickedness." But we see nothing unnatural in a Hindu, sonless, and not in a good state of health, writing a document by which directions are given to the widow to adopt the testator's nephew. He would be aware that if he died, and the adoption was made, the adopted son would succeed to the property, but during his minority the property would be managed by the widow, and the widow in any event would be entitled to maintenance even if she refused to adopt, and the boy directed to be adopted became the owner of the property. That would not, and could not, defeat the widow's rights to maintenance.

The plaintiff's case is that the Will having been made on the 16th, the testator left on the 17th for Hubli. Before leaving, he handed the Will to his aunt Irawa for safe custody. She says that after making the Will Dod-Basappa handed it to her and asked her to keep it, saying that he was suffering from asthma and that he had made a document in plaintiff's favour. He not only told her and sister Rachaway the purport of the Will, but also read out the Will to them. He put the Will in a piece of cloth, and while delivering it to her, told her to return the document, if he recovered from his illness and returned home, if not, to hand it over to the plaintiff's father. The learned Judge says that "this story sounds like a fiction. It was ridiculously absurd and incredible, if not actually inconceivable, that a business man like Dod-Basappa would deposit for safe custody an important document like a Will with an old and illiterate woman albeit she was his aunt."

We do not know whether Dod-Basappa was a business man. But in any event we do not see anything incredible or inconceivable in his handing over this document to Irawa for safe custody, while he went away to Hubli and to Kopbal.

Dod-Basappa was treated by a Doctor at Hubli, and then went on to Kopbal, where he fell ill in December and died on the 7th. 10 or 15 days after his death the plaintiff's father went to Nidgundi and obtained the Will from Irawa. Certainly, the Will was produced by him by the 15th of January, by which time the question with regard to the correction of the Record of Rights had become important, and it is difficult to say that the delay of 20 days in producing the Will must necessarily throw doubt on its genuineness.

We see, therefore, nothing in the circumstances which would throw any suspicion on the story told by the plaintiff's witnesses. Therefore, the important question is whether the evidence of the attesting witnesses could be relied upon, remembering always that this purports to be a holograph Will entirely written by the testator, and it is certainly extremely improbable that a person wishing to put forward a forged Will, would run the risk of imitating the handwriting of the deceased, or get it imitated by some one else, when it would be so easy to attack a forged document spreading over more than a folio page. It would be much simpler to have had the Will written out by a professional writer, in which case it would only be necessary to imitate the signature of the deceased. Therefore there is nothing improbable in the whole story put forward by the plaintiff with regard to the genuineness of the Will, and on the other hand when a holograph Will is attacked, the probability against such a forgery being attempted is very strong.

Having read the evidence of the witnesses who attested the Will, we do not think the strictures made against them by the learned Judge can be supported. He says "their evidence is not free from conspicuous defects. Much of it is obscure and unsatisfactory. The boldness of it is highly suspicious. The witnesses come on the scene, hear the Will read out by the testator, see him appending his signature, attest the Will and then disperse. This is their story in a condensed shape."

There are many cases where that is exactly what happens with regard to the attestation of a Will. A witness is called to sign. He is either told, or not told, that the document which he is being asked to attest is a Will. It is not necessary even for the Will to be read out to him. He sees the testator sign the document, and then he attests and then he is told to go.

Then the Judge says. " They (the attesting witnesses) are singularly reticent as to the other important particulars concerning the Will. They do not know whether any draft was prepared or by whom or whether any lawyer or other person was consulted. None of them, not even Huchappa, who claims to be his intimate friend and was his partner in a gin, was consulted by the deceased in respect of the Will. They did not know until the last moment why they were summoned by the so-called testator. They do not even pretend to have witnessed the writing of the Will by Dod-Basappa or to speak to the identification of his handwriting. They do not say why the Will was left unregistered, when it could have been easily registered or why the deceased made no provision at all for his wife, whom he left absolutely at the mercy of a stranger like the plaintiff's father. On all these important matters the witnesses throw no light at all, though they speak in a parrot-like fashion the minute particulars as to the order in which they attended and left the place and the order in which they attested the Will." We should have been very much surprised if they had possessed all that information which the Judge expected of persons who attest a Will, with the result that if they could not give all these details to the Court, suspicion would be cast on their evidence.

No doubt, in the first place, the plaintiff has to prove the document on which he relies, but when he has once gone as far as putting before the Court a prima facie case which bears the signs of its being genuine, then it is for the defendant to produce reliable grounds for upsetting the plaintiff's case, and satisfy the Court that it is not only improbable but impossible.

With regard to the writing of the Will, the Judge has to admit that there is much resemblance in the signature on the Will with the deceased's signature in the school register Exhibit 146. He compares the writing of the Will with the hand-writing on certain post-cards written by the deceased, and sets out many differences with regard to particular letters, comparing those letters in the Will with similar letters in the post-cards.

Now, as the learned Counsel for the appellant pointed out, it is not fair to compare the free handwriting spread over a folio page, with plenty of space, and a post-card in which the writer has to condense all he wishes to say, in the exiguous space provided by the Post Office. The writing must necessarily be far more cramped, and naturally various letters in the post-card writing would differ from the writing which is not cramped. Therefore, although we do not profess to have any knowledge of Kanarese, we are not prepared to accept all these minute differences between the writing on the Will and the writing on the post-cards which are relied on by the learned Judge as helping him to arrive at the conclusion that the Will is a forgery.

The learned Judge himself was of opinion that the whole of the evidence produced by the defendants was suspicious and much of it concocted. That of course is not by itself conclusive, as the plaintiff had undoubtedly to prove the Will on which he relied. But it certainly shows the length to which the defendants were prepared to go in order to defeat the plaintiff's case. We cannot agree with the grounds which the learned Judge gives for not relying upon the evidence of the attesting witnesses, and the opinion he has formed as to the surrounding circumstances which went to support his appreciation of that evidence. It seems to us that having once made up his mind to dismiss the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the Will was a forgery, he was forced to take a distorted view of the plaintiff's evidence and the surrounding circumstances, in order to give reasons why he did not believe the plaintiff's case. Thus although we are adverse to upsetting the decision of the Court below on a question of fact, we think on a very careful consideration of the evidence in this case, and all the circumstances connected with it, that the Judge was not justified in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. Therefore, we must allow the appeal and hold that the Will has been proved. But as the learned Judge points out " the first defendant cannot be ousted from the possession of the plaint property, unless she is first given an opportunity to adopt the plaintiff within a reasonable period of time, say six months or so. If she fails to adopt the plaintiff during this period, she should lose her right to the possession and enjoyment of the property." We think that was a right conclusion to come to in the events that have been proved. We direct that the 1st defendant should have from the time the proceedings reach the lower Court six months, within which to adopt the plaintiff, and in default of adoption, the plaintiff will have liberty to apply for a decree for possession. No order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. VIII —Inherent powers, exercise of—Court, whether can introduce new forms of procedure—Counter-claims.

The Court is not justified in applying its powers of inherent jurisdiction to introduce a new form of procedure for which no provision is made by the law.

Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code provides for dealing with set off but makes no provisions for counterclaims.

Messrs. Dwarka Nath Mitra and Tarakeswar Pal Choudhury, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. N. Bagchi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Munsif, first Court of Krishnagar, allowing the defendant, opposite party to file an additional written statement and to let it be treated as a cross-plaint. The suit between the parties is one for declaration that certain property was not liable to assessment to house tax.

The Code of Civil Procedure provides in O. VIII for dealing with set-off but makes no provision for counter-claims. In English Law the modern counter claim is the creation of the Judicature Act. Order VIII only provides for set off in suits for recovery of money. It is quite clear that there could be no set off in a suit like the present one. The Munsif was not justified in introducing the principle of English Law in the trial of a suit in this country. There would be no hardship on the defendant in requiring him to file a separate suit to obtain what he claimed as relief in his additional written statement. The usual procedure of trying two cross-suits together could be followed if the Court in which these suits were pending in the exercise of its discretion thought it desirable that that should be done. The Munsif was not justified in applying his powers of inherent jurisdiction to introduce a new form of procedure for which no provision is made by the law.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Munsif allowing the defendant's additional written statement to be treated as cross plaint. This order will be no bar to the defendants bringing a separate suit on the same cause of action if he thinks fit to do so.

The petitioner is entitled to his costs of this Rule. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Messrs. De Gwyther and Parikh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The case for the appellant has been stated with admirable clearness and brevity by his Counsel, but their Lordships do not think it necessary to call for any argument for the respondents.

This is an appeal from a decree of 5th December 1918 of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, which affirmed a decree dated 1st November 1916, of the Court of the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona.

The only question submitted to the Board, and now subsisting, is as to the condition of body, and possibly of mind, of one Narayan Mawal. The appellant maintains that Narayan Mawal was so afflicted with leprosy as to deprive him of the position of being joint owner of certain family property, and, secondly to deprive him of the ability to make a valid adoption of a son. His natural son had died, and the adoption was made a few weeks before his death. Had Narayan not been a leper, this natural and proper act could not have been challenged.

In the opinion of the Board, no question of fact arises on this appeal. It appears to be definitely concluded by both of the Courts below, which both concur in their findings. The High Court in terms expresses approval of the decision of the Court of first instance; and the decision of the Court of first instance is to the effect that Narayan Mawal was not so crippled or disabled by bodily infirmity or deformity as to cease to be a useful member of society, capable of holding and enjoying property. Their findings show that, although he was afflicted with a certain type of leprosy, it was a type not very apparent except to minute inspection, and certainly a type which did not unfit him for performing both social and religious duties in company with others.

In these circumstances, the law of the case is attacked by appellant's Counsel, but the law of the case may be stated to have been well settled in India for very many years. In the case of Kayarohana Pathan v. Subbaraya Thevan (1) a joint judgment of Benson and Sundara Ayyar, JJ. concludes with the following proposition:—

"Deformity and unfitness for social intercourse arising from the virulent and disgusting nature of the disease would appear to be what has been accepted in both the texts and the decisions as the most satisfactory test."

In the case of Mohunt Bhagawan Ramanuj Das v. Mohunt Roghunundun Ramanuj Das(2), Sir Richard Couch delivered a judgment of this Board which substantially agreed with that test. Sir Richard Couch was already deeply committed on the subject for so far back as the year 1868, in the case of Janardhan Pandurang v. Gopal (3), he had expressed himself in nearly similar terms.

The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be disallowed with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) s. 42—Adoption invalid—Presumptive heir—Declaratory suit, maintainability of.

A reversioner who is the presumptive heir can maintain a suit to have an adoption made by the life-tenant declared invalid so far as he himself is concerned.

Messrs. Muhammad Rafi and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Madan Gopal and Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

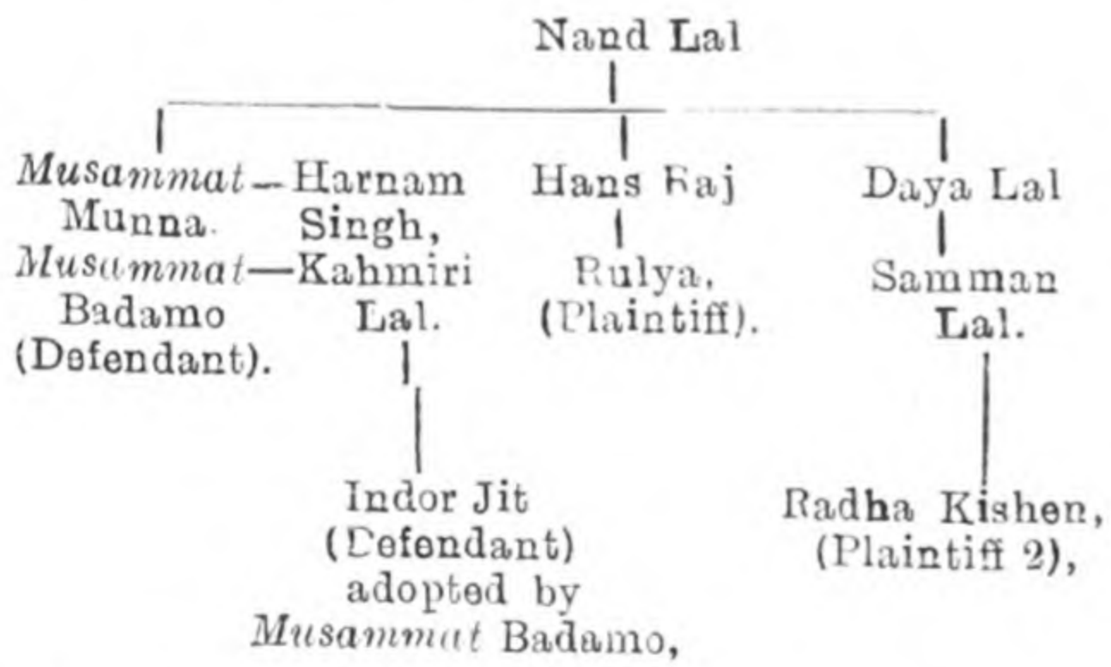
JUDGMENT.—The following short pedigree-table will illustrate this case:—



The plaintiffs Rulya and Radha Kishen instituted a suit against Musammat Badamo and Indar Jit asking for a declaration to the effect that an alleged adoption by Musammat Badamo of Indar Jit should be declared illegal and set aside so far as the plaintiffs were concerned. The pleas raised by the defendants are indicated by the issues settled by the Trial Court (page 4 of the printed paper book). The Trial Court held that the adoption was invalid and that the plaintiffs' suit was well founded. During the course of the trial an application was put in on behalf of the plaintiffs to the effect that in their opinion it was not necessary to come to a decision with regard to issue No. 3. The Trial Court gave no decision on that issue holding that on the findings arrived at by it, it was not relevant. The plaintiffs having been granted a decree Musammat Badamo and Indar Jit preferred an appeal to the District Judge. There again, the plaintiffs respondents through their Counsel, urged that the decision on issue No. 3 was not essential for decision of the case. At the same time their Counsel said that if the Court should be of opinion that a decision was necessary, there was sufficient material on the record and a decision could be arrived at. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that a decision on the said issue was imperative but considered that it was necessary to decide that issue as the plaintiffs appeared to be unwilling to have it decided. Holding that a suit for a mere declaration without any consequential relief did not lie, he accepted the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that no cause of action was disclosed. Against this dismissal the plaintiffs have come to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Tek Chand and we have heard Mr. Fakir Chand on behalf of the defendants respondents.

Various authorities have been cited before us by Mr. Tek Chand, for example, Cheruvolu Punnamma v. Cheruvolu Perrazu (1), Kalova Kom v. Padapa (2), Soudagar Singh v. Pardip Narain Singh (3). We do not, however, think it necessary to discuss these authorities as in our opinion the appeal must succeed.

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act provided that any person entitled to any legal character may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief. Here it seems to us that the question involved is one of the status of the parties. In the Court below the defendants respondents admitted that the plaintiffs appellants were reversioners, and a perusal of the pedigree-table shows that ordinarily speaking the plaintiffs would succeed to any property left by Harnam Singh. In this case, therefore, it seems to us that they may well be termed presumptive heirs and therefore, they are entitled to challenge the adoption. In this view we are supported by Illustration (f) to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It may be that the defendants could prove that Musammat Badamo was the full owner of the estate left by Harnam Singh, and that for that reason the plaintiff had no right to the said property. That question has been raised in issue No. 3 and as the learned District Judge considered that a decision of that issue was necessary, in our opinion he should have adjudicated on that issue when the case was before him.

We accept this appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge return the case to him for a re-hearing and disposal in accordance with law. Costs will be costs in the cause. Stamp on this appeal will be refunded.

Way, right of—Public high-way—Private pathway—Suit to enforce right—Special damage.

" By the Common Law of England, there are three distinct classes of rights of way and other similar rights. First, there are private rights, in the strict sense of the term, vested in the particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly, there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of a city, the tenants of a manor or the inhabitants of a parish or village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. Thirdly, there are public rights in the full sense of the term, which exist for the benefit of all the Kings' subjects, and the source of these is ordinarily dedication."

A suit for the enforcement of a private right of way is maintainable without proof of special damage. It is only in the case of a public high-way that the question of special damage arises.

Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Panton, dated the 15th July 1921, in F. A. No. 778 of 1920.

Messrs. Atul Chandra Gupta and Bhagirath Chandra Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gopal Chandra Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Panton in a suit for declaration and enforcement of a village path-way in village Backrabad ordinarily known as Ram Chandrapore.

The plaintiffs asked for declaration of a village path-way used by all the people of the village for certain specified purposes. The defendants contended that the alleged path-way was not a public highway but was a permissive foot track. Thereupon several issues were raised ; the sixth was to the following effect :

" Did the lands of schedule 2 of the plaint ever appertain to a public gopath as alleged in the plaint : Was there any public gopath over the lands of schedule 1 of the plaint or any part of it ? If so, what was its breadth and have the defendants encroached upon it in the way described in the plaint, namely, by the erection of fences seven years prior to the institution of the suit."

The Trial Court considered the evidence and came to the conclusion that the case alleged by the plaintiffs had been made out. In one passage of his judgment, the Munsiff states that "subject to some difference between the parties as to the breadth of the gopath it is an admitted fact that the existence of th gopath is admitted, subject only to the dispute as to the right of passage of men with ploughs etc., over the bari of the defendant No. 1 and the other defendants." The Munsiff then considered the evidence and held that the existence of the village path was established. He next discussed the question of the width of the gopath and summarised his conclusion in these terms: " It is no doubt a gopath used by the men of the locality and they have the right to pass with plough, cattle bundles, processions and with dead bodies." In the concluding portion of his judgment he directed the suit to be decreed in a modified way and declared the public right of gopath in the suit land.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge and two of the questions urged before him were formulated in the following terms: " (1) Whether the plaintiffs can institute the suit without proof of special damage and whether any special damage has been proved and (2) what was the extent and nature of the path and whether it is a public path." It would be observed that the plaintiffs did not ask for a declaration of a public high-way nor had any issue been raised to that effect. No question had further been raised in the Trial Court as to the proof of special damage to the plaintiffs, and how the matter came to be argued before the Subordinate Judge, has not been explained. The reason might have been that the Trial Court, in the concluding portion of the judgment, had given a declaration of what is loosely called " a public right of gopath " in the suit land. It is manifest however that there was some confusion of ideas in the arguments addressed to the Subordinate Judge. The parties apparently overlooked the distinction between the different classes of ways which were explained by Mr. Justice Wilson in the following well-known passage from his judgment in Chunilal v. Ram Kishen Sahu (1).

" It may be useful to premise that by the Common Law of England, there are three distinct classes of rights of way and other similar rights. First, there are private rights, in strict sense of the term, vested in the particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly, there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of a city, the tenants of a manor, or the inhabitants of a parish or village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. Thirdly there are public rights in the full sense of the term, which exist for the benefit of all the Queen's subjects, and the source of these is ordinarily dedication."

In our opinion, there can be no question that the suit was for the enforcement of a way of the second class namely, a village pathway, and had no reference to a way of the third class, namely, a public highway. This distinction has been overlooked, not infrequently, and Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. had occasion to emphasise it again, in Kali Charan Naskar v. Ramkumar Sardar (2). It is only in the case of a public highway that the question of special damage arises; where the case is one of a village path, there is no question of special damage; Harihar Das v. Chandra Kumar Guha. (3) It follows that the Subordinate Judge should not have gone into the question of proof of special damage but should have confined himself to the extent and nature of the path.

But, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge shows that notwithstanding the confusion pointed out, he did in fact consider the real question in controversy, namely whether the existence of the alleged village path had been satisfactorily established by the evidence on the record. He states in one part of his judgment as follows: " That there was a village path there, is not disputed. In fact, it was admitted by the present appellant in the case under section 133 Criminal Procedure Code. What he then contended and now contends is that it was a path some three cubits, used for only passage of men of the village. The lower Court has found this contention to be untenable on the evidence on the record, and after a perusal of the entire oral and documentary evidence in the case, I am not disposed to disagree with him on the point". In this view, the Subordinate Judge has confirmed the decree of the Trial Court. That decree has been confirmed by Mr. Justice Panton.

MANSA RAM v. KALU RAM

We are of opinion that notwithstanding the use of inaccurate expressions in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and possibly in one passage in the judgment of the Trial Court, the real question in controversy has been tried out. There is, consequently, no reason to set aside the concurrent decisions of all the Courts. We direct, however, that in the declaration which has been granted to the plaintiffs instead of the expression " public right of gopath," the expression " village right of gopath " be substituted ; subject to this amendment in the decree, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Easement—User from time immemorial, plea of—Pleadings—New plea in appeal—Easement—Immemorial user.

Plaintiiff sued to restrain the defendants from taking water from a certain kul which he claimed to be the exclusive property of himself and his brother having been constructed by his grand-father. Defendants disputed the plaintiff's right of exclusive ownership and alleged that they had been taking water from this kul from time immemorial. The first Court having decreeed the suit, on appeal the District Judge came to the conclusion that the defendants had acquired an easement to irrigate their lands from the kul and dismissed the suit. Plaintiff appealed to the High Court :

Held (1) that the plea of user from time immemorial did not amount to plea of easement ;

(2) that the defendants could not put forward a new plea in appeal.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 11th July 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Gokul Chand Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and it is not necessary to repeat them here at length. The sole question for determination in this case is whether the defendants have succeeded in establishing a right of easement to irrigate their lands from the Kul known as the Baoriwali Kul in the town of Kalka and claimed by the plaintiff and his brother Ganga Ram as their exclusive property. It appears that the Kul passes through the lands owned by the plaintiff and the defendants and it is alleged by the defendants that they have been using it from time immemorial. The plaintiff owns a garden in this town which is situated just below the Mandarwali land owned by defendants Nos. 2 to 11, and on a level higher to that of the land owned by defendant No. 1 Kalu. The plaintiff's case is that this Kul was constructed by his grand-father Hari Chand, and that no other person has the right to take water from it without his permission or consent. The defendants dispute the plaintiffs' right of exclusive ownership and alleged as already observed, that they have been taking water from this Kul for a very long time. The following issues were framed :—

1. Was the Kul in dispute constructed by Hari Chand, plaintiff's ancestor and have the plaintiff and his ancestors been irrigating their land solely from it ?

2. Have the defendants been irrigating their land from the Baoriwali Kul jointly with the plaintiff, and if so for how long ?

3. Is the suit barred by limitation ?

The Trial Court has found in favour of the plaintiff on all the issues and has decreed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge has differed from the findings of the Trial Court and has come to the conclusion that the defendants have acquired an easement to irrigate their lands from the Kul in question. The suit has accordingly been dismissed. The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court and it has been contended on his behalf by Mr. Shamair Chand that no plea as to an easement had ever been set up by the defendants and that the learned District Judge was not justified in setting up an entirely new case for them in appeal. He has contended that in any case an easement has not been established and that the plaintiff is consequently entitled to a decree. Dr. Gokal Chand, on the other hand, argues that usage from time immemorial had been set up and that this was tantamount to putting forward a plea of easement. He also argues that the Kul in question is not owned by the plaintiff and that it is a natural stream from which every person through whose land it passes is entitled to take water.

It is, however, clear that the contention as to the Kul in question being a natural stream had never been put forward in the Trial Court and that the only issues upon which the parties went to trial were :—

1. Whether the Kul was exclusively owned by the plaintiff or not, and

2. Whether the defendants have been using it for a sufficiently long time to enable them to defeat the plaintiff's claim. From the evidence produced it appears that it was the exclusive ownership of the Kul which was in question and not the fact that it was a natural stream or otherwise. The plaintiff in support of his contention relied upon an entry in the Settlement records of 1882 from which it appears that the Kul had been constructed by Hari Chand his grand-father. Other evidence was also produced in support of the plaintiff's right of exclusive ownership. Haria a witness on behalf of the defendants, admitted that the Kul belonged exclusively to the plaintiff and that he used to irrigate his garden with the water of that Kul with the permission of the former. It is clear from this evidence that the plea of the Kul being a natural stream was never even thought of and that it was put forward only for the first time in the lower Appellate Court. I do not think that the defendants were entitled to shift the grounds of their defence, and I must consequently overrule this contention.

As to the defendants having acquired a right of easement, it is obvious that it was never definitely stated by them that they have been using this Kul as an easement and as of right without interruption and for twenty years as required by section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act. What was stated by them in their pleas was that they had been using this Kul from time immemorial. This, in my opinion, does not amount to setting up a plea of easement, but in any case it appears to me that there is no evidence on the record in support of the finding that an easement had been acquired. The learned District Judge has referred to certain Jamabandis commencing from 1882 in which defendants' land has been described as Kul irrigated and from this description he has drawn an inference that land must have been irrigated by the Baoriwali Kul since 1882. I do not think that such an inference can legally be drawn from this entry. The lands may have been described as Kul irrigated, but this surely does not mean that they were as a matter of fact irrigated from Kul or that they were irrigated from this particular Kul. The description only means that the lands were capable of being irrigated from a Kul. There is no evidence on the record to show that the Baoriwali Kul was ever utilized from 1882 to 1906 for irrigating the defendants' lands. The Khasra Girdawaris from 1906 to 1912 have been placed on the record andit appears on a reference to these Khasra Girdawaris that some portions of the land were cultivated by artificial irrigation in these years. I do not think that this evidence alone is sufficient to warrant a presumption that the lands were irrigated from the Baoliwali Kul. In any case usage for six years is sufficient to create a right of easement, and I do not, therefore, think that the learned District Judge was justified in holding that the defendants were entitled to the right claimed.

I accordingly, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

In the absence of anything to show to the contrary, a thekadar should be presumed to have the ordinary powers of a landlord, including the power to grant leases.

The fact that under section 68 of the Oudh Rent Act, a thekadar cannot acquire the rights of a cultivating tenant does not mean that he cannot convey those rights to a tenant.

Appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 7th January 1922.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. R. Kidwai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is only one question for decision in this appeal, and it would present no difficulty were it not for an old ruling of this Court. The facts of the present case so far as they need be stated for the purposes of this appeal are that the defendant holds a certain tenancy under a lease for 7 years granted to him by the thekadar of the Raja of Amethi. That lease is dated 5th June 1919. The plaintiff claims the same holding under a lease granted to him by the Raja himself. It is not dated but admittedly was executed some time in November 1919. It is not disputed that the plaintiff's lease is later in date than the defendant's and that if the defendant's lease is binding on the Raja the plaintiff's suit must fail. The question for decision therefore, is whether the thekadar had power to grant leases.

There is a finding of fact by the first Court of appeal that it is not possible to ascertain the terms of the theka. Apparently there was no written document at all. There is the evidence on one side of the Raja's agent that thekadars in the Amethi Raj have no power to grant leases and there is the evidence of the thekadars on the other that he was given orally express powers to grant leases. Evidently the lower Court disbelieved both these witnesses, and concluded, as I have said that it is not possible to ascertain the terms of the theka. The Court, therefore, proceeded to decide the next question, namely, whether where there is, on one hand, no express grant to a thekadar of the power to give leases and, on the other, no express reservation by the landlord withholding from the thekadar the power to give leases the thekadar will be considered to have the power or not to have the power. The ruling of this Court which has been followed by the Courts below is reported in the Rent Act Rulings of Mr. Jacob. It is No. 52 (Maharaja Jagatji Singh v. Rupan Murao (1) in the book and will be found at page 80. The facts were on all fours with the present suit, that is to say the thekadar had altered the area and rent of a tenant's holding and the tenant claimed that he could now carry on for 7 years without being liable to ejectment. It was decided by a single Judge of this Court that the tenant could be ejected because the thekadar had no express authority to alter the area and rent of the tenants and that in the absence of proof of such special express authorization, the presumption is against a thekadar possessing such powers. I am unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Judicial Commissioner. He says that section 68 of the Act expressly declares that a thekadar does not acquire any of the rights mentioned in section 67, one of which is the right conferred by section 36. He continues "if then a thekadar cannot himself acquire such right the presumption is that he cannot give a tenant under him such right." With great respect there is a confusion of thought here. The law has conferred certain rights upon cultivating tenants. One of these is a right to retain possession of a holding for 7 years from the date of admission to the holding. In the absence of section 68 it might have been argued that a thekadar possessed this right along with other rights of cultivating tenants. But the intention of the legislature was to protect cultivators. There is no reason to extend any special protection to a thekadar He is a person to whom the landlord transfers his own rights of rent collection. Ordinarily a thekadar in dealing with the tenants has exactly the same rights as the landlord. He is going to manage the estate, realise what he can out of it and pay a certain fixed sum to the landlord. If the full rights of the landlord are not conveyed to him he is hampered in his management of the estate. But because he himself cannot acquire the rights of a cultivating tenant it does not follow that he cannot convey these rights. They are rights acquired by the tenants against both thekadar and landlord. They follow by operation of statute upon the granting of a lease by the landlord or by any person who has authority to grant that lease. These statutory rights follow upon the granting of a lease by the thekadar. But this has no bearing on the question whether the thekadar himself is to be placed on a level with a cultivating tenant and given the protection which the law has provided for cultivators as against their landlords. I, therefore, respectfully dissent from the ruling in Maharaja Jagatjit Singh v. Rupan Murao (1).

I am glad to find that there is good authority for my own view. In Lal v. Raja Udya Partap Udya Dutt Singh (2) the judgment I have just referred to was expressly dissented from by both members of the Board of Revenue. Mr. Reid, who wrote the main Judgment is a very high authority on all matters of Revenue Law. That case has been followed by the Board again in Kishan Dayal v. Thakur Prasad (3). I, therefore, decide that on the facts found by the lower Court the proper presumption is that the thekadar had the ordinary powers of a landlord including the power to grant the lease which he has granted to the defendant.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 24 Purganas, dated the 21st June 1919.

Messrs. T. K. Ghose, K. M. Sen and P. B. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. N. Mitter and N. C. Kar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant Company in a suit for damages for destruction of a godown and buildings. The damages were assessed by the plaintiff at Rs. 5,000 ; a decree has been made in his favour for Rs. 3,500. The plaintiff was a lessee under the defendants and the crucial point in the litigation is, whether his tenancy had been terminated in accordance with law at the date when the godown and the buildings erected by him on the land covered by the lease were destroyed. The Subordinate Judge has answered this question in favour of the plaintiff and we feel no doubt that the view taken by him was correct.

The terms of the tenancy are embodied in two documents, dated the 16th December, 1912. The eighth paragraph of the first document states that the Company would give three months' notice in writing to the lessee to deliver up the land and premises leased. The second paragraph of the second document states that the lessee would, during the continuance of the lease, pay to the company the rent reserved and pay the same in advance in such number of monthly instalments, not exceeding six, as the Company might direct. The fifth paragraph further provides that the lease might be terminated by either party at any time by three months previous notice in writing sent to the other party by registered post at his or their last known address. On the 23rd February, 1917, the Agent of the Company wrote a letter to the plaintiff, stating that three months notice was given under Clause (5) of the agreement and the lessee was requested to arrange to vacate the site by the 31st May, 1917. It is not disputed that this was a good and sufficient notice which made it obligatory upon the tenant to quit the premises by the date specified. Thereupon, correspondence took place between the parties; but it is not necessary to make a detailed reference to the letters for the purpose of the decision of the question raised before us. On the 7th July 1917, that is, after the expiry of the period covered by the notice, the Agent wrote to the lessee again. This letter states that the three months' notice had expired and yet the tenant had not vacated the site. Then follows this passage.

"I now give you formal notice to vacate the site and to demolish your buildings and to remove your property from Railway land and to restore the site to its former condition. In the event of your failure to do so by the 31st instant, the buildings will be demolished and the ground restored to its former condition at your cost".

Four days later, the Agent addressed the following letter to the lessee:

"I understand that you have not paid any occupation fee for the land in question since that due for the month of December 1916, although repeatedly asked for it by the Station Master, Gondia and that a sum of Rs. 37-8-0 is due from you up to the 31st May, 1917 at the rate of Rs. 7-8-0 per mensem. The occupation fee, as you are aware, is strictly payable in advance and should have been paid long ago. However, I now ask you to remit the amount forthwith to our Chief Auditor and advise me of your having done so. Rent is also recoverable for the period during which you hold over after the expiry of your notice to quit, and I hereby call upon you to pay the amount at the rate of Rs. 7-8-0 a month from 1st June 1917 to the date of actual vacation".

On the 16th July 1917, the plaintiff remitted Rs. 90 to the Chief Auditor of the Railway Company with the following intimation.

"We beg to send you enclosed herewith Rs. 90 in payment of the occupation fee for the land for one year from 1st January 1917 to 31st December 1917." The next day the Chief Auditor sent a receipt in the following terms:

"Received from Mr. Balmukund the sum of Rupees ninety only on account of occupation fee of land at Gondia from January to December 1917."

On the 24th July 1917, the lessee sent the following information to the Agent himself.

"With reference to your letter dated the 11th July 1917 we beg to inform you that we have already remitted Rs. 90 in payment of the occupation fee for the land at Gondia for the current year to your Chief Auditor, vide his cash receipt dated the 17th July 1917."

On the 15th August 1917, the Agent acknowledged receipt of this letter and invited the attention of the lessee to his letter of the 7th July 1917. It was added in this letter that the lessee was required to vacate the site and to demolish the buildings by the 31st July 1917 as a result of the notice served upon him in terms of the letter dated the 23rd February 1917. The lessee was informed that if he did not comply with the notice, the buildings would be dismantled by the company. It was finally added that an account would be prepared crediting the lessee with the value of the materials recovered on dismantling and with the balance of rent paid in advance for the period commencing with the date of the letter, that is, the 15th August 1917 and debiting him with the cost of dismantling. The balance so found, if in his favour, would be paid to him, if in favour of the Railway, it would be recovered from him. The lessee subsequently replied on the 20th August 1917 that as Rs. 90 was deposited in advance as rent for the year then current, he was not liable to be ejected before the end of that year. We need not refer to the correspondence which subsequently followed. An account was made up by the Company of the sale proceeds of the dismantled godown and buildings and a sum of Rs. 34-1-9 was included in the account as the portion of the amount of rent refundable according to the letter of the 15th August 1917. On the 15th August 1918, the plaintiff instituted this suit for damages. The defendant contended that the tenancy had been validly terminated by the notice contained in the letter of the 23rd February 1917. The plaintiff urged, on the other hand, that the fact of acceptance of rent subsequent to the 31st May 1917 operated as a waiver of notice and the tenancy was in force on the 19th September 1917, when the Company proceeded to dismantle the godown and the building. We are of opinion that the contention of the defendant cannot possibly prevail.

The principle of law applicable to cases of this character is now well settled. The acceptance of rent due after forfeiture from the lessee —and this notwithstanding the protest of the lessor that such acceptance is without prejudice to his right to insist upon his forfeiture —operates as a waiver of the notice. As an authority for this proposition, it is sufficient to refer to the decision of the House of Lords in Croft v. Lumly (1), that acceptance of rent in these circumstances constitutes waiver of notice, notwithstanding that the lessor expressly states that he accepts the money as compensation for use and occupation and not as rent and refuses to recognise party paying as his tenant. A similar view was adopted by the Judicial Committee in Davenport v. Queen (2), which was followed in Rex v. Paulson (3). The proposition was recognised and applied in Griffin v. Tomkins (4), Strong v. Stringer (5) and Hartell v. Blackler (6). A tenant whose tenancy had been terminated by notice to quit in the case last mentioned wrote to his lessor enclosing money as and for rent accrued due since the expiry of the notice. The lessor sent on the letter and enclosure to her Solicitors who replied: "our client does not recognise you as her tenant, and we will retain the money for the time on account of use and occupation of her premises and not as rent." It was ruled that notwithstanding the terms of the letter, the acceptance and retention of the money operated as a waiver of the notice and constituted a recognition of a continuance of the tenancy. This case was considered in Davies v. Bristowe (7) and some doubt appears to have been expressed by one of the Judges who was a party to that decision. We must not overlook, however, that the case of Davies v. Bristowe (7), was governed by the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act, and as pointed out in Shuter v. Hersh (8), the effect of that decision is that where a tenant remains in possession after receiving notice to quit, there is no necessity for the landlord to give him a fresh notice to quit before raising the rent to the extent permitted by the statute, unless a new tenancy has been actually created, and the mere fact that the landlord accepts rent after giving the notice to quit cannot be taken as a waiver by him of the notice to quit so as to create a new tenancy. The decision in Evans v. Enver (9), which followed a dictum in Toleman v. Portbury (10), was based on its special facts, which have no similarity to those of the present litigation. It may be contrasted with the decision in Penton v. Barnett (11), which was followed in Shah Wali Ahmad v. Hussaini Begum (12), where Mansur Ali v. Abdul Karim (13), and Padmanabhya v. Ranga (14), were cited in support of the position that though acceptance of rent due prior to service of notice to quit does not operate as waiver, acceptance of rent due subsequent to such notice has the opposite effect.

In our opinion, it is plain upon well-settled principles that the tenancy in this case was not terminated on the 31st May 1917 by reason of the acceptance of rent by the landlord from the tenant. In this view no other point arises in this appeal, we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the decision of the Trial Judge upon the question of quantum of damages.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs.

SAHU RAM KUMAR—APPELLANT
versus
MUHAMMAD YAKUB AND ANOTHER —RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—Building contract—Builder contracting to allow rebate to owner on scheduled rates of materials supplied—Dispute between parties Building not completed—Owner, whether entitled to rebate.

The defendant contracted to build a house for the plaintiff within one year. The plaintiff under took to advance small sums of money to the defendant and the latter agreed to allow a rebate or deduction of 10 per cent. in favour of the plaintiff on the scheduled rates of articles to be supplied by him. If the work was done honestly and well it was left to the kindness of the plaintiff to allow something to the defendant from this commission. As the work commenced the plaintiff began to order changes in the construction almost doubling the size of the building. Disputes arose between the parties the plaintiff declined to make further advances and the work was stopped. Thereupon the plaintiff brought a suit to recover his commission. It was found that the work done was well worth the full scheduled rates :—

Held (1) that the arrangement by way of rebate or 10 per cent. commission in favour of plaintiff was an arrangement that was only exigible and became crystallised when the work was completed.

(2) that a fortiori this deduction was never agreed to in respect of the additions ordered in the original building;

(3) that as the work was not completed and the defendant was in no way to blame and there was no injustice done to the plaintiff the latter was not entitled to recover anything.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne and W. Wallach, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, dated the 4th March, 1919. This decree reversed that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 30th September, 1916, decreeing the plaintiff's claim.

A building contract by way of offer and acceptance had been concluded between the plaintiff, who was the owner of certain land and the respondent, a builder apparently in a humble way of business, who was a contractor. Certain subsidiary matters of accounting were referred to in the minute argument delivered before the Board. Even if that argument had been in all points sound, it would have resulted in a relatively trivial readjustment of the figure of the alleged balance. Their Lordships content themselves with observing that the appeal is decided upon a consideration of the only ground which appears in the reasons of the appellant. It is not legitimate to raise at this Board other and subsidiary points which were apparently neither raised nor canvassed in the Courts below.

The reasons for the appellant's appeal to this Board are substantially confined to one point. That has reference to a 10 per cent. allowance, to be made by the contractor to the owner for commission.

The Board will now proceed to discuss the matter in the light of the contract between the parties. The form of the suit is by the owner against the contractor for a sum amounting to nearly Rs 10,000 on the allegation that that Rs. 10,000 consisted of over-payments made by him as compared with the sums to which the contractor was entitled under the bargain. The appellant made certain strong allegations against the respondent and declined to make further advances and the work was stopped.

Their Lordships refer in particular to the offer of the 27th May 1913. The early portion of that offer is in these terms, and it is that early portion which raises, and completely raises, the question now at issue before the Board:—

"In compliance with your order the undersigned applicant"—that is the contractor—"is willing to construct the new Kothi' in the bagh near the distillery in mauza Manpur at the rate specified below less Rs. 10 per cent. for commission. Rs. 500 will remain as an advance, which will be deducted from the amount of the last bill. If the work is done honestly and well, something by way of reward may kindly be allowed to the undersigned from the Rs. 10 per cent. commission."

There is further reference in the acceptance to what is manifest, and is agreed. There was a most important circumstance, namely that the work was to be done within one year. In the acceptance of the offer this and another point are made clear, namely."

(1) "you should within a year construct" the building, and (2) "If you would require money during the progress of the work you will continue to get money weekly also according to need. Finally it may be stated that under the contract no provision or bargain is made as to additions or alterations."

Their Lordships have carefully considered the ambit of these clauses. It appears to the Board to be clear that the contract refers to one particular building, the size, dimensions and even plans of which had already been fixed. The new kothi thus singularised was that which had been the subject of an application submitted with plans, to the local authority and by that date approved.

As this contract work proceeded, however, it was found that the views of the owner were very much larger than those for which he had obtained the specific sanction. Within a few weeks of the acceptance of this contract radical changes began to be ordered by the owner. To speak roughly, those consisted of the doubling of the size of the main building itself ; it was converted into a two storey instead of a one storey building ; a large and apparently extensive compound was walled in, and various other buildings including a temple. These were made the subject of orders from the owner, and work proceeded accordingly. None of these items, as already mentioned, were within at least, the express scope of the original contract.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the arrangements thus made forming an addtion of a kind so substantial as to increase the original cost from Rs. 21,000 to nearly Rs. 42,000, must be attributed to a new arrangement between the parties, and that that arrangement could not, in point of fact, have been completed within anything like the stipulated period of 12 months applicable to the first and definitely limited contract.

In those circumstances it was quite clear that the builder still required and possibly in even a fuller degree to be accommodated with cash to enable him to undertake the heavy and fresh obligations under the new contract. It is also further clear on the facts that when payments to account, or payments to discharge builders' accounts or the accounts of persons supplying material, were made no deduction of 10 per cent. commission was in fact made from these. These facts have a real bearing on the question of what was the stage at which such an allowance was to be made.

It appears to their Lordships that upon a review of the first contract it is plain that the arrangement by way of rebate or a deduction of 10 per cent. commission in favour of the owner, was an arrangement which was only exigible and became crystallised when the work was completed and the final accounts at the end of the year were to be made up. Upon that occasion the Rs. 500 originally advanced was to be deducted from the cumulative sum due to the builder, and further the estimate of the 10 per cent. commission would be made, not from the sums paid but from the scheduled rates for the articles supplied, whatever their cost had been. After this reckoning was made within or at the close of the year, there would be completely determined the amount of the debt falling under the 10 per cent. commission charged. It was then, in those circumstances, that the opportunity would have arisen to the owner, to forego making that large deduction from his contractor's prices, and to limit the 10 per cent. by such an allowance as was left to his own good-will. But the conditions for making such a deduction never arose ; the contract was not possible of completion within the year ; it in point of fact was not completed ; and the Board agree with the High Court that the failure to complete was not due to any fault on the contractor's part. The stipulation accordingly disappeared.

A fortiori, in their Lordships' opinion such deduction was never agreed to with regard to the further work. What was done was that it entered into the head of the owner that he had largely overpaid the contractor. As it turns out this idea of his was illusory ; he had not done so. On the best computation that can be made the accounts were fairly square, even at the old rates.

In those circumstances, when a suit was brought for the sum of nearly Rs. 10,000 of alleged over-payment, the parties most sensibly agreed that a skilled referee should settle the amounts. Nor does the Board question the propriety of their having said to the referee that they were willing that the rates charged in the original schedule should be made applicable to the extra works executed. But the question remains as to what was to be done with regard to what one might call the prolocation of the right to deduct 10 per cent. commission. In the opinion of the Board there was no such prolocation. It would have required a special and particular contract to make such a charge applicable to a condition of affairs entirely new.

Their Lordships, however, are further relieved to find that the referee looking, over the charges and the work, does go into the question of whether the work was fairly charged at the contract rates without any allowance being made for the 10 per cent. commission. He gives evidence which is thus narrated in the judgment of the High Court : "Rustanji "—that is, the arbiter—" admits that the work was well done worth the full rates entered in the schedule of the 27th May 1913, without any Rs. 10 per cent. deduction." No injustice as between these parties entering into this mercantile contract is to ensue. The contrary is the case. The allowance of the 10 per cent. which is now claimed in this suit by the owner of this piece of land would be an allowance which would permit him to pay only 90 per cent. of the value of the work which is actually on his property.

Their Lordships are satisfied that the result arrived at by the High Court is sound ; and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

EAST INDIAN RY. CO. v. KANAILAL

Where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it determines that question, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code merely because it has come to an erroneous decision. Where, in a suit against a Railway Company, for damages for loss of goods, a Court erroneously holds that notice under section 77 of the Railways Act, was unneccessary on the facts of the case, it cannot be said that it assumes jurisdiction which had not been vested in it by law, and the decision is not, therefore, open to revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code

S.) 821, referred to

Mr. Langford James, for the Petitioner.

Sir B. C. Mitter, for the Opposite-Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code and it has arisen under the following circumstances :—On the 13th June 1920, the Opposite Party delivered to the Jodhpur-Bikaneer Ry. at Bikaneer Station for carriage to Howrah as passenger's luggage 12 packages, 7 of which were placed in the guard's van. At Howrah the Opposite Party received all the said packages save one of those placed in the guard's van, which had been lost in transit. On the 26th April 1921, the Opposite Party instituted a suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 981-4-0 in respect of the package which was lost against the East Indian Ry. Company. On the 7th February 1923, the suit was decreed in favour of the Opposite Party, although the Petitioner Company had taken the point that no notice of suit under section 77 of the Railways Act had been given. The Petitioner Company now contends that the learned Judge in the Small Cause Court had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law in entertaining and decreeing the suit against the East Indian Ry. Company in the absence of a notice under section 77 of the Railways Act. The Petitioner Company applied to my learned brother, Mr. Justice Greaves, on the 20th August 1923, and obtained a rule under section 115, Civil Procedure Code against the Opposite Party and this rule has now come on for hearing before me.

On behalf of the Petitioner Company considerable stress has been laid on the case of C. D. M. Hindley v. Joynarain Marwari (1) and on the case of The Assam Bengal Ry. Co., Ld., v. Radhika Mohan Nath (2) and it has been contended that usurpation of jurisdiction by the Small Cause Court by holding that a notice under section 77 of the Railways Act is unnecessary can be revised by this Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Sir Binode Mitter for the Opposite Party has contended that the present is not a case of usurpation of authority, nor is it a case of a conscious violation of a rule of law and that, therefore, on the authority of the decision of the Privy Council in Ameer Hossain v. Sheo Baksh Singh (3), the present rule ought to be discharged.

It is well settled that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it has determined that question, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity, simply because it has come to an erronous decision. The leading case on this subject is the case of Ameer Hossain (3), cited above, and following this decision it has been held that the High Court will not interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, merely because the lower Court had wrongly decided that a suit was barred by limitation, or that it was barred as res judicata, or because the lower Court had proceeded upon an erroneous construction of the sections of an Act, or had misunderstood the effect of a document in evidence, or had excluded evidence which it ought to have admitted. The Privy Council in the case of Balkrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva

Aiyar (4), observed as follows :—" It will be observed that section 115 applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved." There is no doubt that conflicting views of the scope and effect of section 115 are to be found in the cases in the reports and in these latter days I do not feel called upon to reconcile these conflicting views. I ought to add that my attention has been drawn to the case of Jannoitzer v. Mohinind Chatterji decided by Jenkins, C. J. and Woodroffe, J., on the 21st January 1904, Unreported. The passages in the judgment which are specially relied upon are these :—

Per Jenkins, C. J.—"I wish to reserve for consideration, should it ever hereafter arise, the question whether rejection or admission of evidence may not be in some peculiar circumstances an illegality or material irregularity, as for instance, where it is in direct contravention of some statutory provision."

Per Woodroffe, J.—" Thus where a Court acts upon an unstamped document, where the legislature says that it is not to be acted upon at all, or on an unregistered document where registration is required, the Court has, I think, no option but to follow the mandatory provisions of the legislature, and if it does not follow such mandatory order, then it acts illegally."

No doubt there are these observations, but the real question is whether the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge is revisable by me on the facts of the present case under the first part of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. On this point I desire to adopt the observations of West, J., in the case of Amritrav Krishna Deshpande v. Balakrishna Gunesh (5) :— "Now, jurisdiction, according to the exact conception of it formed by the Roman lawyers, consists in taking cognizance of a case involving the determination of some jural relation, in ascertaining the essential points of it and in pronouncing upon them. An enquiry into whether the jurisdiction exists is not an exercise of jurisdiction over the case itself, but an investigation of another question altogether, that of whether the considerations of cognizance are satisfied. There is in the determination of such a question no adjudication in the stricter sense, no ascertainment of jural relations and command consequent thereon. This enquiry, therefore, may properly be reviewed in many cases, where when the exercise of a true jurisdiction in the fuller sense has taken place, no appeal or even review may be possible. If the objection that might have been raised as a preliminary one is not in fact raised until the hearing of the case has proceeded to a certain stage, the enquiry thus provoked is not thereby changed in its character. It is only in a second intention of the Court that " jurisdiction " is used in speaking of such an enquiry as an exercise of jurisdiction; objections affecting jurisdiction must relate either to the person, the place or the character of the suit. If a Court has competence in these respects, it may exercise jurisdiction and does exercise it whether correctly or erroneously in dealing judicially with a cause placed before it. Jurisdiction again has two closely related but distinguishable senses. It means sometimes authority, sometimes the exercise of the authority and this either in investigation or by way of command. Where the law speaks of exercise of jurisdiction, or failing to exercise jurisdiction, it means using or failing to use authority in entering on an enquiry and carrying it to a judicial conclusion. The exercise of jurisdiction is not declined when such a conclusion has been arrived at, merely because, had the decision on a particular point been different, further questions would have had to be disposed of."

In my judgment, the present is not like the class of cases referred to by Woodroffe, J. Nor is it like the case where it has been held that, if a Court wrongly decides that a suit is of a civil nature and entertains the suit on that basis, the decision is open to revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code for no Civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature. On the facts of the present case and on the judgment of the learned Small Cause Court Judge, I feel great doubt whether I can say that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. No doubt the Court has said that notice under section 77 of the Railways Act on the facts of this case is unnecessary, but I think it is a strong thing to say that the Court by holding that a notice under section 77 of the Railways Act on the facts of this case is unnecessary did assume a jurisdiction which had not been vested in it by law. It may be said that this case is on the border line, but on the best consideration that I am able to give, I am inclined to think that if there is an error at all in this case, it is an error on a point of law and that no question of jurisdiction properly arises on the present application.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule must be discharged with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, J.—The question in this second appeal relates to the validity of the gift made by Kamalbeg in favour of his daughter Hashimbi, who is the plaintiff.

The facts relating to the gift are not in dispute now. On November 23, 1899, Kamalbeg made a gift of a house and certain Inam land described in the deed of gift which is registered. The recitals in the deed relating to possession thereof are as follows:—

"At present the said land has been leased out to another person for cultivation. On the expiration of the term of the lease you should take the same into your possession and carry on Vahivat thereof. The house is this day delivered into your possession for Vahivat."

The land which is referred to as having been given in lease was at the date of the gift in possession of Venkangowda on terms, which are stated in an award between the plaintiff and Venkangowda's representative as follows:—

"Before this gift was made the plaintiff's father had, on April 27, 1898, mortgaged this land for Rs. 800 on conditions that the mortgagee should be in possession of the land for twenty years and that heshould make improvements in the land (Kird). Malgowda is in possession of the land up till to-day on this agreement. The defendant should show the improvements as stipulated within twenty years and plaintiff should pay the amount of Rs. 800 and get back the land. Thus has the deceased Kamalbeg agreed in writing. The defendant is accordingly in enjoyment of the land for these nine years."

A decree was passed in terms of the award according to which the present plaintiff was to get possession at the end of the period of twenty years in 1920-21 without paying any amount, and the sum advanced by the mortgagee Venkangowda to Kamalbeg was to be treated as satisfied at the end of that period. By a later compromise the plaintiff in fact got possession of the land in 1916 from the mortgagee. But the other heirs of Kamalbeg obstructed her possession, and ultimately the present suit was filed on November 19, 1918, by her against the other heirs of Kamalbeg. The Trial Court held that the gift was valid, but the lower Appellate Court held it to be invalid on the ground that there was no transfer of possession of the land.

In the appeal before us it is urged that the gift is valid. It seems to me that this argument must be accepted. It is stated in the plaint and not challenged in the pleadings nor disputed before us that the donee got possession of the house under the deed of gift. To that extent the gift is valid and has apparently been given effect to. As regards the land it is clear that it was in the possession of Venkangowda as a mortgagee at the date of the gift. No immediate transfer of possession to the donee was possible. It does not appear that anything was done to give intimation to the mortgagee at the time of the gift. But the fact remains that in a subsequent litigation between the donee and the mortgagee's heir, the donee got possession. No doubt the donor had died long before the donee got possession from the mortgagee under a compromise. The true position of Venkangowda under the so-called lease was that of a mortgagee. The litigation between Hashimbi and Venkangowda's heir which was settled by an award made by the arbitrators shows that the gift was treated as valid between them.

It is true that the donor did not do anything beyond executing the deed of gift so far as the land was concerned. That was possibly due to the fact that Venkangowda died in four days from the date of the gift. But we have the fact that the possession of the house was transferred under the deed: and nothing further by way of transferring possession of the equity of redemption was apparently possible under the circumstances. The gift would, therefore, be valid. The ratio decidendi in Chandsaheb Kashimsaheb v. Gangabai (1) would a fortiori apply to this case. But it is argued on behalf of the respondent that the gift of the equity of redemption is invalid according to Muhammadan law and reliance is placed upon the decisions in Mohinudin v. Manchershah (2) and Ismal v. Ramji (3).

The decision in Mohinudin v. Manchershah (2) has been criticised by Mahmood, J., in Rahim Bakhsh v. Muhammad Hasan (4) and on the facts of that particular case it is difficult to say that the general proposition that there could be no gift of an equity of redemption was decided. In the later case of Ismal v. Ramji (3), the gift was revoked by the donor before any possession of the land could be taken and it is not easy to say how far that circumstance influenced the judgment in any way.

There is a very useful criticism of those decisions in Wilson's Anglo Muhammadan Digest, p. 327 (5th Edition); and the view taken in the Bombay cases has been criticised by other writers on Muhammadan Law.

When the simple question arises as to whether the equity of redemption, when the property is in the possession of the mortgagee, could form the subject-matter of a valid gift according to Muhammadan Law, these decisions would require to be carefully considered probably by a Full Bench. But on the facts such as we have in this case, viz., that the possession of a part of the property given by way of gift was transferred to the donee, and that as regards the rest, the donee in fact got possession from the mortgagee after the donor's death in pursuance of the gift, I feel clear that the gift as a whole should be accepted as satisfying the essential condition as to the transfer of possession in pursuance of the gift.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed and that of the Trial Court restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court on the defendants.

Vendor and purchaser—Covenant to pay money, whether runs with land—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 102, 115—Suit of small cause nature—Appeal, second, whether lies—Revision—High Court, power of—Res judicata—Decision of Small Cause Court.

There is no such thing as between a vendor and a purchaser as a covenant to pay money running with the land.

The predecessor of the plaintiff sold certain land to the predecessor of the defendant and contemporaneously with the sale-deed but quite independently of it, the latter executed an ekrarnama whereby he bound himself, his heirs and legal representatives, so long as the land was held by them, to pay to the vendor and his legal representatives the sum of twenty rupees per year for the sheba of a particular Thakur. The vendor subsequently sold the land to the defendant. Plaintiff sued the defendant in the Small Cause Court to recover the sum secured to him by the ekrarnama and obtained a decree. An application in revision to the High Court was dismissed. A subsequent suit for similar relief which was tried by the Munsif on the ordinary side was, however, dismissed, but was decreed by the District Judge on appeal. On second appeal by the defendant ;

Held (1) that the suit was an ordinary suit for money and was not excluded from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court by Article 4 or Article 11 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act ;

(2) that, therefore, no appeal lay to the District Judge against the decision of the Munsif dismissing the suit ;

(3) that a second appeal to the High Court was barred by section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code, but that it was open to the High Court to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision and to set aside the decree of the District Judge as being without jurisdiction ;

(4) that assuming the suit was not cognisable by a Small Cause Court, it was liable to dismissal as the agreement on which it was based did not run with the land and did not bind the defendant ;

(5) that, in that view of the case, the previous decision of the Small Cause Court and the refusal of the High Court to entertain an application in revision against it, did not operate as res judicata, as the case was not cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.—In this case, the defendant appeals from a decision of the District Judge of Nadia reversing a decision of the Munsif of Ranaghat. The plaintiff brought the suit for a sum of money as due to him by the terms of a document called ekrarnama. That document is dated the 28th March 1891 and contemporaneously with it on the same day there was a conveyance of certain land by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff to the predecessor of the defendant. The terms of the ekrarnama have been discussed in the judgments of the Courts below and the first question is the question of construction. It is to be observed that the conveyance contains no reference whatever to any such covenant as I am now about to read from the ekrarnama. The ekrarnama which was executed by the defendant's predecessor-in-title was as follows :—" When you expressed your desire to sell your share of the putni and jamai right in mouza Goid, village Salua Parga Ukhara, I had promised before you that, if the above share was sold to me by you, I and my heirs and legal representatives shall pay you and your legal representatives for the sheba of the Jugal Kishore Thakur the sum of rupees twenty yearly, year after year." Later on, these words occur : " Therefore, I make this ekrar that, by the grace of Jugal Kishore Thakur as long as there shall be any member in my family and as long as I shall have zemindari right in the above mouza, I and my heirs and legal representatives shall pay you and your legal representatives for the sheba of the Thakur the sum of rupees twenty per year." The conveyance of the same date contains no covenant to an equivalent effect and there is no recital whatever in it of this ekrarnama. Now, what has happened is this :—The purchaser of the property who made the promise contained in the ekrarnama conveyed this land to the present defendant. The present defendant is a purchaser from him. The plaintiff accordingly brought the suit against the defendant and he brought it upon the ground that the present defendant was bound by the promise of the man who had sold the land to him. Tee plaintiff says that the promise of the predeessor-in-title of the defendant was intended to bind everybody who would come to own that land and that the covenant runs with the land.

Now, in this case, it will be simplest to begin by stating the legal position of the parties. The position of the defendant in the face of a claim of that sort is that he is a person who is sued upon a claim which is unfounded in law. There is no such thing as between a vendor and a purchaser as a covenant to pay money running with the land. In the case of assingment of lease as between any one who may become interested in the term and any one who becomes interested in the reversion it is possible to talk of a covenant running with the land. At common law no covenant ever ran with the reversion. By the Statute law, some covenants may run with the term and some with the reversion and the nature of the covenants that can be said in loose language to run with the land has been described in the case-law and in the Conveyancing Acts and made more or less precise. The present covenant is not one which can run with the land as it is in no way a covenant to pay rent. There is no lessor or lessee, there is no term and there is no reversion. There is no charge on the land. The postion of a purchaser of land whose predecessor became bound by a restrictive covenant is dealt with upon the principle of Tulk v. Moxhay (1). If there is a restrictive covenant and the purchaser takes with notice of it, then the person in whose favour the covenant is made can restrain the purchaser from acting contrary thereto. The present case is far removed from anything of that sort. When one looks at the terms of the ekrarnama, and at the way in which these two documents of the same date were kept separate, it is abundantly plain that the vendor had a mind to sell the land with a clean title and that, as a part of the consideration, he took a personal covenant from the purchaser which was intended to bind the latter and his family and then only so long as they held the land. There is, therefore, upon the merits, no substance in the case against the defendant and there never was.

Now, the position in this case is only half dealt with when the merits are dealt with. It appears that, in the protracted series of suits—mostly but not all brought in the Small Cause Court, these parties have litigated upon this matter and the defendant has had very poor success. The present appeal is complicated by the further consideration that this suit was not brought in the Small Cause Court.

An objection has been taken by the plaintiff's pleader to the effect that, under section 102 of the Code, there is no second appeal because the suit was of a nature cognizable by the Small Cause Court. I propose to deal with the case on both assumptions; but my opinion is that the suit is simply a suit for a sum of money giving a bad reason why the defendant is bound by the covenant. That being so, I see nothing in Article 4 or Article 11 of the second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, to take away the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

If that be the true view, then the fact that the case was tried by the Munsif in his ordinary jurisdiction does not take away the prohibition of an appeal contained in the Small Cause Courts Act. Authority for that is cited to us from Skankarbhai v. Somabhai (2) which has been followed in this Court in the case of Indra Chandra Mukherjee v. Srish Chunder Banerjee (3). The result, therefore, on this view is that the first appeal was without jurisdiction. The second result but for section 102, Civil Procedure Code would be that this appeal would lie to set aside the decree made without jurisdiction on the first appeal. That would be on the well-known doctrines that are laid down in such cases as Gangadhar v. Sekharbashini (4) and Aduram Haldar v. Nakuleswar Roy (5). But, in this case, there is a further complication that there is a special prohibition against a second appeal. In that view, an objection has been taken by the plaintiff that this appeal is incompetent. In my opinion, on the assumption which I think to be right that the case is cognizable by the Small Cause Court, the present appeal is not competent, and is barred by section 102, Civil Procedure Code. But it is open to the appellant to ask us to treat his memorandum of appeal as an application in revision and to set aside the order made without jurisdiction. This has been done before now. One instance my learned brother points out to me is the case of Baikunta Nath Goswami v. Sita Nath Goswami (6). The question is whether on this assumption we shall exercise our revisional power. Prima facie when a Court is faced with a decree which is made without jurisdiction, it is a very strong thing not to interfere in revision, because otherwise all sorts of troubles may arise. The decree which is a nullity may be contested hereafter by a suit and that may give rise to infinite difficulties. We have, therefore, to see whether there is any valid reason why the decree under appeal should not be set aside. As to that the position is this :—If there was no appeal to the District Judge, the plaintiff who was non-suited by the Munsif might have applied in revision under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act to this High Court. Now it may be that if we had been of opinion that the plaintiff's case was a very good one on merits we would not necessarily in the circumstances of this case have felt bound now to give leave to apply in revision to set aside the decree of the learned Judge of the Court below. That is the position on that hypothesis. We think that the decree of the Court of Appeal below is without jurisdiction. We are satisfied that it is wrong on the merits and we propose apart from any question of res judicata to interfere.

(1) (1848) 2 Ph. 774; 18 L. J. Ch. 83; 13. Jur. (o. s.) 89; 12 L. T. 469; 41 E. R. 1143; 78 R. R. 289.

(3) 21 Ind. Cas. 120; 40 C. 537 at p. 539.

The other view may also be considered. It may be said that the case is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. In that event, what is the position ? The position then is this: There is a second appeal and we are entitled to deal with the case upon the facts found. Now, the only case on that footing which the plaintiff can make is the case of res judicata and, on the footing that the case is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court, what is the plaintiff's case for res judicata ? It appears that the first suit to which the present defendant was a party, was a Small Cause Court Suit of 1901. Well, if the Small Cause Court was not competent to try this case, there is no res judicata. It so happened that in that first suit an application in revision came up to this High Court and two learned Judges for reasons which do not appeal to me refused to interfere with the decree of the Court below holding that the defendant was liable. I am quite prepared to pay respect to that decision so far as it contains propositions not inconsistent with other decisions. But that judgment is in no way res judicata any more than the Small Cause Court Judge's judgment in connection with which it arose. The next suit was one of 1909 which was a suit in the Ordinary Civil Court—a decree, dated the 26th April 1901 being made for rent. I entirely demur to the proposition that this case can be governed by any result of a suit for rent. The next case was one of 1916 brought in the Small Cause Court and there it is perfectly true all points appear to have been canvassed. The defendant was then held liable but on the assumption that the suit was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court, the Judge was not entitled to try the suit. So there is no res judicata. Whichever way, therefore, we look at this matter, in spite of the tangle arising from the procedure adopted in this case and from the procedure adopted in the previous litigation, we see our way to decide this case according to our opinion on the merits. We propose to do so treating the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court by the defendant as an application in revision and set aside the decree of the learned District Judge with costs in that Court as having been made without jurisdiction. The defendant is entitled to recover his costs in this Court from the plaintiff. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Under section 16 (3) of the Contract Act the burden of proving the absence of undue influence can lie on a defendant only in the event of the plaintiff discharging the intitial onus of satisfying the Court that the defendant directly or indirectly was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff.

The maxim "once a mortgage always a mortgage" is one of equity and is not displaced by anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act.

If the substance of a transaction is a mortgage and nothing more than a mortgage it must not be made irredeemable and any covenant which clogs the equity of redemption is void.

The object of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act is to legalise the equitable right to redeem and permit redemption even when the right is expressly abandoned or even postponed by the contract of mortgage which is the subject-matter of a suit for redemption.

Teevan v. Smith, (1882) 20 Ch. D. 724 ; 51 L. J. Ch. 621 ; 47 L. T. 208 ; 30 W. R. 716, relied upon.

The question as to when a mortgagor is entitled to redeem must be answered with reference to the terms of the contract of mortgage as a whole, other relevant circumstances, and the rules of law and equity, applicable to the particular case.

When a suit is brought under a contract but one of its terms is challenged as being void in law the three years' rule of limitation does not apply.

Plaintiff sued to redeem a usufructuary mortgage executed by him in favour of the defendant. The deed provided, inter alia, that the balance of the realization by the mortgagee after deduction of the Government revenue was to be appropriated for the interest, the deficiency to be paid year by year by the mortgagor and in the event of default the mortgagee to be entitled to compound interest at the contractual rate. It further provided that the mortgagor shall have no right of redemption for 50 years after which period redemption would take place in payment of principal, interest and compound interest due. It appeared that the net profits of the mortgaged property were about Rs. 275 and the interest amounted to Rs. 720 thus leaving a deficit of Rs. 445 payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee every year;

Held (1) that the combined effect of the covenant postponing redemption for 50 years and other covenants and the circumstances entailing a perpetual deficiency of profits to the extent of Rs. 445 a year was to render the mortgage in question irredeemable.

(2) that the covenant was repugnant to or inconsistent with the contractual right to redeem.

BALBHADRA PRASAD v. DHANPAT DAYAL

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem it at any time consistent with the usufructuary nature of the mortgage in suit on payment of what was due to the mortgagee on the date of redemption.

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 13th November 1922.

Messrs. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava and Bishambar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and N. N. Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 5th January, 1910, the plaintiff who is the appellant in this Court, obtained a decree for pre-emption from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad in respect of the property now in suit. The decree imposed the condition of payment by the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 3,900 within 6 months of its date.

On the 29th of June 1910, the plaintiff raised a loan from one Shyam Sunder Lal under a pronote ostensibly for Rs. 5,000 and satisfied the condition of the pre-emption decree by depositing Rs. 3,900 in the Court on the same day. The balance of Rs. 1,100 was set off against a pro-note of the 24th November 1909. The plaintiff's son, Mahabir Prasad, joined in the execution of the pro-note.

On the following day, i.e., the 30th of June 1910, the plaintiff executed a deed of usufructuary mortgage in favour of Dhanpat Dayal, defendant-respondent, for a sum of Rs. 6,000 in respect of the property which he had acquired by virtue of the decree for pre-emption. The suit out of which the present appeal arises, is for redemption of the above-mentioned mortgage. The Court below has dismissed it; hence this appeal.

The terms of the deed of mortgage dated the 30th June 1910, which have a bearing on the decision of the appeal are as follows :—

1. Rate of interest—Rupees twelve per cent. per annum.

2. The balance of the realizations by the mortgagee after deduction of the Government Revenue is to be appropriated for the interest, the deficiency in the amount of interest will be paid year by year to the mortgagee by the mortgagor ; in the event of default the mortgagee will be entitled to compound interest at the contractual rate.

3. Any enhancement made by the mortgagee in the profits of the property mortgaged will be appropriated by him, the mortgagor shall have no claim to it either at the time of redemption or at any time.

The mortgagor shall have no right of redemption for fifty years; redemption will take place after the expiration of fifty years in Jeth Khali fasal on payment of the principal, interest and compound interest due.

5. The mortgagee will have the power of providing homesteads to new tenants, of demolition of houses, of planting groves, of sinking wells and of constructing tanks, etc., etc., for which he will be entitled to receive compensation from the mortgagor at the time of redemption.

The mortgagee will have the power of cutting groves, entirely or partly, resumption of rent-free grants and enhancement and assessment of rent. The mortgagor shall have no right to receive any mesne profits, to claim any damages or price thereof at the time of redemption.

Out of the total consideration of Rs. 6,000 the sum of Rs. 5,000 was left with the mortgagee to pay to Shyam Sunder Lal in dischage of the pro-note of the 29th of June 1910, and the balance Rs. 1,000 was received by the mortgagor at the time of the registration of the deed in suit.

The substance of the plaintiff's case is that the real consideration for the pro-note which he received was Rs. 3,900 only, that the extra amount of Rs. 1,100 was fictitiously entered, that the sum of Rs. 1,000 which he received at the registration of the deed of mortgage was returned to and taken back by the mortgagee and

(1) "that all the terms entered in the mortgage-deed have been written on account of the old age and simplicity of the plaintiff and the putting of undue influence upon him. The plaintiff is not bound by the limitation of fifty years" (Para 7 of the plaint).

(2) " That the term of fifty years regarding redemption and other terms are so hard and inequitable and constitute a clog on the equity of redemption that the plaintiff is neither legally nor equitably bound by them." (Para. 8 of the plaint.)

The defence traversed the plaintiff's case and set up one circumstance which has been relied upon in the arguments at the Bar and is also noticed by the learned Judge of the Trial Court. It is stated in paragraph 18 of the written statement which is as follows: –

"That the net profit of the mortgaged property at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed was about Rs. 275 and the interest of the mortgage money amounts to Rs. 720. The interest cannot be paid off by the said profits, and out of the mortgaged property one property i. e., Manjha Pusra has been lost by diluvion for about 20 years. If by the good fortune of the defendant Manjha emerges out of water within 50 years then he would gain immensely. On account of these considerations by the defendant inspite of the profits of the mortgaged property being much less the mortgage-deed was got executed for a period of 50 years. Therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to redemption within limitation."

The suit has been dismissed on the preliminary ground that the term of fifty years as a part of the contract of mortgage was binding. Against this judgment of the Court of first instance, two lines of attack were taken at the hearing of the appeal :

(1) The term should not be enforced because it was the result of undue influence exercised on the plaintiff ; (2) because it is unconscionable and oppressive fettering the right to redeem.

The subsidiary point as regards the sum of Rs. 1,100 as part consideration of the pro-note of the 29th of June 1910 and the sum of Rs. 1,000 as having been taken back by the mortgagee was also pressed at the hearing of the appeal. This point may be disposed of first.

The receipt accompanying the pro-note recites that Rs. 1,100 were due to Shyam Sunder Lal for principal and interest under a previous pro-note executed by the plaintiff and his son Mahabir Prasad, on the 24th of November, 1909. The plaintiff's version is that there was no previous loan and no previous pro-note. The pro-note of the 29th of June, 1910 was in my judgment a part of the mortgage transaction of the following day, the 30th of June, 1910. Without payment of the money due under the pre-emption decree the plaintiff could not have acquired any interest in the properties and consequently could not have validly made a transfer of them by way of mortgage. The mortgage, therefore, was to follow and not precede the deposit of the pre-emption money. This explains the circumstance that money was first advanced under the pro-note and was deposited on the 29th of June so as to clear the way for the execution of the deed of mortgage on the 30th of June. I am not prepared to accept the defendant's version that the mortgage transaction was negotiated and arranged between him and the plaintiff independently of Shyam Sunder Lal and the terms were settled while the deed was being written. This version is opposed to all the reasonable probabilities of the case as pointed out above. No indication of this version was given while the plaintiff was being cross-examined on behalf of the defendant. The pro-note in question contains no stipulation for any interest on the advance. This again shows that it was merely a prelude to the mortgage transaction. Shyam Sunder Lal's son was married to the daughter of the defendant and I have no doubt that Shyam Sunder Lal was the chief figure and the moving spirit of the whole transaction. Whether the name of Dhanpat Dayal was used in the deed as a benami for Shyam Sunder Lal or he was to be the real beneficiary is immaterial for the purposes of this appeal. What is material is the fact that the settlement of the terms of the transaction was made between Shyam Sunder Lal and the plaintiff ; and I accept to this extent the plaintiff's statement in the witness box. The result of this view is that the consideration for the pro-note was the consideration for the mortgage with an additional sum of Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff's case, therefore, amounts to this that out of the total sum of Rs. 6,000 he received only Rs. 3,900 and that he did not receive the balance. Now if the case were to rest here, I should be prepared to assume that the plaintiff received Rs. 3,900 only. This assumption, however, does not entitle the plaintiff to the verdict that he is not liable for the balance. If the real consideration for the loan of Rs. 3,900 was liability to repay Rs. 6,000 the plaintiff cannot escape it on the plea of non-payment of the difference by the creditor. That that must have been the real nature of the transaction I have little doubt in my mind. The plaintiff applied to Shyam Sunder Lal for an advance at a moment when he was hard pressed for time. Shyam Sunder Lal took advantage of it and struck the bargain in his favour in consideration of accomodating the plaintiff. This was perfectly legitimate. In the case of Potter v. Edwards (1) the real transaction was that the mortgagor agreed to receive 700£ and give a mortgage for 1000£. This was upheld. The plaintiff s case, however, goes further. He says that he agreed to the liability being made a part of the consideration on the faith of the promise made by Shyam Sunder Lal that he would not enforce it. This then is a case of fraud on the part of Shyam Sunder Lal. He at first induced trust in the plaintiff by taking an oath and now the defendant is betraying it by seeking to enforce the liability. I have a shrewd suspicion that the plaintiff may be right. Fraud generally masquerades in the apparels of trust. But it is a bare suspicion and beyond the plaintiff's testimony there is nothing else to support it. Shyam Sunder Lal is dead. I must hold that the fraud alleged is not established. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff is liable for the whole amount of Rs. 6,000, the principal mortgage-money, under the deed of the 30th of June 1910.

Now I come to the main question in the appeal.

I am unable to uphold the plea of undue influence. What are the facts? The plaintiff has been a Patwari of a village for over 30 years ; his son, Mahabir Prasad was a patwari at the time of this transaction. Both are literate and men of business and Mahabir Prasad is the scribe of the deed of mortgage in suit. There was no previous money dealing between them and Shyam Sunder Lal or the defendant. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that he was hard pressed for time to satisfy the decree for pre-emption ; Shiam Sunder Lal took advantage of the circumstance and concluded a bargain all on his side. But these facts are not enough to make out a case of undue influence. That the plaintiff had urgent need of money is true but this does not place the lender in a position to dominate the will of the borrower. Rani Sunder Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (2). I have no doubt in my mind that the bargain is wholly on the side of the defendant and "the transaction appears on the face of it, to be unconscionable," (a matter which I will deal with hereafter), still under section 16, sub-section (3), of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, the burden of proving the absence of undue influence can lie on the defendant only in the event of the plaintiff discharging the initial onus of satisfying the Court that the defendant or Shiam Sunder Lal was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff. I am not satisfied that he was. The first line of attack must, therefore, be repelled.

As to the second line of attack, I have come to the conclusion, after a prolonged and anxious consideration, that it must succeed. It was strenuously contended by the learned Advocate for the respondent that the jurisdiction of this Court to grant relief against the letter of the contract is limited in this particular case by the provisions of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 and as the case does not fall within the terms of that section the relief must be refused. Reliance is placed in support of this proposition upon the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (3). It is also contended that the jurisdicion is further restricted by provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 and reliance is placed upon the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Genu Tukaram Tapkir v. Narayan Raghu Tamhane (4). On the other hand, the learned Advocate for the appellant relies in support of his position upon a series of cases decided in this Court in rapid succession; Durga Singh v. Nawab Mirza Muhammad Raza Husain Khan (5), Mathura Prasad v. Bhagwat Prasad (6), Ram Das v. Swami Dayal (7) and Kunj Behari Lal v. Pandit Prag Narain (8). The first three cases are decisions of a single and the same Judge, the last case was decided by a Bench of two other Judges of this Court.

Before deciding between these two contentions I must ascertain the true intent and effect of the terms of the deed in suit as they can be gathered from its language and the circumstances surrounding it. It is common ground that the transaction is essentially a mortgage from beginning till redemption and not a sale at the end of the term of fifty years. It is admitted on both sides before me that the net profits of the mortgaged property are Rs. 275 a year (Written statement para. 18). The amount of interest on Rs. 6,000 at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem comes to Rs. 720 a year. The mortgagor was, therefore, liable to pay Rs. 445 from year to year out of his own pocket for fifty years. In the event of default the mortgagee was entitled to charge compound-interest. It is further admitted that the market value of the mortgaged property is Rs. 9,000 (Written statement para. 12). Assuming first that the plaintiff had independent means to enable him to pay the sum of Rs. 445 as it fell due every year and thus prevent the compounding of the interest; but as he must continue paying this for the whole period of fifty years he shall have paid Rs. 445×50 i. e., Rs. 22,250 at the end of that term. This is equivalent to about two and a half as much as the value of the property. Now take the other alternative that he had means to pay the deficiency of Rs. 445 every year. At the end of the fifty years the mortgage-money would swell to an enormous sum of about two and a half lacs of rupees. On the evidence I am satisfied that the mortgagor had no means large enough to enable him to pay the sum of Rs. 445 every year. The learned Subordinate Judge makes the following remark on this point: —"The plaintiff himself affirmed that he had an income which was sufficient to have enabled him to pay off any deficiency in interest." This is obviously an error. The plaintiff stated all the sources of his income and when they are taken into account with his other needs of life the only reasonable inference is that at the time of the contract of mortgage the plaintiff was not in a position to make good the deficiency in interest out of his own pocket. It is immaterial that the means of the family have recently improved by one of the plaintiff's sons having joined the Provincial Medical Service on a salary of Rs. 120 per mensem. Shyam Sunder Lal had been a Quanungo of the circle in which these properties lie. The defendant and Shyam Sunder Lal have also shares in the same mahal. The parties, therefore, knew, as the learned Subordinate Judge finds, of the deficiency and further, in my opinion, the mortgagee knew of the mortgagor's inability to pay off this deficiency. I ask, why the profits were not entered in the deed? Answer is, to make it appear that the mortgagee was liable to account. But on the terms of the deed except the sum of Rs. 275 the amount of the yearly profits as taken by the parties at the time of the transaction, all other profits accruing in future were not to be debited against the mortgagee. The profits, therefore, as the deed provides, were to remain stationary at Rs. 275 a year. The result is that by the terms of the deed the deficiency of Rs. 445 per year was secured to enure for the whole period of fifty years. I have no doubt in my mind that such being the cumulative effect of these terms of the contract, those terms are oppressive and unconscionable. The deficiency being within the knowledge of the parties the learned Subordinate Judge's view is, "From this it is clear that the mortgagee gave the mortgagor the advantage of a larger sum of money than was actually warranted by the security offered and that was a good compensation for the term of fifty years." This clearly implies what I find as an inevitable conclusion that the deficiency was to be perpetual; and the reasoning would be sound if it had a basis of fact beneath it. The security was not large enough to cover the deficiency of interest not because it was intrinsically inadequate but because all the arrears of profits which would have gone towards the reduction or sweeping off the deficiency altogether were shut out to the mortgagee. Another answer to the learned Subordinate Judge's remark is that the situation would exactly be the same if the mortgagee's intention was to kill the right to redeem altogether. But whether such was the intention or not is of no consequence when the effect of the terms of the deed and other circumstances is to make irredeemable what in law is redeemable. To my mind this contract of mortgage will execute itself as a sale at the end of the fifty years. Who in his senses will seek redemption of this property worth Rs. 9,000 at the cost of 2½ lacs? It is said that the possibility in the increase of the area of the mortgaged property by the alluvial action of the river within the period of fifty years was the consideration which induced the mortgagee in accepting less profits for the present. This is a fallacious argument. The mortgagee is not by the terms of the deed suffering any loss on account of the deficiency of profits. The balance of the interest and compound-interest is accumulating to his manifest advantage and will continue to do so for the whole period of fifty years. In theory, therefore, the mortgagor still retains and will be found to retain his ownership even at the end of fifty years but in effect he has nothing left in him now. He has validly parted with possession and the residue is not worth a penny.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the combined effect of the covenant postponing redemption for fifty years and other covenants and the circumstances entailing a perpetual deficiency of profits to the extent of Rs. 445 a year is to render the mortgage in question irredeemable.

The next question is. Is there no relief against such a condition? I would be grieved to discover that law compels me to uphold this transaction in all its grossness.

"The letter, O how often
"Justice drowns
"Between the law and letter of the law."

(Tennyson's 'The Forestors' quoted in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, Volume I).

I agree with the learned Advocate for the respondent that no relief is possible on the sole ground that the terms are unconscionable or oppressive unless this case falls under the provisions of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. I have already held that it does not. This satisfies the requirements of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Dhanipal Das v. Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (3). But the principle of law which applies to this case is embodied in the maxim 'Once a mortgage always a mortgage.' I am not concerned in this case with the extension 'and nothing but a mortgage' which has given rise to the question as to whether a mortgagee shall or shall not reserve to himself any collateral advantage outside the mortgage contract. This question is the subject-matter of the decision in the case of Noakes & Co., Ltd. v. Rice (9), Bradley v. Carritt (10) and Samuel v. Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation Ltd. (11), and seems to have been set at rest, at all events for the present by the decision in the case of G. and C. Kregliner v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Company, Ltd.(12), in favour of a mortgagee. The broad basis of the maxim 'once a mortgage always a mortgage' when freed from the entanglement, of its off-shoots lies in the fundamental conception of a mortgage, common to all civilised systems of jurisprudence, as a transaction of loan with an obligation to repay, the transfer of property by the debtor to the creditor being a collateral security for the enforcement of the obligation. This conception is maintained by the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, in the definition of mortgage and in the provisions compelling suits for sales or foreclosures. The mortgagor's right to redeem, therefore, subsists in spite of a contract to the contrary. One covenant of the deed in suit arrests that right for fifty years and releases it at the end of that period. Perhaps there can be no objection to this, though I do not decide so in this case. But the combined effect of the covenants, as shown above, is to deprive the mortgagor of that right altogether. This is doing indirectly what could not be done directly. To quote Lord Macnaghten; "Can you impose on the equity of redemption a fetter operating indirectly, when you cannot, as it is admitted, impose a fetter which operates directly." Vide Bradley v. Carritt (10), already cited.

The maxim 'Once a mortgage always a mortgage' is clearly one of equity and is not displaced by anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. On the contrary, it is recognised in the several provisions of that Act as already mentioned. It is not a rule of any technical formality of English Law but is founded upon an equitable view of the primary object of a contract of mortgage. A mortgage in its primary form is a conception traceable to antiquity. "The notion expressed by the word (gage) seems to be that expressed by our 'security'; something has either been given or been seized, and the possession of it by him in whose hands it now is, secures the payment of money or the performance of some act by the person by whom it was given or from whom it was taken." History of English Law, by Pollock and Maitland, Vol, ii, p. 118.

"We infer that the gagee was usually a mortgagee in Glanvell's sense of that term." p. 119.

"If the gage be given 'without a term' then, to all seeming, the creditor can at any time obtain a judgment which will order the debtor to pay within some fixed and reasonable period, and will declare that if this be not done, the creditor may do what he pleases with the gaged thing. It will be noticed that we have here something very like those 'decrees of foreclosure' which Courts of equity will make in much later days." p. 120.

The ancient notion was, therefore, simple and workable with a solid foundation of natural justice underneath it. Later day-lawyers, however, could not conceive of 'possession' disassociated from tenancy or ownership. A mortgagee's possession was clearly not that of a tenant. It was, therefore, that of an owner. If the 'possession' was that of a tenant, there must be demise, if it was in 'fee' there must be 'enfeoffment' Pollock and Maitland, Vol. ii, pp. 121 to 124. Thus through a fetish of technical forms, the mortgagee became the owner in law of the property mortgaged. It seems to me only natural and proper that the custodians of 'conscience' should revolt against such a fiction, or I should say, imposition, of law. The Common Law doctrine mangled the natural and straightforward characteristics of a mortgage but equity restored them to their original and real condition. On my part I see no jurisdiction for denunciations of the efforts of the Equity Judges to recover their lost jurisdiction. See in this connection the judgment of Lord Bramwell in the case Salt v. The Marquess of Northampton (13). If the substance of the transaction is a mortgage and nothing more than a mortgage, then, it must not be made irredeemable and any covenant which clogs the equity of redemption is void. "For the end to accomplish which the jurisdiction has been evolved ought to govern and limit its exercise by Equity Judges. That end has always been to ascertain.....the real nature and substance of the transaction, and if it turned out to be in truth one of mortgage simply, to place it on that footing" per Lord Haldane, L. C., in G. and C. Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Company Limited. (12)

In Stisted's case cited in East India Company v. Atkyns (14) the mortgagor had sworn on the Bible never to exercise the right to redeem, but the transaction being one of mortgage he was permitted to redeem. On the other hand in Newcomb v. Bonham (15) the decision of Lord Nothingham allowing redemption in pursuance of the maxim 'once a mortgage always a mortgage' though the right to redeem was restricted to the mortgagor and he had died without exercising it, was reversed by the Lord Keeper (Lord Guilford) on the ground that the transaction was a mortgage in form only but really of the nature of settlements for the benefit of the mortgagee.—Bonham v. Newcomb (16). The rule deducible from the leading case of Howard v. Harris (17), is thus stated in Campbell's Ruling Cases, Vol. XVIII, p. 358. "The right of redemption is an essential and inseparable attribute of a mortgage security. Equity will relieve against any agreement purporting to defeat or restrict the right of redemption." In Mellor v. Lees (18) Lord Hardwicke laid down "if any fetter is laid upon redeeming the mortgaged estate . . . it would not avail where it is done with a design to wrest the estate out of the hands of the mortgagor." Campbells' Ruling Cases Vol. XVIII, at p. 363. This rule was given effect to in the case of Salt v. Marquess of Northampton (13) and was maintained and accepted as correct in cases where the true character of the transaction was a mortgage but no more in the recent decision of the House of Lords in G. and C. Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Company Limited(19) already referred to. I see no reason whatsoever why this rule should not be followed here. The jurisdiction of the Courts in Oudh is defined by the provisions of section 3 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, and in the absence of any legislative enactment or custom to the contrary, the Courts are empowered to act according to "justice, equity and good conscience." Such of the rules of English Law as are not either technical in their origin, or peculiar to the customs, traditions and habits of the people of England have been invariably followed in this country as rules of 'justice, equity and good conscience.' Varden Seth Ram v. Luckpathy Roujee Lallah Bunhah Lal (19). In the case of Waghela Rojsanji v. Shekh Masludin (20) Lord Hobhouse said that "'Equity and good conscience' had been generally interpreted to mean the rules of English Law if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances." See also Govindan Nair v. Achuthamenon (21) and Kripasindhu v. Ananda Sundari (22). In the case of Rambux Chittangeo v. Madhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (23) Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. pointed out that in cases where rights of parties are determined according to the principles of justice and equity this must be done without any distinction between the partial justice which is administered in the Court of Law and the more full and complete justice for which it is frequently necessary to seek the assistance of a Court of Equity as in England. See also to the same effect the decision of Jenkins, C. J., in Debnarain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (24) and Bireswar Ghose v. Panchcouri Ghose (25).

In America, the rule 'Once a mortgage always a mortgage' seems to have been uniformly upheld. The Ruling Case of Howard v. Harris (17) "heads a long list of cases in 5 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, section 1193." "It matters not how strongly the parties may express their agreement that there shall be no redemption ; the intent being contrary to the rules of equity it cannot be carried into effect. Bayley v. Bayley (26).

Article 2078 of the French Code, quoted in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, Vol. I is as follows. "The creditor cannot, in default of payment, dispose of the pledge saving to him the power of procuring an order of the Court that such pledge shall continue with him in payment and up to its due amount according to an estimate made by competent persons, or that it shall be sold by auction. Every clause which shall authorise the creditor to appropriate the pledge to himself, or to dispose thereof without the above-mentioned formalities is void."

As regards the Hindu Law in its advanced stage it may safely be said that the original text of Manu 'after no length of time neither an assignment, nor a sale of the pledge, can be made' has survived in spirit if not in letter, the attempts of successive commentators to interpret it in diverse ways. "But although foreclosure was allowed the idea that time is not of the essence of the contract in a mortgage was quite familiar to our law. Thus Vrihaspati says 'After the time for payment had passed and when interest ceases on becoming equal to the principal, the creditor shall be owner of the pledge ; but the debtor has a right to redeem it before ten days have elapsed.' Similarly, Vyasa says :—"Gold being doubled and the stipulated period having expired, the creditor becomes owner of the pledge after the lapse of fourteen days." And Colebrooke, no mean authority, is of opinion that time is not of the essence of the contract of mortgage in Hindu Law and the texts cited by him fully support the proposition." Ghose's Law of Mortgage, fifth edition, Vol. I, p. 56.

To these quotations I will add one short passage from Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. I, section 80, p. 101, 4th edition, Madras.

"By acceptation, the sense of the word bandha is a thing remaining in the creditor's possession by an agreement on the part of the debtor in this form. "This chattel shall remain in thy possession so long as I do not repay thy money." This clearly brings into relief the fundamental notion that the transfer of property in a real transaction of mortgage is only a security for the repayment of the loan. The decision of Westropp, C J., in the case of Bapuji Apaji v. Senavaraji Marvadi (27) is highly instructive on this point.

The Muhammadan Law is perfectly clear in this respect. The following passages taken from Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. IV, Book XLVIII of Rahn, or Pawn, show that the object of a transaction of Rahn is merely to furnish security for the repayment of the loan.

'Definition of Rahn.— Rahn literally signifies to detain a thing on any account whatever. In the language of the Law it means the detention of a thing on account of claim which may be answered by means of that thing, as in the case of debt.'

"As, moreover, the pawnee is entitled to take possession of the pledge as a security for his claim and to detain it (for Rahn, in its literal sense, signified detention), it necessarily follows that a pledge is not a trust.

"It is lawful for the receiver of a pledge to make a demand of his debt and even to imprison the pawnor in case of refusal, because the claim still exists after the receipt of the pledge which is not considered as a fulfilment, but merely as a preservative of it."

"Whenever a pawnee demands payment of his debt, it is requisite that the Kazee order him first to produce the pledge; because as he possesses that for the purpose of obtaining payment, it is not lawful for him to take his due at the same time that he retains possession of the pledge which he holds as a security ; since if in such case, the pledge were to perish in his hands, a double payment would be induced, which is inadmissible. And when the pawnee shall have produced the pledge; the Kazee must order the depositor first to discharge the debt, in order to ascertain the panee's right in the same manner, as the right of the pawnor is ascertained, to the end that both may be placed upon an equal footing ; as in the case of bargains, where the seller having produced the goods, the buyer then lays down the purchase money :

The well-known transaction of bai-bil-wafa is in its ostensible form a sale with an option of repurchase but in substance is a mortgage, the design being to escape the sin of levying interest (See Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. III and Baillie's Mohammadan Law of sale, quoted in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, pp. 63-65). The Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, placed bai-bil-wafa on a strict footing of mortgage in the Provinces of Bengal, Behar, Orissa and Benares by giving the mortgagor the right to redeem in spite of the contract to the contrary. The effect of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, is the same. See the Privy Council decision in Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (28).

There is yet another broad and simple ground on which a decision in favour of the appellant in this case may be based. The deed in suit provides that the mortgagor will have the right to redeem with a stipulation that he shall not do so for fifty years. This is his contractual right separate from and independent of his equitable right or the right in law to redeem. But the effect of the other clauses of the deed is, as shown before, to take away that contractual right if the covenant as to the postponement of the exercise of that right for fifty years is given effect to. The covenant is, therefore, repugnant to or inconsistent with the contractual right to redeem. It must, therefore, be held to be void for repugnancy. The conclusion is supported by the illuminating and instructive judgment, if I may respectfully say so, of Lord Parker in G. and C. Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Company Limited (12) already referred to.

It now remains to consider the argument of the learned Advocate for the respondent founded on the expression 'at any time after the principal money has become payable,' occurring in section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The argument comes to this that the time when the mortgage-money becomes payable must be determined in all cases in accordance with the letter of the contract. The argument when carried to its legical end leads to absurd results. Suppose a deed of mortgage expressly provides that, redemption shall never take place and that the mortgagee, on the other hand, shall not be entitled to recall the mortgage money. It follows that, the mortgage money shall never 'become payable.' It further follows that no suit for redemption will ever lie under section 60. This conclusion is obviously untenable. Instances may be multiplied. The object of section 60 is to legalise the equitable right to redeem and permit redemption even when the right is expressly abandoned or even postponed by the contract of mortgage which is the subject matter of a suit for redemption. This proposition is fully established by the recent decision of the Privy Council in the case of Mohammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal (29).

The mortgage money benomes payable as soon as the mortgagor execrcises his right to redeem or is entitled to redeem. The question as to when a mortgagor is entitled to redeem must be answered with reference to the terms of the contract as a whole, other relevant circumstances, and the rules of law and equity, applicable to the particular case. In interpreting the expression 'where a mortgagor is entitled to redeem' in section 15 of the Conveyancing Act 1881 (44-45 Vict. C. 41). Jessel, M. R. made the following observations:—"So that the words 'where a mortgagor is entitled to redeem really include every mortgagor, except a mortgagor who is precluded by some special term in his mortgage-deed from redeeming within a specified time. For although the law will not allow a mortgagor to be precluded from redeeming altogether, yet he may be precluded from redeeming for a fixed period, such as five or seven years.' Teevan v. Smith (30), Now in the case before me I have already held that the combined effect of the stipulation preventing the mortgagor from redeeming for the long period of fifty years and other stipulations in the deed of mortgage is to preclude the mortgagor from redeeming altogether I have already shown that such an effect must be negatived and this view is further supported by the dictum of Jessel, M. R just now quoted. It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem at any time consistent with the usufructuary nature of the mortgage in suit on payment of what is due to the mortgagee on the date of redemption. In the case of Biggs v. Hoddinott (31) the mortgage was for a term of five years. The action was brought by the mortgagee on a covenant contained in the deed of mortgage for an injunction and damages against the mortgagors. The mortgagors took out an originating summons against the mortgagee to compel redemption. Romer, J. dismissed this summons. The grounds of decision were more than one, some of which would clearly fall in line with a case of undue influence under the provisions of section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, but which the learned Judge held was not made out, as I have already held in the present case. There is one ground, however, which supports the view I am taking here. At the beginning of his judgment, the learned Judge quoted the passage which I have given above from the judgment of Jessel, M. R., in the case of Teevan v. Smith (30), i.e., 'although the law will not allow a mortgagor to be precluded from redeeming for a fixed period, such as five or seven years' and at the end of his judgment on this point observed as follows:

'It seems to me, therefore, that looking at the mortgage as a whole, there is nothing here which in my opinion, would prevent this proviso precluding the redemption for five years being enforced by the Court. (The italics are mine). When I look at the mortgage before me as a whole I am driven to the conclusion that the covenant precluding the mortgagor from redeeming for fifty years breaks the rule of law with which the judgment of Romer, J. opens, and therefore must not be enforced by the Court. In the case of Morgan v. Jeffreys (32) the mortgagor was precluded from redeeming for twenty eight years without the consent of the mortgagor, Joice, J., set aside the stipulation as being unreasonable. The exact ground of decision is not much to the point, in the present case, but his reasoning at pp. 626-27 with reference to a large number of precedents amply supports my view in this case. The case of Genu Tukaran Tapkir v. Narayan (4) was decided on the ground that the existence of the trees on the mortgaged property was the essence of the contract of mortgage and therefore the covenant postponing redemption till the trees existed was not a clog. The learned Chief Justice recognised that certain general principles of English Law relating to the question before him could be applicable to cases in India. He, however, did not state any such principles and decided the case upon the terms of sections 60 and 61 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, as he interpreted them. The case is no authority, one way or the other, on the lines on which the present judgment proceeds.

It was lastly suggested rather than argued that the relief against the term of fifty years is barred by three years' rule of limitation. The answer to this is given in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jafri Begum v. Syed Ali Raza (33). The present suit is not in spite of the mortgage but under it, one of the covenants of which is void in law.

I therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and as the case has been decided on a preliminary point I send it back to the lower Court for decision according to law. The appellant will get his costs hitherto incurred in both the Courts from the respondent, who will bear his own costs.

JUDGMENT.

Mulick, J.—This is an appeal preferred by Syed Jawad Hussain against an order by the Subordinate Judge of Gaya refusing to set aside a sale held on the 25th April 1919. The application to set aside the sale was made on the 12th May 1919 and was finally disposed of by a judgment dated the 28th June of that year.

The first ground taken before us is, that the sale-proclamation was irregular in so far as it notified a charge of Rs. 2,835-9-1 due under a rent-decree dated the 14th August 1916 on account of previous arrears and also a charge of Rs. 8,492-0-6 on account of rent due from the Bhado kist of the year 1322 to the year 1325 f. s. for which a suit was then pending in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Gaya.

It is contended that under the Bengal Tenancy Act the arrears for the years in suit were the only charge for which the tenure could have been brought to sale and that the sale-proclamation was irregular in so far as it suggested that the tenure was liable to satisfy the demands due against it in respect of arrears which had accrued previous to the suit or between the date of the suit and the date of the sale. It is urged that in consequence of this irregularity the price fetched at the sale was considerably below the true value and that the appellant is entitled to a reversal of the sale.

I think it must be admitted that this complaint is well founded. The case of Faez Rahaman v. Ramsukh Bajpai (1) is authority for the proposition that the landlord cannot sue the auction-purchaser for any rent which accrued before the date of his auction-purchase and that the only person liable to pay that rent is the tenant judgment-debtor. But that case did not decide what would be the equities between the landlord and the auction-purchaser if the latter does in fact buy subject to such a charge. That point came up for decision in a later case namely, Haradhan Chattoraj v. Kartik Chandra (2), and it was there held that if the auction-purchaser purchases a tenure sold subject to prior charges for rent he cannot in a subsequent suit by the landlord be heard to repudiate the liability created by his act. A question was raised in that case whether it was at all legal to sell the tenure subject to a liability for past arrears but upon that point the learned Judges did not express any opinion and it was not decided whether the judgment-debtor could ask for the reversal of the sale on the ground of material irregularity and substantial loss. Here that ground is now taken by Mr. Kulwant Sahai on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

In my opinion the plea of irregularity must be accepted. The law does not hold the auction-purchaser liable to pay off antecedent arrears of rent and therefore any statement in the sale proclamation implying such a liability was clearly wrong. The judgment-debtor is entitled to have the sale set aside if he can prove that the price fetched at the sale was an adequate price taking into account the charges notified in the proclamation.

Now in this case the value of the property as disclosed by the evidence does not appear to be anything near the sum of Rs. 60,000 which is the figure put upon it by the appellant. The learned Judge in the sale proclamation has after enquiry entered the value at Rs. 33,387. He has also shown in the sale-proclamation the valuation put by the decree-holder which was Rs. 5,000 but in the circumstances I do not think this was an irregularity. The evidence now given before us in support of the valuation at Rs. 60,000 consists of certain Jamabandi papers for the years 1323, 1324 and 1325 F. S. and of certain survey khatians showing that the Nakdi or cash rental of the tenure amounted to Rs. 3,129 per annum. It is contended that the average annual income from the property both from haoli and nakdi rents amounted to Rs. 4,897, exclusive of the income from three mauzas Domia, Sheimbigh and Nima. It is contended that the statement of Amir Hasan in a previous case and the survey khatian show that the cash rental from these villages in respect of appellant's share amounts to Rs. 506. Adding this amount to the annual rental mentioned above, the total rental of the tenure would come roughly to Rs. 5,402 and after making deductions for Mokarrari rents, cesses and collection charges, it is estimated by the appellant that his net annual income from the property was Rs. 2,698. At 20 years purchase the capitalised value would be Rs. 54,000; and adding to that a sum of Rs. 1,800 which is estimated to be the value of the 72 acres of bhaoli lands in mauza Nimia, the total valuation of the tenure would come to very nearly Rs. 56,000. In support of this valuation oral evidence is given by the Patwari of the appellant and a deposition is also filed which was taken from the present auction-purchaser in a previous case and in which he appears to have made various admissions leading to the inference, that the value of his property was about Rs. 60,000.

Now the learned Subordinate Judge has gone into all the evidence given on the point of valuation and he has recorded his deliberate opinion that the claim is exaggerated. He does not rely upon the Jamabandis because they are not the originals, and he thinks that having regard to the fact that the sale was a forced sale and making allowance for the charges notified in the sale proclamation he comes to the conclusion that the sum of Rs. 15,600 which was fetched at the auction was a fair price under the circumstances. It is to be remembered that the auction-purchaser has undertaken liability to discharge the demands for anterior rents amounting to a sum of Rs. 12,000 odd, and if this demand is added to the sale price, the total comes to a little over Rs. 27,000. Having regard to the fact that the sale was held in execution of the Civil Court decree and to the fact that the property is situated at a considerable distance in a jungly tract, I cannot say that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is incorrect. Moreover looking at bid sheet it does not appear that there was any paucity of bidders. The sale occupied part of one day and was adjourned till the following day, and excluding the auction-purchaser there were five other bidders who appear to have kept up a spirited contest. Therefore, the appellant fails upon the preliminary condition which it is necessary for him to establish. He has not proved satisfactorily that the purchase price was inadequate.

Then as regards the question of service of notice and sale proclamation which is the other irregularity alleged, the auction-purchaser has examined three witnesses, namely, the Civil Court peon, the identifier and a man who seems to be the servant of the auction purchaser. The sale proclamations had to be served in 19 villages and between the report submitted by the Civil Court peon and the evidence given by him and by the identifier in Court, there are undoubted discrepancies. It is contended that these discrepancies are fatal and point to the inference that no service took place as alleged on the 12th and 13th March, but that a service return was manufactured by the peon after he returned to head quarters and that there has been deliberate fraud by suppression of the necessary notices. The Subordinate Judge, however, records that he was thoroughly satisfied that the peon and the two witnesses, who corroborated him, were witnesses of truth. Having regard to the fact that the witnesses were deposing in regard to matters that took place several months before, the discrepancies in my opinion do not necessarily indicate that the peon has manufactured a false return. He does not appear to have had any interest in deposing falsely in this case and the probabilities are that if it had been the intention of the decree-holder to sell the appellant's tenure by suppressing the necessary proclamations and notices, he would have taken good care to make a more complete and consistent case in Court in regard to this matter. The result, therefore, is that the irregularities complained of in the matter of service of sale notices and proclamations have not been proved.

There was, however, an irregularity in the frame of the sale proclamation, but as substantial loss has not been established the appeal must fail.

It is said that the decree-holders have drawn out a sum of Rs. 3,000 out of the surplus sale proceeds in the hands of the Court in satisfaction of the decree-holders' demands for previous years. It does not, however, seem quite clear from the order sheet whether this is a fact. The auction-purchaser admits that a decree has been passed against him making him liable to pay to the landlord the sum of Rs. 12,000 odd due on account of previous arrears. So far, therefore, as the judgment-debtor-appellant is concerned he is in my opinion relieved from the liability to pay that sum, and if it is a fact that the decree-holder has in addition to the claim under this decree realised a sum of Rs. 3,000 from the surplus sale proceeds which really belongs to the judgment-debtor, then the judgment-debtor is entitled to proceed against the decree-holder for that sum elsewhere. So far as this appeal (M. A. No. 190 of 1919) is concerned, I do not think there is any ground shown for interfering with the orders of the lower Court. The appeal is dismissed with costs which will be payable to the auction-purchaser-respondent only.

As regards appeal No. 81 of 1919, the point taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant, namely, that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in deciding that the decree was a rent decree and that the execution would proceed in accordance with provisions of Chapter XIV of the Tenancy Act has not been pressed. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed without costs.

Bucknill, J.—I entirely agree with what has been said by my learned colleague. I should like, however, to point out that I wish to guard myself from being understood to say that in the present state of authority it has been clearly held that it is illegal to introduce into the conditions of a sale of this character an instruction that the sale takes place in execution of the decree but subject to other encumbrances whether relative to arrears of rent or otherwise. That such a statement may be irregular under certain circumstances when the other charges specified relate to arrears of rent I think there can be little doubt but that it is of such a character that the whole must be regarded as voidable or that it ipso facto vitiates the sale is not a proposition to which I must be taken to defer.

As has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Mullick, it may very well be that where the effect of the introduction of the statement of the existence of prior encumbrances is such as to affect adversely the proper position of the judgment-debtor it may be the proper and open course for him to apply to this Court in order that the sale may be set aside.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the question we have to decide is whether the suit of the plaintiffs should stand dismissed as ordered by the lower Appellate Court or whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a conditional decree for the setting aside of the sale complained of and for the return of the property.

The plaintiffs are the sons of Dunger Mal who, it is alleged, sold certain joint family property on the 23rd of December 1902 to the first defendant Kanhaiya Lal. The property which was sold consisted of a moiety share in a 6 biswa 5 biswansi share situated in a village called Daulatpur, entered in the khewat as No. 1. Another item which was sold at the same time consisted of a proportionate share in 51 bighas odd entered in khewat as No. 3 of the same village. This latter item appears to be a share in the "Shamilat Deh."

The suit was brought in the year 1918 by the two plaintiffs one of whom Nathu Ram had just attained majority, the second plaintiff in the case, Shib Shanker, was still a minor at the time the plaint was filed. There were the usual allegations in the plaint to the effect that the sale had been made without any legal necessity and for the purpose of procuring funds for the plaintiffs' father who was addicted to gambling and other vices.

The Court of first instance found that the defendant Kanhaiya Lal had failed to prove that the sale was for legal necessity. It accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim. In appeal the finding of the Judge was that the defendant had made a proper enquiry and that there was legal necessity for the sale. The result was that he dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs.

In appeal the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is attacked on the ground that there is no evidence on the record to prove that the entire sum of Rs. 3,500 was given to Dunger Mal for purposes which were legally necessary. On the contrary it is argued that on the finding come to by the learned Judge there was legal necessity for only Rs. 3,000 out of Rs. 3,500.

It appears that prior to the date of the sale Dunger Mal the father of the plaintiffs had executed two promissory-notes in favour of one Kewal Ram and that the property now in dispute was sold for the purpose of discharging those debts. There is evidence to show that at the time the deed was registered Kewal Ram was paid a sum of at least Rs. 3,000. In his evidence given before the Court of first instance the first defendant stated that he also paid in addition another sum of Rs. 40 or Rs. 50. Beyond this there is no other evidence to which we have been referred by either party, and it is, therefore, argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that in these circumstances they are entitled to have the sale set aside on condition of their paying to the defendant-vendee a sum of Rs. 3,000. On the other hand, the argument has been that, inasmuch as the bulk of the purchase-money is found to have been paid for, and applied to, the discharge of debts which were legally binding, the sale ought to stand and the plaintiffs' claim ought to be dismissed.

The appellants' learned Counsel relies on two cases of this Court reported in Gobind Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1) and Ram Dei Kunwar v. Abu Jafar (2) and certainly those cases are in favour of this contention.

It is difficult to decide cases of this nature upon any fixed principle. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that in cases where a father has sold ancestral property for the discharge of his debts, if the application of the bulk of the proceeds has been satisfactorily accounted for, the fact that a small part is not accounted for will not invalidate the sale Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall. (3) That principle has been followed in numerous cases. The difficulty always is to ascertain what amount in cases like this is the "bulk" of the purchase-money. In one of the Allahabad cases to which we have been referred it was found that out of the total consideration of Rs. 3,299-8-0 a sum of Rs. 2,923-8-0 represented money which had been applied for purposes of legal necessity and the plaintiffs in that case were given a decree for the recovery of the property upon payment of the latter sum. Similarly in the other Allahabad case where it was found that Rs. 2,550 out of the total consideration of Rs. 2,995 represented money taken for legal necessity, a conditional decree for setting aside the sale was passed on payment of the sum of Rs. 2,550. We have, therefore, to deal with each case on its merits and to decide whether in a particular instance, the amount for which the legal necessity has not been proved, is, with regard to the whole consideration, what may be described as a trifling sum. In the present case it is shown that out of Rs. 3,500 only Rs. 3,000 represented money which was taken for legal necessity. We should find it difficult, having regard to the decisions of this Court, to hold that Rs. 500 is in this instance a trifling amount and we think, therefore, that we ought to follow the line which was taken in the two Allahabad cases above referred to.

(1) 25 A. 330 ; A. W. N. (1903) 57.
(2) 27 A. 494 ; A. W. N. (1905) 68.
(3) 1 I. A. 321; 14 B L. R. 187; 22 W. R. 56; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 380 (P. C.).

The result, therefore, is that we allow the appeal and give the plaintiffs a conditional decree by which they will be entitled on payment of Rs. 3,000 within six months from the date of this Court's decree, to have the sale set aside and the property returned by the defendant Kanhaiya Lal. If they fail to deposit this sum of Rs. 3,000 in Court within the period so limited their suit will stand dismissed. Considering the long interval that has elapsed since the date of the sale we think that as regards costs the proper order will be to direct the parties to bear their own costs in all three Courts.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar, T. S. Raghunatha Rao and V. Viyanna, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—Suit by the plaintiff to recover (1) a sum of Rs. 2,500 deposited with 1st defendant on 6th July 1917 and (2) sum of Rs. 350 payable to plaintiff for money paid for the 1st defendant. The defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are the sons of 1st defendant who formed with him, members of a joint family up to 1918. In that year a suit was filed by the present 2nd defendant against his father and brothers for partition. No written statement was filed and the suit was compromised and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise on 23rd January 1920. Under the compromise, provision was made for paying off most of the debts contracted by the 1st defendant but not the suit debt. No specific properties were allotted to the 1st defendant and it was arranged that a maintenance of Rs. 30 should be paid to him every month. The present suit was filed on 6th July 1920 and the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are sought to be made liable with reference to the shares in their hands of what had been prior to 1920, joint family property. The defendants denied the genuineness of the debts. The District Judge found that the debts were true. He had doubts about the bona fides of the partition, but on the ground that under the compromise it was agreed that all the debts of the 1st defendant were agreed to be paid by all the defendants, decreed the suit. All the defendants appealed. The 1st defendant died, during the pendency of the appeal. With the construction of the terms of the compromise by the District Judge, we are not able to agree.

RAMACHANDRA JAGANNATHA RAO v. VISWESAN

The other appellants do not question the correctness of the finding that the debts are true. Nor do they say that the debts are illegal or immoral. They contend that the sons are not liable for the father's debt (not charged on the property) after partition and rely on Kurri Venkata Reddi v. Chelluri Satyanarayanamurthy (1) following Peda Venkamma v. Srinivasa Dikshatulu (2). The respondent replies that the partition is not bona fide within the meaning of the exception recognised in these cases and if the partition is held bona fide he contends that Kurri Venkata Reddi v. Chelluri Satyanarayanamurthi (1) is incorrectly decided and as to Vekamma v. Sreenivasa Dikshatulu (2), while conceding that the actual decision is correct, in so far as it rests on any ground other than the ground that the pro-note in that case was renewed by the father after partition, such ground is not correctly decided.

We are of opinion that the partition by the decree of 1920 was bona fide in the sense that the intention was to really divide the status of the parties ; it is probably also bona fide though the matter has not been fully gone into, in the sense that there has been no unequal allotment of properties if we regard all the debts as debts of 1st defendant only i. e, that this share minus all the debts would, have been much less than what he actually got, viz, annuity of Rs. 360 and we come to this conclusion in spite of the fact that there has been no division by metes and bounds and the decision in Appapillai v. Rangapillai (3) is doubtful, if it meant to decide that the family continues joint in cases where there is a relinquishment by the father subject to a maintenance. It is not bona fide only in the sense, that provision was not made for all the debts of 1st defendant not illegal or immoral (Ghose's Hindu Law, Vol. 1, p. 438) out of the whole joint family properties from which they would have been recoverable if there had been no partition and debts like the plaintiff's will defeated if it is held that the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are not liable. As it is doubtful whether the exception mentioned in the cases uses the expression 'bona fide' in this sense, we had to consider the question of the correctness of the decisions relied on.

It may be that, under the primitive Hindu Law, a son is under a pious duty to discharge his father's debts irrespective of the devolution, on him, of any kind of property. But the decisions have established the principle that a son is not liable unless the self-acquired property of the father or property which had been joint between them has devolved upon the son. For the purposes of this case, it is not necessary to go further behind the case of Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lall (4). At p. 331, their Lordships quote from Knight Bruce, L. J., in Hanuman Prasad Panday v. Musammat Babojee Minraj Koomaru (5).

" Unless the debt was of such a nature that it was not the duty of the son to pay it, the discharge of it even though it affected ancestral estate, would still be an act of pious duty in the son. By the Hindu Law the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt and not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired by the creator of the debt."

"That is an authority to show that ancestral property which descends to a father under the Mitakshara Law is not exempted from liability to pay his debts because a son is born to him. It would be a pious duty on the part of the son to pay his father's debts, and it being the pious duty of the son to pay his father's debts the ancestral property, in which the son as the son of his father acquired an interest by birth, is liable to the father's debts."

Effect was given to these observations, in Muddan Thakoor's case Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lal (4), in favour of a creditor in execution. While the Calcutta High Court gave full effect in a case from Bengal in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persaud Singh (6), the Madras High Court at first did not, on the ground that the decision in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lal (4) cannot apply to Madras where a member of a joint family has a right to alienate his share (unlike Bengal) and there is no need for the equitable right recognised in favour of the executing creditor in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lal (4). The creditor carried the case to the Privy Council Muttayan Chetti v. Vira Pandia Chinnatambiar, Zamindar of Sivagiri (7). Meanwhile a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappu Aiyangar (8), (Muthusawmy Aiyar, J., who decided the earlier case and Innes, J., dissenting) held that the decision in Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lal (4) applied to Madras equally. The Privy Council in Muttayan Chetti v. Vira Pandia Chinnatambiar Zamindar of Sivagiri (7), while deciding the case on another point, pointed out that there was no ground for not applying the decision in Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lal (4) to Madras. In Ramasami Nadan v. Ulaganatha Goundan (9), a Full Bench held that the liability of the father and son was co-extensive and the cause of action against the son arose simultaneously with that against the father though it must be added that the son cannot be sued alone during the father's life. Periasami Mudaliar v. Seetharama Chettiar (10). In Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Aiyar (11) the question arose whether in execution of a decree obtained against the father alone, the share of the son in the joint family property allotted to him in a partition can be seized in execution. The District Judge (afterwards Miller, J.) held

"When the separation is before the suit as in this case, I think the creditor is bound to make parties all those whose interests he wishes to bind by his decree. The property is, from the date of separation, the son's property in which the father has no interest, and though the son may be liable to pay the debt, his liability must be enforced in a suit against himself."

Incidentally it may be observed that the son's share, even after partition may and is spoken of in this and other cases as ancestral property and even joint property (in the sense that it represents what had been joint property). It is, indeed, ancestral property in the hands of the son as against his own sons. The High Court said

"The principle upon which the son cannot object to ancestral property being seized in execution for an unsecured personal debt of the father is that the father, under the Hindu Law is entitled to sell on account of such debt the whole of the ancestral estate. This necessarily implies that at the time the property is seized, it remains the undivided estate of the father and son ..... Ergo, property taken by the son in partition cannot be seized on account of such unsecured personal debt of the father even though the debt had been incurred before the partition. Of course if the partition had been made with a view to defraud or delay creditors it would be otherwise, but no such case is made out here."

This is the first case which considered the effect of a partition.

The whole decision and the exception in case of a Mala fide partition relate to the seizure in execution of a decree to which the son was not a party. In Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetty (12) the sons were parties to the suit and it was held (Bhashyam Aiyengar, J. being one of the judges) that the son was liable to the extent of the family property which had come to him under the partition. Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Aiyar (11) was thus distinguished at p. 557,

"In that case the suit was brought after partition against the father alone and the point decided was that property taken by a son under a partition effected before the suit could not be seized in execution of a decree obtained against the father only in such suit. The case turned on the plaintiff's rights in execution not as here on the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to judgment as against the son."

The next case is Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13) (Wallis, C. J. and Oldfield, J.) In my opinion the reasoning in this case is conclusive against the appellants. The learned Judges say

"I think it is also clear that plaintiff as a Hindu son is liable for the debt to the extent of the joint family property which came to his hands at partition (Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetty) (12)."

They quote the sentence I already quoted from Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Aiyar (11) and say,

"This necessarily implies that at the time the property is attached, it remains the undivided property of the father and son. The same view has been taken under very similar circumstances (Miller and Krishnaswamy Aiyar, JJ., in Lakshmi Chettiar v. Govindarajalu Naidu (14). See also Rathna Naidu v. Aiyana Chariar (15)." " ..... At the date of execution the property now in question had ceased to be joint family property and the cases referred to on the other side are cases in which the property remained joint and so subject to alienation by the father in satisfaction of the debt."

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the case in Rathna Naidu v. Aiyana Chariar (15) is one where the father mortgaged his son's share after partition. Obviously he has no such power and the case cannot help the point under discussion. Now comes the case in Pedda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (2). The point elaborately argued in that case and also elaborately discussed is whether Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (16) effected any change in the law relating to the son's liability, a point which, after giving rise to Full Bench decisions in this Court is set at rest by Lord Dunedin's judgment in Raja Bahadur Raja Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (17) (a judgment of a Full Board of the Privy Council); while deciding that it did not, Wallis, C. J., said

"This Court has held in a series of cases that as the effect of partition is to put an end to the father's right to sell the son's share for an antecedent debt, it also puts an end to the creditor's right to bring the son's share to sale during his life-time at any rate when the partition has not been effected to defeat and delay creditors : Krishnaswami v. Ramasami (11). Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13).

Having regard to the expression "to bring the son's share to sale" and to the fact that Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13) was cited in support of his Lordship's proposition and without any qualification or disapproval, it is impossible to say, solely because, lower down the page his Lordship used the expression "to say nothing of the further ground etc," that his Lordship impliedly intended to overrule his own opinion in Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13) following Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (12). Kumaraswamy Sastri, J., begins by saying he agrees with the judgment of the Chief Justice on the narrower ground " that a son is not after partition liable to be proceeded against in respect of a personal debt incurred by the father before partition." If, "proceeded against" meant "proceeded against in execution" there is no difficulty in accepting the statement, but if it meant as it was intended to mean "proceeded against in suit" it is not justified, I say with great deference to my learned brother, by Wallis, C. J.'s expression "to say nothing of the further ground" and by imputing to it a significance inconsistent with the earlier statement of the law following Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13). His Lordship then reviews the cases at p. 143. It is difficult to see how it can be said that Rathna Naidu v. Aiyana Chariar (15) followed Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Aiyar (11). He then distinguishes Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (12) by saying that "that debt sued on arose out of a joint family business carried on by the father and son before partition and the liability of the son rested... ...on contract entered into in respect of a joint family trade to the extent of the joint family assets etc. I am not able to follow the distinction. If the son was a party to the contract, he is liable not as to the joint family property but even as to his self-acquired property and unless he is a minor, he is liable to be arrested, in other words, he is personally liable and there is no question of Hindu Law in the case. If he was not a party, this liability rests only on the Hindu Law relating to son's liability on the contracts of a father or manager. Suppose the family trade is not ancestral trade but a new trade started by the father and cannot, therefore, be said to be for justifiable necessity, can it be said that Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (12), does not apply to such a case? No such distinction was made in Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13), which is not the case of a family trade. He then refers to the renewal of the note by the father. In my opinion the case in Peda Venkamma v. Sreenivasa Dikshatulu (2) is correctly decided so far as it rests on the ground that the note sued on was renewed by the father after partition. Wallis, C. J., did not intend to overrule Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13) and Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (12), or even to distinguish Krishnasami Konan v. Ramasami Aiyar (11) in the manner suggested by Kumaraswami Sastri, J. In these circumstances, we cannot accept the decision in Kurri Venkata Reddi v. Chelluri Satyanarayanamurthi (1) as binding on us as it rests solely on the ground that the matter was concluded by Venkamma v. Sreenivasa Dikshatulu (2). Our brother Oldfield, J., who was also a party to Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13), made no reference to it in the later case and gave no additional reasons. Abdur Rahim, J., simply said that all the cases were considered in Venkamma v. Sreenivasa Dikshatulu (2). We are also referred to an unreported decision in A. S. No. 419 of 1918 by Abdur Rahim and Phillips, JJ. It purports to follow Venkamma v. Sreenivasa Dikshatulu, (2) and concurs with Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in his distinction of Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (12). I have already dealt with this. This case does not add to the other cases. We are of opinion that Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetti (12) and Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubba Rao (13) were not overruled and following them, we hold that a son in possession of property which had been joint and which fell to his share in partition is liable in a suit brought after partition (impleading the son also) for the father's debts incurred before the partition and not illegal and immoral (See also Stranger's Hindu Law, Vol. 1, p. 191).

We do not think it necessary to refer the question to a Full Bench. On this ground, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Jackson, J.—I agree.

The point is correctly appreciated in Dr. Gour's Hindu Code, section 118, paragraph 311 with reference to Ramachandra v. Kondayya (12) and Kameswaramma v. Venkatasubha Rao (13).

"On separation the son is liable for debts incurred before partition."

But in Trevelyan's Hindu Law, Edition 2, p. 308 the point is not stated so clearly.

"A creditor cannot enforce the payment of the debt of the father against property which has been allotted on partition to the son."

This would be correct if "enforce in execution" is meant and not correct if it also includes 'enforce by suit.'

In Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, p. 411 it is stated

"Where the son is joined in a suit against the father, this is for the purpose of enabling the Court to exercise the power of the father to sell family property in discharge of his debts not being illegal and immoral and to prevent the son from questioning the nature of the debt in execution proceedings against the property. After partition, of course, the son holds the share which is allotted to him free from any such liability."

If " any such liability " be taken to mean " attachment in execution proceedings " the passage presents no difficulty but if the words mean " free from any liability for such debts" the statement seems to go too far.

A claim petition under O. XXI r 63 of the Civil Procedure Code was withdrawn and the Court endorsed on the petition, "not pressed, dismissed":—

Held, That the order was not one under O. XXI, r. 63 and the claimant was not bound to bring a suit within a year under the procedure laid down under the Code.

In the case of the withdrawal of a petition, it is a mistake to endorse on it that it is dismissed. The proper endorsement to make is that it is withdrawn. (p. 233, col. 2).

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 152 of 1919 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Razam in O. S. No. 23 of 1918.

Mr. K. N. Rajagopal Sastri, for Mr. R. Narasimham, for the Appellants.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point open to the appellant is that because the claim petition which the respondent presented in 1914 was marked by the District Munsif as " not pressed ; dismissed " and because no suit was consequently brought under the procedure laid down by the Code, the present suit is incompetent. The learned Judge has taken a broad view of the matter and has disposed of the case by ascertaining what really happened at the time. What took place was that the claimant wished to abandon his claim and to have it treated as if it never had been made. The only argument suggested against that is that where a litigant abandons his claim and withdraws it as if it never had been made and the Judge by endorsement on the papers dismissed it, the litigant is precluded from taking the other course of bringing a suit. This argument appears to be, to say the least, highly technical and in our opinion it would be pernicious not to allow a litigant who has taken what he is satisfied is a mistaken step to correct that step before any thing is done which could enure to the prejudice of the other side. In this case there is nothing of the kind. There was no question of default. It has always been my opinion that in the case of the withdrawal of a petition, it is a mistake of the Judge to endorse on it "dismissed" and that it is quite sufficient to record on it "withdrawn." That is the proper endorsement that ought to have been made in this case. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge of Khandesh, in Appeal No. 217 of 1920, reversing the decree passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Civil Suit No. 75 of 1919.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The few facts which have given rise to this appeal are these. One Piraji died leaving two widows Deoba and Dhuma. Deoba had a daughter named Chindhi. On April 16, 1911, Deoba and Dhuma made a gift of the property in suit in favour of Chindhi. Deoba died on November 10, 1918, and the next day Chindhi died. The present suit was filed by Dhuma to recover possession of the property which was gifted by her and Deoba to Chindhi. Defendant who is the daughter of Chindhi claims to be entitled to Chindhi's interest. The Trial Court held the gift to be invalid and decreed the plaintiff's claim for possession. The lower Appellate Court decreed possession of a moiety in favour of the plaintiff on the footing that Dhuma was entitled to a moiety of the property in respect of which Deoba had an interest during her life-time, that interest having come to an end on her death. In effect a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff on the footing that she was the heir after Deoba's death in respect of the share of Deoba in this property.

The defendants have appealed from this decree, and in support of the appeal it is urged that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is wrong inasmuch as the husband's estate was one estate jointly taken by the two widows, and that the gift would be operative during the life-time of either of the two widows. In other words, it is contended that both the widows being joint owners, on the death of Deoba, the other widow does not take anything as the heir of her co-widow but the estate survives to her. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the observations in Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Myna Baee (1) and Sri Gajapathi Nilamani Patta Maha Devi Garu Sri Gajapathi v. Radhamani Patta Maha Devi Garu (2).

It is clear that the present plaintiff could not claim any interest in the property given by way of gift by her and her co-widow to Chindhi during her life-time. So long as the present plaintiff is alive the interest which Chindhi got under the deed of gift would enure for the benefit of her heir after Chindhi's death. The gift was a joint gift by the two widows and would be operative during the life-time of either of the two widows in favour of the donee. There is no suggestion in the present case that there was any partition of the estate between the two widows, so that the question of inheritance to the co-widow's estate does not arise. Even assuming that such a question could arise or that there could be a severance of interests, it is by no means clear that it would make any difference in the result in a case where the original gift is by both the widows. It is however, unnecessary to consider that aspect of the case, as in the present case there is a joint gift and there is no suggestion of any severance of interest between the two co-widows, assuming without admitting that there could be such severance as would defeat the right of survivorship in the co-widow. The present suit for possession of either the whole or a moiety of the property given by way of gift to Chindhi is not sustainable, as the reversion to the husband's estate has not opened yet. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court reversed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

A finding based on evidence which is legally inadmissible can be challenged in second appeal.

Plaintiffs sued for possession of their share of their collateral W's estate alleging that the defendant S was only a step-son and, therefore, not entitled to succeed to the property. It appeared that in a previous suit brought on the death of another collateral, both the plaintiffs and S were also parties and no objection was taken by them that S was not the son of W ; in fact S was appointed by the plaintiffs and other collaterals as their Mukhtar to conduct the case :

Held, that under the circumstances they were even by their conduct estopped from challenging the paternity of S. (p. 236, col. 2).

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 15th December 1917, affirming that of Senior Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, dated 26th June 1917.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Alazira, a collateral of the plaintiffs Sham Singh and Khazand Singh died in 1890, and his land was mutated in favour of the first defendant Sundar Singh, who was stated to be his son. Wazira's widow Mt. Premon, the mother of Sundar Singh died in 1914. The plaintiffs sue for possession of their share of Wazira's estate alleging that Sundar Singh was only a step-son, and not a son of Wazira and was, therefore, not entitled to succeed to the property. The Courts below have given judgments in their favour and Sundar Singh has preferred a second appeal.

Khazan Singh, respondent, died during the pendency of the appeal, and the appellant had Mt. Kalu Kaur, whom he stated to be Khazan Singh's widow, impleaded in his place. As Sham Singh denied that Mt. Kalu Kaur was Khazan Singh's widow, the case was remanded for an enquiry on the point, and the finding of the Subordinate Judge is in her favour. We are informed that Sham Singh has instituted a suit in which he has disputed Mt. Kalu Kaur's right to succeed to the estate of Khazan Singh, and in view of this fact we refrain from deciding whether or not Mt. Kalu Kaur is the widow of Khazan Singh. For the purposes of this appeal we have only to determine whether she is the legal representative of Khazan Singh, and we hold that she is, inasmuch as she has intermeddled with his estate by getting his land mutated in her favour.

The lower Appellate Court's finding as to Sundar Singh, not being the son of Wazira is open to two objections. One is that, although Sundar Singh pruduced a large number of witnesses in support of his contention, the learned District Judge appears to have ignored their evidence. The other is that the learned Judge has relied on statements which were legally inadmisssible, having been made by witnesses in a case which was not inter partes. It is true that Counsel on both sides agreed that the depositions of the witnesses in that case should be treated as evidence in the present case; but statements which are not admissible in evidence cannot be rendered admissible by consent of parties. Ponnusami Pillay v. Singaram Pillay (1).

It is, however, unnecessary to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh finding on the evidence, as we think that the appeal must succeed on the ground that the plaintiffs have by their conduct precluded themselves from challenging Sundar Singh's right to succeed to Wazira s estate.

A collateral of the plaintiffs named Nand Singh died leaving a son Chhanga and a step-son Gurditta, and his property passed to them in equal shares in accordance with a will which he had made. On the death of Chhanga his land was mutated in favour of his collaterals. Two suits were then brought, one by Gurditta for the land left by Chhanga, and one by the collaterals for the land which on Nand Singh's death had devolved on Gurditta. Sundar Singh was one of the plaintiffs in the suit brought by the collaterals and one of the defendants in the other suit, and was described as the son of Wazira. Sham Singh and Khazan Singh were also among the parties, and Sundar Singh was appointed by them and the other collaterals as their Mukhtar to conduct the cases. In the suit brought by the collaterals Sham Singh and Khazan Singh were first impleaded as defendants, but afterwards on their application they were made plaintiffs Both cases were decided in 1910 against Gurditta, and Sundar Singh as the son of Wazira, succeeded to a share in Nand Singh's property along with the other collaterals. During the pendency of that litigation, Sham Singh and Khazan Singh never alleged that Sundar Singh was not a son on Wazira for objected to his joining in the suit against Gurditta and getting a share in the land, notwithstanding that in their application to be made plaintiffs they disputed the right of Chanda Singh, who was one of the plaintiffs, to succeed to the property on the ground of his having been adopted by one Budhu. The learned District Judge thinks that Sundar Singh was allowed to succeed to Chhanga's estate as the representative of his mother, but this view is quite untenable as Mt. Premon would have had no right to succeed to a share in the estate of a collateral of her husband. It is now in consequence of Mt. Premon's death more difficult for Sundar Singh to prove that he is the son of Wazira than it would have been before.

Chuha v. Jas Kaur (2) which has been cited on behalf of the appellant in support of the contention that the plaintiffs are estopped from disputing his title as the son of Wazira, is in point. In that case certain alienations were challenged and it was held that, as the alienee had been on various occasions recognised by the plaintiffs as the adopted son of the alienor, and had thus been led to imagine that his status was accepted by them, they were estopped from challenging the validity of the adoption.

The plaintiffs in the present case, having allowed Sundar Singh to join with them in the suit against Gurditta and to obtain a decree as the son of Wazira, without objecting that he was the son of Wazira and had no right to sue, are, we consider, now estopped from disputing his paternity.

We accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and dismiss the suit. As Khazan Singh's representative, Mt. Kalu Kaur, has not disputed the appellant's claim, we direct that Sham Singh alone shall bear the appellant's costs throughout.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 9, 13—Absence of party—*Ex-parte proceedings—Appearance of party—Application to set aside ex parte proceedings—Procedure.

Where a party is absent when a suit is called on for hearing but he appears in Court before the Court has risen for the day, then the Court should listen to his application for having his suit restored. If the opponent has left the Court, then the opponent should have notice, but if the opponent is present in Court, then it is the duty of the Judge to dispose of the application at once. The mere fact that a party or his pleader has arrived in Court after the proper hour when the suit has been disposed of ex parte, is no reason whatever why the suit should not be restored to the board and the case heard on its merits, the Court imposing such conditions on the defaulting party as might meet the justice of the case. (p. 237, col. 2).

Application from an order of the Judge of the Small Causes Court, Poona, rejecting a Miscellaneous Application praying for setting aside an ex-parte decree passed in Small Cause Suit No. 2141 of 1923.

Mr. K. V. Joshi, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner had filed Suit No. 1991 of 1923 in the Small Cause Court, Poona, against the opponent. Three days after, the opponent filed Suit No. 2141 against the petitioner in the same Court. Both suits were fixed for hearing on July 27, 1923. When the opponent's suit was called on neither the petitioner nor his pleader nor his Gumasta were present, and accordingly an ex parte decree was passed. The opponent and his pleader were still in Court to defend the petitioner's suit when the petitioner's Gumasta and his pleader arrived in Court and asked that the ex parte decree should be set aside and the suit restored to the file, upon which the Court said that the matter would be considered on a proper written application being made, and the petitioner's suit was adjourned. An application for setting aside the ex parte decree was made on July 28, 1923, and the matter was adjourned till August 30, when the Judge dismissed the application. We have more than once laid down that even supposing a party is absent when the suit is called on for hearing, if he appears in Court before the Court has risen for the day, then the Court should listen to his application for having his suit restored. If the opponent has left the Court, then the opponent should have notice, but if the opponent is present in Court, then it is the duty of the Judge to dispose of the application at once. The mere fact that a party or his pleader has arrived in Court after the proper hour when the suit has been disposed of ex parte, is no reason whatever why the suit should not be restored to the board and the case heard on its merits, the Court imposing such conditions on the defaulting party as might meet the justice of the case. We must not be taken as in any way encouraging unpunctuality. But in cases like this the dismissal of the suit is a penalty, out of all proportion to the offence.

The rule, therefore, will be made absolute and the case returned to the lower Court for disposal on the merits. No order as to costs of this application. The decree will be set aside and the costs in the lower Court will be costs in the cause.

Execution of decree—Arbitration—Award, decree based on—Arbitrator, whether entitled to receive payments of money on behalf of Court.

An arbitrator is appointed to arbitrate on matters in dispute, make his award and file it in Court. He is not such an officer of the Court as is authorised to receive on behalf of the Court deposits of money made by the parties in pursuance of the decree made on the award. Such a payment does not, therefore, amount to a payment into Court so as to satisfy the decree. (p. 238, col. 2).

Appeal from the decision of the District Court, Myaungmya, in Civil Execution No. 37 of 1923.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order for the sale of a rice mill in execution of a decree passed in terms of an award of three arbitrators appointed by Court in pending litigation. The decree was passed on the 29th September 1922. The decree-holder, who is the present respondent, applied for its execution on the 24th October 1922. On the 13th February 1923 the 1st appellant judgment-debtor, applied for stay of execution on the sole ground that there was a pending appeal against a mortgage decree on the said rice mill, the result of which appeal would affect the execution proceedings. The lower Court therefore ordered the sale of the mill subject to the mortgage-decree.

There are several grounds set out in the memorandum of appeal, but they fall under only two heads, namely, (1) that the order for the sale subject to the mortgage decree should not have been made while the appeal against the mortgage-decree was still pending and (2) that the judgment-debtors had already paid the decretal amount Rs. 16,000 to one of the arbitrators Mg. Ba Thaw, for payment into Court, and an enquiry should have been held into the matter and Mg. Ba Thaw called upon to deposit the amount in Court.

The appeal against the mortgage-decree has been dismissed, and the mortgage-decree on the mill stands. The first ground, therefore, fails.

The second ground was never raised by the judgment-debtors in the lower Court. It has been raised for the first time in this appeal. It is argued that Mg. Ba Thaw as an arbitrator was an officer of the Court and an enquiry should, therefore, be held into the alleged payment of the decretal amount to him. This payment was according to the appellants' own case made to Mg. Ba Thaw to be deposited in Court and he never did so. It was neither a payment into Court nor could it operate as such. An Arbitrator as such does not appear to be such an officer of the Court as is authorized to receive on behalf of the Court deposits of money made by the parties. He is appointed to arbitrate on matters in dispute, make his award and file it in Court. The affidavit of the first appellant does not show when it was that this payment was made to Mg. Ba Thaw. His learned Counsel Mr. Burjorjee stated in the course of his argument that it was made before the 14th July 1922, i.e., before the decree was passed on the award.

There was no deposit in Court when the decree was passed. The decree is still subsisting and stands unsatisfied. It should be enforced by execution of the decree. No enquiry is, therefore, necessary into the alleged payment.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Section 15 of the Limitation Act applies only to an absolute stay and not to a limited stay as would be ordered by a notice under O. XXI, r. 53 (1) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code. Such an order of stay does not prevent either the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment-debtor from seeking to execute the original decree and does not, therefore, interrupt the running of time against them. (p. 240, col. 1).

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 53 of 1922, confirming the order of the Subordinate Judge, Hubli, in Darkhast No. 189 of 1921.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaokar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This appeal raises an interesting point which does not seem to be covered by any distinct authority. The facts are somewhat confusing. One Basappa Murgeppa filed a suit against Chanbasappa and another in the Haveri Court, in the Dharwar District, in which the High Court passed a decree on April 2, 1914, directing that the plaintiff should recover from the defendant a certain sum of money and costs. That decree was transferred by the Haveri Court to the Hubli Court for execution. A darkhast was taken out on September 2, 1914, but before execution proceedings could go any further the decree was attached by a creditor of Murgeppa who had obtained a decree against Basappa in the Haveri Court on April 7, 1916. On August 8, 1916, the darkhast in the Haveri Court was disposed of as the plaintiff did not apply for transfer of execution to the Hubli Court as directed. But although the darkhast was disposed of the Haveri Court seems to have been of opinion that its attachment on the decree in the previous suit, which was then resting in the Hubli Court, continued.

On July 4, 1917, the Hubli Court wrote to the Haveri Court asking to be informed what had happened to the attachment, and, on July 10, 1917, the Haveri Court wrote to the Hubli Court that the attachment still continued, and that the amount of the decree should be payable to the decree-holder of the Haveri Court. On receipt of this reply the Hubli Court disposed of the darkhast on July 13, 1917.

Nothing further was done and the decree remained in the Hubli Court until January 21, 1921, when Murgeppa, the holder of the decree in the Haveri Court, informed the Haveri Court, that his debt was satisfied and his attachment should be removed, and accordingly the Haveri Court removed the attachment on Jaunary 21, 1921 and informed the Hubli Court accordingly.

Then the original decree-holder Basappa applied to the Hubli Court on March 4, 1921, to continue the execution of his decree. The Court informed him on February 5, 1921, that his darkhast was already disposed of and asked him to present another darkhast giving all the necessary information. Accordingly he filed the present darkhast on April 13, 1921.

The question of limitation was raised, but the Subordinate Judge held that the question of limitation did not arise and directed execution to proceed.

In appeal this order was confirmed on the ground that the appellant's contention that the attachment of the decree ceased on August 8, 1916, when darkhast No. 23 of the Haveri Court was dismissed cannot be accepted as the Haveri Court expressly kept the attachment alive.

It seems to us that both Courts have failed to realise what happens when a decree is attached. Murgeppa had got a decree against Basappa who before that had obtained a decree against Chanbasappa. So Murgeppa sought by attachment to prevent Basappa reaping the fruits of his decree against Chanbasappa, and that could only be done under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore, under O. XXI, r. 53 (1)(b). Murgeppa asked the Haveri Court to issue to the Hubli Court a notice requesting the Hubli Court to stay the execution of its decree which would remain effective under the provisions of the rule unless and until :—

(i) the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed (that is to say in this case the Haveri Court) cancelled the decree, or

(ii) the holder of the decree sought to be executed (that is to say Murgeppa) or his judgment-debtor (that is to say Basappa) applied to the Court receiving such notice (that is to say the Hubli Court) to execute its own decree.

I should mention here that the decree of the Haveri Court when it was transferred to the Hubli Court became for the purposes of the execution a decree of the Hubli Court.

When the notice had been received, the Hubli Court was bound, on the application of the creditor Murgeppa who had attached the decree or his judgment-debtor Basappa, to proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the net proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed.

Under sub-rule (3) the holder of the decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub-rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof.

So that the important question here is whether limitation ceased to run against Basappa, the original decree-holder, or his attaching creditor Murgeppa, when the notice was sent to the Hubli Court. If that notice amounted to an order enjoining the Hubli Court from executing the decree, then the time while that injunction was running would be excluded under section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act. But we think that section 15 only applies to an absolute stay, and not to a limited stay as would be ordered by the notice under O. XXI, r. 53 (1) (b). The stay does not prevent either the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment-debtor from seeking to execute the original decree and that being the case, time must be taken as running against them. It follows then that nothing was done towards the execution of this decree within the three years before the application was made on March 4, 1921, and consequently, that application was barred by limitation.

From another point of view this must be the necessary result of the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 53 (1) (b). Otherwise the proceedings between the original decree-holder and his judgment creditor might continue over an unlimited space of time to the great disadvantage of the original judgment-debtor who might be faced with proceedings in execution many years after the decree had been passed without any intermediate steps being taken in aid of execution.

The appeal must be allowed and the darkhast dismissed with costs throughout.

Shah, J.—I entirely agree. I only desire to add that I have not overlooked the possibility of treating the application of March 4, 1921, as an application for the continuation or revival of the original application for execution which was made in September 1914. But in view of the fact that on July 13, 1917, this first application for execution was disposed of, and no steps whatever were taken for execution of the decree until the second application of March 4, 1921, came to be made, I do not think that the first darkhast could be treated as pending after it was disposed of in 1917 nor can the second application be held to be an application for the revival of the first darkhast to save limitation in favour of the plaintiff.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD, BENARES—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Principal and agent—Negligence—Loss caused to Principal—Damages, suit for—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908) Sch. I, Art. 90—U P Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 326, applicability of, to suit against servant of Municipality.

Where it can be shown that a loss sustained by the principal is directly traceable to disregard on the part of the agent of directions issued to him regarding the conduct of business, even though such disregard may have been due to nothing worse than negligence, or overconfidence in the honesty of others, such misconduct on the part of the agent is actionable.

Where the accountant of a Municipality was able to embezzle large sums of municipal revenue owing to the disregard by the Executive Officer of the Municipality of the rules and directions laid down by the Municipality for his guidance in such matters and the Municipality sued the accountant and the Executive Officer to recover the amount embezzled;

Held (1) that the suit was governed by Article 90 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act;

(2) that the misconduct of the Executive Officer in disregarding the rules and instructions laid down for his guidance made him liable to the Municipality in respect of items of the receipt of which he had personal notice and the embezzlement of which he failed to prevent, and of items the embezzlement of which would have been prevented by the most ordinary and casual scrutiny of the entries to which the Executive Officer appended his signature by which he certified to their correctness.

Quare:—Whether section 326 of the U. P. Municipalities Act is applicable to a suit by a Municipal Board against one of its own servants.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Benares.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Peary Lal Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the Municipal Board of Benares against five defendants, the sons of one Jogesh Chander Banerji, deceased, a man who had been for many years in the service of the said Municipal Board as Head Accountant. The plaint was signed and verified by Rai Bahadur A. C. Mukerji as Executive Officer of the Board. In the written statement filed by the defendants certain pleas were taken which involved the suggestion that, if any liability did attach to the late Jogesh Chander Banerji, that liability was at least shared by certain superior officials in the employment of the Municipal Board, and more particularly by its Executive Officer. Upon this A. C. Mukerji addressed to the Chairman of the Municipal Board a letter, dated August 27, 1922, which is to be found at page 199 of our record. He referred to the allegations made in the written statement of the defendants as allegations against himself, and asked the Board to place him in such a position that "I may appear before the Court to answer any charge that may be levelled against me." The Municipal Board thereupon relieved A. C. Mukerji of his duties as Executive Officer, appointing one Hari Prasad Paladhi in his place, and through this gentleman as officiating Executive Officer they filed an amended plaint, in which A. C. Mukerji was impleaded as defendant No. 6, and allegations were made putting forward a cause of action against him along with the defendants originally impleaded.

The suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares, but the District Judge took it on to his own file and tried it out himself. He has decreed the Board's claim for a large sum of money jointly and severally against all the defendants. The appeal is by Rai Bahadur A.C. Mukerji only, and it may be convenient hereafter to refer to him simply as "the appellant."

In view of this fact, and taking into consideration the pleadings raised by the memorandum of appeal, we are entitled to treat certain facts found by the Trial Court as no longer in controversy.

The claim is on account of money belonging to the plaintiff Board embezzled during the period commencing with the 14th of October 1911 and ending on the 17th of December 1919. These defalcations were committed by the late Jogesh Chander Banerji, whom we may conveniently refer to hereafter by the name of Jogesh Babu, ordinarily applied to to him by the witnesses. The said Jogesh Babu went on leave about the date of the last defalcation, and he died on January 12th, 1920. The embezzlements alleged against him in this suit reached a total of Rs. 65,065-13-7. They were all taken from a single item of Municipal revenue; and it will be convenient to explain at once the nature of this item of revenue and the manner in which the defalcations were committed.

The City of Benares is visited by pilgrims in large numbers from all parts of India. This influx of visitors naturally entails on the Municipal Board of Benares a good deal of expenditure in various directions. It was, therefore, considered just that the Board should be permitted to raise a substantial portion of its income by means of a visitors' tax. This was first imposed in the year 1909. It was realised by means of a small charge superadded by the Railway Companies concerned to the price of every ticket issued to their stations at Benares. There are two Railway administrations concerned, namely, the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with its head office at Lucknow, and the Bengal and North-Western Railway with its head office at Gorakhpur. It was incumbent on the Railway administrations to keep proper accounts of the money collected by them as an extra charge on tickets issued to Benares and to remit that money from time to time to the credit of the Municipal Board. The two Railway Companies necessarily adopted different methods for remitting money. There are branches of what is now the Imperial Bank of India, and used to be Bank of Bengal, both at Lucknow and at Benares. The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, therefore, was in a position to make its remittances by cheque, and did so. The Bengal and North-Western Railway made the requisite payments either by hand or through the post. When convenient, a servant of the Railway, described as Railway pay clerk, attended in person at the Office of the Municipal Board and paid in the money under the prescribed form of tender and subject to all the procedure which would govern a payment made to the Board by any private individual. The procedure adopted when money was sent through the post needs to be explained in detail. If, for instance, a sum of Rs. 744-12-8 had to be remitted, the bulk of the money, that is to say, Rs. 740 would be sent in the shape of Government currency notes by registered letter, the small balance of Rs. 4-12-8 being remitted by money order. It would seem that the currency notes were sometimes sent entire by registered post, insured, and sometimes the first halves of the notes were sent by registered letter, the second halves following after receipt of the first had been acknowledged. With regard to the currency notes thus received through the post the proper form of procedure was for a Municipal clerk, usually the Head Accountant, to draw up in duplicate a form of tender such as would have been used if the payment had been made by a private individual in person. These forms of tender are known as chalans, and one of the chalans drawn up in connection with each payment would remain in the Municipal Office for record, while the other, having been signed by an official empowered to sign receipts on behalf of the Board, would be returned to the Railway administration and would serve as a formal receipt for payment made. Every chalan was required to have endorsed upon it a serial number, to be reproduced in the daily cash book maintained at the Board's office, which would serve as a means for identifying the particular payment and checking the entry in the cash book by comparison with the file of chalans. There was also maintained a register in which the chalans were entered by their numbers, presumably with particulars sufficient to identify them. The defalcations committed by Jogesh Babu were practically confined to the misappropriation of money remitted by the Bengal and North-Western Railway through the post in the manner above described. There was one defalcation in connection with a cheque received from the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, to which we shall refer again later. There was no embezzlement of any money tendered in person at the Board's Office by a Railway pay clerk from the Bengal and North-Western Railway. The above remark may appear to need some qualification with reference to a sum of one anna, which appears in the schedule appended to the record as having been embezzled out of a remittance of over

Rs. 1,100 made by a Railway pay clerk on the 25th of July, 1912 : but as a matter of fact there is no claim in respect of this item of one anna, and what probably happened was nothing more than a slight clerical error in the accounts. With regard to the embezzlements of money sent through the post office, we propose to examine these presently in considerable detail; but we may explain at once that the modus operandi was, broadly speaking, simplicity itself. Having got the currency notes, and as a general rule the small sum remitted by money order as well, into his hands, Jogesh Babu prepared chalans in the usual form, but assigned to the said chalans wholly fictitious numbers and never recorded them in the register of chalans at all. He sent a receipt for the money to the Railway Company over his own signature on the duplicate form of chalan, but now and then on a special receipt form sent by the Railway Company itself along with their remittance. He then pocketed the money, making no entry whatsoever in the daily cash book, or in any other Municipal account of its having been received. The Railway filed their receipt and entered the money in their accounts as payments duly made and acknowledged. The auditors who examined the accounts of the Municipal Board were quite helpless against this form of fraud. The chalans drawn up by Jogesh Babu had been made away with and were not traceable in any register, and there was no hint to be discovered in the daily cash book, or anywhere else, of such payments having ever been made. In so far as the above remarks are subject to any qualification with regard to particular items, this will be duly noted presently ; but in general outline the above is a correct statement of the nature of the frauds perpetrated on the plaintiff Board.

We have now to consider the nature of the claim preferred by the Municipal Board as against the appellant A. C. Mukerji, with whom alone we are now concerned. The case against him was preferred in the alternative. In the first place, it was alleged that the appellant had knowingly participated in the frauds committed by Jogesh Babu and had presumably shared with him the proceeds of those frauds. In the second place, the case against him is that, if he was not a participant in the frauds committed by Jogesh Babu and cognizant from the first of that gentleman's operations, then he had so facilitated those operations, by negligence in the discharge of his duties and disregard of rules laid down for his guidance, as to make him civilly liable for the consequences of his own negligence and misconduct. The learned District Judge has found that the appellant was from the first cognizant of Jogesh Babu's proceedings and a participator in his acts of embezzlement. He has rightly remarked that, on this view of the case, the question raised in the alternative as to the appellant's liability on the ground of neligence does not really arise ; but he has recorded his opinion that, if he had not held the appellant liable on the ground of active participation in the fraud, he would certainly have found him liable on the ground of negligence. It seems to us that the points for our determination in appeal can best be stated in the form of three issues.

(1) Is the Trial Court right in its finding that the defalcations alleged in the plaint were the result of a conspiracy between the appellant A. C. Mukerji and the late Jogesh Chander Banerji, and that the appellant was throughout cognizant of and a participant in the embezzlements committed ? (2) If this first issue be found in favour of the appellant, then were those embezzlements the result of such negligence and breach of duty on his part as to make him liable to account to the Municipal Board for the money ? (3) If this second issue be found in the affirmative, then is the appellant liable for the whole of the money proved to have been embezzled or for some part only of the same, and if so for what part ?

The whole case has been argued out before us in a thoroughly competent manner by the learned counsel engaged on both sides, and in dealing with the mass of evidence on the record, we have enjoyed one advantage over the learned District Judge. There will be found appended to our record certain schedules, in which the information available from the record itself recording all remittances made by the two Railway companies on account of visitors' tax, and all the embezzlements' committed by Jogesh Babu, are set forth in detail and classified in various ways. There is no information in these schedules which was not before the learned District Judge, and we do not suggest that any particular fact set forth in the schedules was not present to his mind; but it has been undoubtedly a great advantage to us to have the history of the case under our eyes in this particular form. We think it quite possible that the learned District Judge himself might have modified the conclusions at which he arrived, if he had been able to review the entire case in the manner in which we have done.

It will perhaps be convenient for us to state at once in concise form the conclusions we have arrived at on the three issues. Our reasons for these conclusions will be sufficiently indicated in the comments we propose to make on the evidence in the course of our view of the same.

On issue No. 1 our finding is that it is not proved that the appellant A. C. Mukerji was a participant in, or cognizant of any one of the acts of embezzlement committed by Jogesh Chandar Benerji.

Issue No. 2. The appellant was negligent in the discharge of his duties and did contravene rules laid down for his guidance, which rules must in our opinion be treated for the purposes of this case as instructions given by a principal to an agent. By reason of this negligence and breach of duty, the appellant is, in our opinion, liable to account to the plaintiff for a number of embezzlements, in respect of which it can be held with certainty that the loss of the plaintiff's money is traceable to negligence or breach of duty on his part.

We reserve our precise finding on the third issue as this can only be arrived at in the course of a detailed discussion of the evidence. We may, however, dispose at once of a question of law raised in respect of the second issue. It was of course conceded that, in so far as the action against the appellant was founded upon fraud, the suit was well within limitation; but it was contended that, if once the question of fraud be found in favour of the appellant, then any claim against him based upon misconduct or alleged breach of duty is doubly barred, both under article 2 of the Indian Limitation Act, and also by the special provisions of section 326 of the Municipalities Act, No. 2 of 1916. We find no force in either contention. This branch of the suit is, in our opinion, governed by Article 90 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, and there is no need even to invoke the provisions of section 18 of that Act in order to make the suit within time. We very much doubt whether the provisions of section 326 of the Municipalities Act apply at all to a suit by a Municipal Board against one of its own servants. But, in any case, any plea as to want of notice was in our opinion definitely and conclusively waived by Mr. Mukerji's letter of the 27th August, 1922, already referred to. It has been sought in argument to represent that letter as meaning nothing more than that the writer desired to be put in the witness box and examined on oath; but this is futile. When that letter was written the appellant's position on the record was virtually that of plaintiff. He could have gone into the witness box in that capacity, and would indeed have been obliged to do so at some stage or other of the hearing. We agree with the learned District Judge that the only possible interpretation of the appellant's letter is to treat it as a request to be impleaded as defendant in the suit.

The first point we have to make is that the visitors' tax was introduced after the appellant's appointment as Secretary of the Municipal Board, that is to say, it was a new thing in his time. The arguments addressed to us, as to his having merely followed a vicious system already in existence at the time when he entered upon his duties, can only be accepted with some reservation when they are applied to this matter of the visitors' tax. Not only was the tax a new one, but it was of a peculiar character. The work of collection was being done by the two Railway Companies, who would necessarily have to maintain proper accounts of their own. The income was of such a nature as to preclude the possibility of maintaining a demand register, which is always a powerful check upon the dishonesty of subordinate officials. One would have expected an officer holding the responsible position of Secretary of the Municipal Board to have been vigilant in a matter of this sort, and to have set himself, not merely to keep a watchful eye over the account as regards this source of income, but even to devise, if possible, additional safeguards. The most obvious of these would of course have been to ask the Railway Companies to submit quarterly returns, showing at least the total sums which they respectively claimed to have paid into the Municipal Board under this head in the course of the quarter. To us, who are wise after the event, this seems so simple and obvious a precaution that it is difficult to understand why it was never suggested either by the Secretary himself, or by any chairman, or other member of the Municipal Board. The responsibility for the omission must, we think, be shared between the appellant and his employers. We mention the matter chiefly as showing how easy it is to be wise after the event. It may serve as a warning against pressing too far against the appellant any argument based upon the suggestion that it appears incredible that he should have honestly neglected some particular precaution.

From the 5th of January, 1914 we enter upon the record of a series of embezzlements extending right down to the 3rd October of that year It is a record which has caused us serious difficulty and misgiving, before we could arrive at a conclusion favourable to the appellant on the issue of fraudulent conspiracy. It does on the face of it seem most extraordinary that for a period of 9 full months, the appellant should have continued honestly blind to the fact that the daily cash book, signed by him day after day as a correct record of the Municipal Board's receipts, contained no mention of any remittance from the Bengal and North-Western Railway on account of visitors' tax. It is a little in his favour that the first embezzlement of this series, perpetrated on the 5th of January, 1914, was in respect of a registered cover of which delivery was taken by Jogesh Babu, and the same consideration applies to the last two remittances of the 30th of July and 31st of August, 1914 respectively. There were, however, six remittances between January and July, in every one of which the registered cever containing the currency notes came into the appellant's own hands.

We have had to consider very seriously, in connection with part of the evidence, whether the learned District Judge is not right in saying that the decree of negligence involved in the appellant's signing the daily cash book throughout these months, while these embezzlements were going on, is so gross as to be scarcely believable. We can certainly understand why the Trial Court has refused to credit the appellant with having honestly neglected his duties to such an extent and has preferred to draw an unfavourable inference against his honesty. We may go so far as to say that the appellant could scarcely be said to have a valid ground of complaint, if an inference unfavourable to his honesty were founded upon this series of transactions alone. It is only upon a careful review of the case as a whole that we have declined to draw such an inference ourselves. We feel that allowance must be made for the deadening effects of routine and for the confidence which an official gradually and inevitably acquires in a subordinate who has for years been working with apparent honesty under his own immediate orders. We must lay stress once more in this connection on the comments already made upon previous details in the evidence which have satisfied us that Jogesh Babu was taking precautions against possible detection by the appellant. There are some indications, slight no doubt, but in our opinion not without significance, that even during these months of the year 1914 Jogesh Babu was not free from anxiety on this head. On the 11th of August, 1914, that is to say, towards the close of this critical period of 8 months, we find him making an entry in the cash book by which a substantial remittance of almost Rs. 2,000, which had come to hand on account of visitors' tax from the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, was misclassified as a receipt from the Bengal and North-Western Railway. It does look as if the man was beginning to wonder how much longer the Secretary could continue to pass without notice the fact that no remittances from this railway were appearing in the cash book. Moreover, we find that on the 3rd of October, 1914, when a sum of Rs. 859-7-7 came to hand from the Bengal and North Western Railway through the post office, and both registered cover and money order actually reached the Secretary, as evidenced by his signatures on the postal acknowledgments, Jogesh Babu refrained from touching this amount and duly credited it in the cash book. We are not entitled to indulge in mere speculation; but Jogesh Babu so rarely refrained from embezzling the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company's remittance through the post that there was probably some special reason why he left this one untouched. One is inclined to suspect that, in passing the registered cover on to his subordinates, the Secretary may have made some casual remark about the arrival of a substantial remittance from that Company, which convinced the Head Accountant that it would be too dangerous to touch that particular sum of money. It is also perhaps a point, though a small one, in the appellant's favour, that the very next embezzlement, perpetrated on the 5th of November, 1914 of a sum more substantial than Jogesh Babu had ever yet misappropriated at one time, was committed while the appellant was absent on leave and H. P. Paladhi was once more in charge of his office.

The next point of interest which occurs to us is that a remittance of Rs. 640-3-0, received through the post office on the 2nd of December, 1914, was duly credited, and the reason for this is apparent from the fact that the registered cover had somehow come into the hands of H. P. Paladhi, and Jogesh Babu was afraid to touch the money. We do not propose to go in the same detail through the transactions in the year 1915. The embezzlements continued steadily; but their series was broken at various intervals by remittances which came to hand through the Railway pay clerk and were duly credited. In the case of every embezzlement committed during this year, the registered cover containing the currency notes came into the hands of Jogesh Babu. In two instances the money order for the trifling balance was acknowledged by the appellant, but we hesitate to draw the further inference that this circumstance ought to have put him on his guard as to the arrival of a substantial remittance. We note incidently that one of the embezzlements during this year was again committed during the appellant's absence on leave, while H. P. Paladhi was in charge of his office. Passing on to the year 1916, we note, first of all, that there were embezzlements during the month of January, in respect of which again it is not proved that the registered cover, or any other positive intimation of the arrival of the money, ever reached the appellant's hands. On the 21st of February, 1916, and again on the 28th March, 1916, substantial remittances through the post office reached the appellant's hands and were duly credited in the daily cash book. We think the reason why Jogesh Babu refrained from stealing this money is indicated by the learned District Judge, in a passage in his judgment where he points out that during the financial year 1915-1916 the receipts on account of visitors' tax credited in the Municipal accounts failed to reach the amount of the budget estimate. We infer that during February and March, 1916 Jogesh Babu was getting nervous as to the extent of this deficit, and preferred to moderate his operations rather than run the risk of setting on foot enquiries as to the reason for the deficit. Later on in the same year there was an embezzlement which calls for particular notice. On the 26th June 1916 a sum of Rs. 906-13-0 came to hand through the post office in the usual way. The registered letter was acknowledged by the appellant himself and Jogesh Babu felt it necessary to enter this amount in the cash book. He subsequently crossed out that entry, attesting the erasure by his own signature, and embezzled the money. The cash book for that day was attested as a correct record of the day's receipts by the appellant's signature. If that signature was appended after the erasure, it would be difficult indeed to avoid the inference that by this time, at any rate, the appellant was in fraudulent collusion with Jogesh Babu. We cannot help noting in this connection that we could wish that the appellant had been subjected while in the witness box to a more searching and systematic cross-examination. On any possible theory it is difficult to understand how he came to sign the cash book for this 26th of June, 1916. The theory contended for in argument on his behalf is that erasure was made after the accounts for the day had been signed by the appellant, and we are prepared to accept this theory; but we do so with a thorough realization of what its acceptance involves. The total at the end of the day represents the sum of the items recorded, after deducting the item of Rs. 906-13-0. When this book was placed before the Secretary for his signature the total shown at the end of the day was less than the sum of the various entries by this precise amount of Rs. 906-13-0. There was only one other large item on the page, and that was the payment on account of octroi which bulks largely in each day's receipts. It so happens that the sum of these two items alone, namely, the octroi receipt plus Rs. 906-13-0 on account of visitors' tax, considerably exceeds the total for the day. This means that the appellant has understated the case against himself when he admitted that he never added up the total in the daily cash book before affixing his signature, which certified the whole account as correct. It is to be noted that our record of the appellant's deposition at p. 48 contains misrepresentation: the critical passage should not run "I myself checked the totals" but "I myself did not check the totals." If he had made it a practice even to run his eye in the most casual manner down the page, it seems to us that he must have detected the glaring deficiency in this day's apparent total for the 26th of June 1916, to which we have drawn attention. A month later, that is, on the 25th of July 1916, Jogesh Babu reverted to his older tactics and simply embezzled a sum of Rs. 1,049-13-4, without leaving any trace of it in the day's accounts, even though the registered cover containing the notes had passed through the Secretary's hands. Whether he was getting nervous as to the risk of continuing this procedure or whatever the reason may have been, we find that his next two embezzlements, of the 25th of October 1916, and of the 22nd of November 1916, were effected by entering the remittance in the daily cash book and crossing it out after the Secretary's signature had been obtained. In connection with the second of these two embezzlements there is a curious feature. The sum remitted by the Bengal and North-Western Railway on that day was 951-6-3, and it almost looks as if Jogesh Babu was getting afraid that he was presuming too far on the appellant's slackness. At the beginning of that month, consequent on the passing of the new Act for the regulation of the Municipalities in these Provinces, the post of Secretary had been abolished and the appellant A. C. Mukerji had been appointed the first Executive Officer of the Benares Municipal Board under the new Act. So far as concerns the matters now under consideration, and particularly with reference to the keeping up of the daily cash book the duties and responsibilities of the Executive Officer were the same as those previously incumbent on the Secretary, but it is just possible Jogesh Babu may have been afraid of the appellant's bringing some new sense of responsibility to the performance of the duties of the more dignified post of Executive Officer. At any rate, the appearance of the cash book suggests that he had intended to keep his hands off this sum of Rs. 951-6-3. On the same day, however, an Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway cheque came in for Rs. 2,110-15-10. Jogesh Babu took advantage of this fact to alter the entry he had already made of the remittance from the Bengal and North-Western Railway, substituting for it a record of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway's remittance by cheque and working out a daily total loaded with the difference between Rs. 2,110-15-10 and Rs. 951-6-3, that is to say, in excess of the actuals as they stood when the Secretary's signature was taken by a sum of Rs. 1,159-9-7. This fraud remained undetected because of the scant attention paid by the appellant to the entries in the daily cash book and because, apparently, he never thought of taking that important register occasionally into his hands and turning back the pages to see that everything remained in order.

We pass on to the year 1917, and note that the first remittance that came to hand through the post in that year was duly credited. So also was a remittance of the 26th of June, 1917. Between these dates there had been four embezzlements the registered cover having only come into the appellant's hands in connection with the last of these four. In the month of August 1917 a similar remittance, in which the registered cover had been received by the appellant, was duly credited; but Jogesh Babu embezzled the next two as they came to hand during the months of September and October, presuming on the fact that appellant would not be placed on his guard, although in one instance the registered cover containing the entire remittance of currency notes, and in the other the registered letter containing the first halves of the notes, had come into his hands. It does look, however, as if Jogesh Babu continued to be afraid of presuming too far on the appellant's negligence, for in November 1917 and March 1918 we find him crediting the Municipal Board with the entire amount of two remittances received through the post office, which might conceivably have been embezzeled had he chosen boldly to adopt the procedure followed by him in other instances. Between January and October 1918 there were only two embezzlements committed—on the 28th of January and 30th of March of that year—and in the month of October a substantial remittance was duly credited. The reason for this seems to be that there had been some re-arrangement of duties in the office. One Raghunath Prasad was acting as Head Accountant, and receipt issued to the Railway Company was signed by M. A. Khair. We note that in the month of June 1918 the post of Secretary to the Municipal Board was once more called into existence. We gather that the Secretary thus appointed was not intended to supersede the Executive Officer, but rather to serve as a sort of head assistant, relieving the Executive Officer of a portion of the clerical work. The important point, in our opinion, in connection with this case is that the Executive Officer continued to be responsible for the correctness of the entries in the daily cash book down to the 24th of November 1919, when those duties were made over to the Secretary. From that date the appellant ceased to be directly or personally responsible for the cash book. The record of embezzlements from February 7, 1919 down to the date abovementioned calls for no particular comment. The embezzlements continued, and we have taken separate note of those instances in which the appellant is affected with personal knowledge of the fact of the arrival of the remittance by the appearance of his signature in acknowledgment of registered cover received from the post office. In connection with one item of Rs. 683-13-2, received on the 10th of March 1919, Jogesh Babu seems to have reverted to the procedure which we have noticed as only occasionally followed by him. He entered the entry as correct. We do not pursue this detailed enquiry beyond the 24th of November 1919, for the reason which we have already indicated.

In the course of this review of the evidence, we think we have sufficiently indicated our reasons for finding in favour of the appellant on the issue of fraudulent conspiracy, or wilful connivance in the frauds perpetrated by Jogesh Babu. We are satisfied, on the whole, that active participation in these frauds, or even guilty knowledge of the same, is not brought home to the appellant by that evidence. There is certainly no one proved fact in the case on which the Court can lay its hand and say that this could not have occurred as it did if the appellant had not been in collusion with Jogesh Babu. There are, on the contrary, a number of circumstances which suggest that Jogesh Babu was afraid of detection by the appellant and was taking precautions against such detection. We may note also that there is an entire absence from this record of the sort of evidence which one frequently finds in cases of embezzlement, and which one would expect to find in a case like the present in which the sums embezzled were so considerable. We refer to evidence tending to suggest that the appellant was living beyond his means, or was otherwise accumulating resources in money or in any species of property, not to be accounted for by his ostensible sources of income. Nor when the appellant was in the witness box, was there any cross-examination directed towards making good any such point against him.

Coming to the issue of negligence, it seems to us that we have already given abundant reasons for imputing to the appellant negligence of a very serious character. We need not go over the ground which is sufficiently covered by the judgment under appeal in order to lay stress upon the various rules and regulations by which the appellant was bound. The cardinal point to our minds is his responsibility for the entries in the daily cash book. It was certainly never intended that the signature of the Secretary, and later that of the Executive Officer, appearing at the close of each day's receipt entries in this cash book, should be a mere formality. The Municipal Board relied upon these responsible officers exercising a real and effective supervision over the preparation of this most important register. This fact was emphasised in the rules and regulations laid down for the guidance of these officials, and as against the appellant in this particular case we regard those rules as being of the nature of instructions issued by a principal to his agent as to the manner in which the said agent was to discharge the duties assigned to him. Where it can be shown that a loss sustained by the principal is directly traceable to disregard on the part of the agent of directions issued to him regarding the conduct of business, even though such disregard may have been due to nothing worse than negligence, or over-confidence in the honesty of others, such misconduct on the part of an agent is clearly actionable. That the appellant is liable to account to the Municipal Board for at least a substantial part of the money embezzled by Jogesh Babu, while the latter was working under the direct supervision of the appellant, we hold to be quite beyond doubt.

The precise assessment of that responsibility in respect of every item in the Schedule before us is a matter of some delicacy. On behalf of the respondent it was argued that, even on the basis of negligence alone, the appellant was liable for the entire amount of Jogesh Babu's defalcations. We could only accede to this contention on one or other of two alternative views. The first would be that, if the appellant had strictly observed the rules laid down for regulating his discharge of his duties, the frauds committed by Jogesh Babu would have been wholly impossible, or would have been immediately detected. The alternative would be to hold the appellant liable for all defalcations committed after some specified date, on the ground that, but for gross and actionable negligence on his part, the detection of the frauds which were going on must have taken place at least by the date so specified. There is a good deal to be said for both these contentions and more especially for the latter ; but on the whole they fall short of satisfying us. Looking more particularly at the cautious manner in which Jogesh Babu embarked upon his career of fraud, we are not prepared to say that due diligence on the part of the appellant would have precluded him from making the attempt, or would have resulted in his immediate detection. With reference to the second contention, our real difficulty would be to fix any one definite date from which it could be given effect. We are gravely conscious of the responsibility which attaches to us in determining this issue, in view of the large number of Government officials, employees of railways, of corporations, of business concerns of all sorts, on whom it has been laid, frequently as a part only of multifarious duties to bear the responsibility of checking and certifying to the correctness of accounts, the actual maintenance of which is necessarily on the shoulders of lower paid subordinates. We can certainly commit ourselves to no conclusions which would reduce the responsibility of such superior Government servants or other officials, to a mere farce. On the other hand, we feel that a too stringent insistence upon their responsibility in the matter of the observance of all rules and regulations laid down for their guidance might result in making it practically impossible for some of them to carry on the work laid upon their shoulders. In the present case our decision is actually influenced to a considerable extent by the knowledge we have of the multifarious nature of the duties laid upon the appellant as Secretary and afterwards as Executive Officer of the Municipal Board. We have decided to hold him liable in respect of those items only where the evidence affects him with personal notice of the arrival of a remittance, the embezzlement of which he failed to prevent, or where, in our opinion the embezzlement would have been prevented by the most ordinary and casual scrutiny of the entries in the daily cash book before he appended the signature by which he certified to their correctness. On this basis we have drawn up the following schedule, which shows the appellant as liable for the total sum of Rs. 21,439-4-7, shown at the foot of the same.

In the result, therefore, we modify the decree of the Court below as follows: that the decree will stand in its entirety, including the order for costs, as against the defendants other than Rai Bahadur A. C. Mukerji. As against this defendant the decree will provide that he is jointly and severally liable along with the other defendants for the sum decreed, up to a limit of Rs. 21,439-4-7 and that he will bear his own costs in the Trial Court.

VITHAL v. MAHADEV

A person who is not a party to a proceeding in the lower Court cannot appeal from the decree or order passed, unless he can prove that he has such a right under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

A purchaser of property which has been directed by a decree to be given into the possession of the decree-holder cannot rely on the provisions of section 146 of the Civil Procedure Code. He is expressly excluded, from applying for execution of the decree unless he can also prove that he is an assignee of the decree. Nor can such a purchaser appeal from an order passed on the application of the decree-holder.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—One Lingo got a decree in Regular Suit No. 183 of 1916, whereby it was ordered that the first defendant and the plaintiff should take possession of various properties from the other defendants. After the decree had been passed Lingo sold his interest in some of the properties of which possession was directed to be given to him to the present appellants. Lingo thereafter made an application for execution of his decree. His purchasers were not parties to that application. An order appears to have been made in execution under O. XXI, r. 35 (1), but the Subordinate Judge held that action ought to have been taken under O. XXI, r. 36, which he directed should be done, and that the possession given under O. XXI, r. 35 (1) should be set aside.

The appellants sought to appeal from that order to the First Class Subordinate Judge, with appellate powers, and an issue was raised whether the appellants had any locas standi to appeal. The learned Judge held that they had not, and in my opinion he was right. A person, who is not a party to a proceeding in the lower Court cannot appeal from the decree or order passed, unless he can prove that he has such a right under the provisions of the Code. Reliance was placed by the appellants on sections 47 and 146 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 47 merely enacts that certain questions arising between the parties to a suit in which a decree has been passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit. That section, therefore, does not touch the point we have to deal with.

Section 146 of the Code says :—

" Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him."

I do not think that the purchaser of property which has been directed by a decree to be given into the possession of the decree-holder can rely on this section. There are provisions in the Code which provide for the devolution of interest in a decree, and lay down how such devolution shall be made, and how the person on whom the interest devolves shall proceed thereunder. Order XXI, r. 16 provides for the transfer by assignment of a decree by writing or by operation of law :—

" Where a decree or, if a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, the interests of any decree-holder in the decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it ; and the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder : Provided that, where the decree, or such interest as aforesaid, has been transferred by assignment, notice of such application shall be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor, and the decree shall not be executed until the Court has heard their objections (if any) to its execution.

The only persons who can execute a decree are the persons mentioned in the rule : see Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, note at p. 561. A purchaser of property mentioned in a decree is expressly excluded from applying for execution unless he can also prove that he is an assignee of the decree. See also Hansraj Pal v. Nukhraji Kunwar (1).

Now one can easily imagine what might possibly occur if the contention of the appellants was correct. In this case there were a number of properties mentioned in the decree. to which under the decree Lingo was entitled to possession. He might have sold those properties to a number of purchasers, with the result that there might be a number of persons entitled to execute the decree, and even if Lingo sought to execute the decree, as he did in this case, there might be numerous applications made by his purchasers, to appeal on the ground that they were not satisfied with the orders passed on Lingo's application. It seems to me that such a procedure is not contemplated by the Code. It is only parties to the decree or transferees of the interest of the decree-holders by assignments in writing, or by operation of law who can apply in execution. It seems to me, therefore, that the judgment of the lower Court was right and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Shah, J.—I concur in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice. It seems to me that though Lingo has sold a part of the property under the decree to the present appellants the proper procedure provided by O. XXI, r. 16, has not been followed in this case. Without going so far as to say that there could be no transfer of a part of the interest of the decree-holder within the meaning of r. 16, in the present case, on the admitted facts it seems to me that Lingo has throughout remained on the record and the present appellants have not been treated as parties to the proceedings at any stage. The mere fact that on Lingo's application the possession was in fact ordered to be given to the present appellants, instead of to Lingo, in respect of the properties sold by Lingo to the present appellants, is not sufficient to make them parties to the proceedings or to constitute them representatives of the decree-holder within the meaning of section 47 of the Code. Section 146 of the Code, which has been relied upon by the appellants, cannot help them, as the procedure to be followed when there is a transfer by the decree-holder is laid down in r. 16 of O. XXI. The appellants, therefore, cannot appeal against the order which was made as between Lingo and the present respondents, on June 13, 1922, by the Subordinate Judge.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 140—Appeal—Court-fees not paid in full—Bona fide mistake—time whether can be extended.

An appeal when filed was not properly stamped and the prescribed period of limitation for filing the same expired long before the deficiency in Court-fees was made up. But it was found that the full Court-fees were not paid in the first instance on account of a bona fide mistake, and the deficiency was made up as soon as it was brought to the notice of the appellant.

Held that the appellant was entitled to the benefit of section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the time should be extended.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 23rd May 1918, modifying that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Mianwali, dated the 1st May 1918.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Two seperate suits, both based on book accounts, were brought almost simultaneously against the brothers, Mul Chand and Gopal Das, one by Sewa Ram to recover Rs. 6,939-14-3 and the other by Fateh Chand for Rs. 2,653-15-0. As the pleadings in both the cases were identical, the cases were tried together, and disposed of by one judgment by the first Court, which decreed the amounts claimed and directed payment of the smaller amount (i. e., Rs. 2,653-15-0) in a lump sum, and of the other by annual instalments of Rs. 1,000 each. Both parties were dissatisfied with this decision. The plaintiffs' prayer in each case for future interst was not even referred to in the judgment and though there was no issue as to instalments, instalments were allowed in the suit of Sewa Ram. The latter, therefore, appealed to this Court, pressing his claim for future interest and seeking to have the order as to instalments cancelled. The defendants appealed to the District Judge in the case of Fateh Chand and the latter filed cross-objections for future interest, but the learned District Judge accepted the defendant's appeal so far as to make the judgment-debt payable by four instalments, and dismissed the cross-objections. Fateh Chand also has come to this Court in second appeal, and, like Sewa Ram, objects to instalments and claims future interest.

Mr. Jagan Nath on behalf of the defendants raised a preliminary objection that both the appeals were barred by time because they were not properly stamped when filed in this Court, and the prescribed period of limitation for filing the same, had expired long before the deficiency in Court-fees, was made up in either case. In support of this objection the learned Counsel cited Lekh Ram v. Ramji Das (1) Tikkan Ram v. Bosa Ram (2), Fateh Singh v. Babu Ram (3) and Amtul Qadir v. Muhammad Yousaf (4). But none of these rulings is in point because in every one of them it was found that the omission to pay full Court-fees was not due to a bona fide mistake, but was deliberate. In (1), (2) and (3) the deficiency had not been made up when the appeal came up for final hearing. In the present case we are satisfied that full Court-fees were not paid in the first instance on account of a bona fide mistake. The deficiency was made good by either appellant when the office pointed out that the appeal was not sufficiently stamped. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the benefit of section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code and we accordingly extend the time.

As regards the two points raised in the grounds of appeal we are of opinion that the orders directing payment by instalments need not be interfered with at this distance of time, when the last instalment in one case fell due in 1921 and five instalments have already been paid in the other. But we consider the claim to future interest to be just and well-founded. The accounts, which date from Sambat 1948 show very fair and honest dealings throughout. The plaintiffs made cash advances from time to time at the lowest mercantile rate of interest, i. e., at 6 per cent. per annum. Therefore, it is but fair that the defendants should continue to pay interest at that rate on the unpaid balances. They are themselves bankers and it appears that they borrowed money from the plaintiffs at a low rate of interest in order to lend it to others at higher rates. Therefore, they must continue to pay interest till the decretal amounts are realized. We accept the appeals so far as to order that the defendants shall pay interest to the plaintiffs on the sums decreed from the dates of the institution of the suits till payment thereof. On the payment of an instalment, the liability to pay interest on the amount of that instalment shall cease from the date of payment. The defendants shall pay the plaintiffs' costs in this Court.

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions,) Act (II of 1908), s. 9—Tenant remaining in possession after termination of tenancy—Rent payable—Standard rent.

There is nothing in the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act which prevents a landlord from charging his late tenant the standard rent under the Act, as soon as he claims protection under section 9 of the Act because the payment of that rent is the sole condition which the Act recognises as enabling a tenant to remain in possession.

There is no analogy between the provisions of the Act which enable a tenant, who has been charged without his congizance a higher rent than the standard rent, to recover according to the terms of the Act the excess by deducting it from the current rent, and the ordinary proposition of law that a person in occupation of premises is bound to pay compensation for the use and occupation after the expiration of the contract between him and his landlord, which equally applies to a person who is allowed by the provisions of the Bombay (War Rent Restrictions) Act, to remain in possession.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff in Appeal No.57 of 1923 is the owner of a go-down bearing No. 2 situate at Soni Lane. It was in his possession from 1916 to April 1920. On May 1, 1920, the plaintiff first let the premises to the defendants for seven months at a rental of Rs. 18,000, which was equivalent to Rs. 2,571-6-10 amonth. On December 1, 1920, he let the go-down to the defendants for a year at a rent of Rs. 1,000 per month. At the end of that period the plaintiff filed a suit in the High Court against the defendants to eject them on the ground that he required the premises reasonably and bona fide for his own use and occupation. As the defendants filed a written statement, the hearing of the suit was delayed. When the suit came on for hearing, the plaintiff's circumstances had so changed that he no longer required the premises for his own use and occupation, and he gave up that contention, which was a true contention at the time the suit was filed. A settlement was then arrived at, and a consent decree was taken on July 12, 1922. There is a remarkable clause in the consent decree to the effect that the decree was without prejudice to the plaintiff's contention as regards the standard rent of the premises in suit if raised in any other suits filed by or against the plaintiff. I confess I do not understand the meaning of those words. But under the consent decree the defendants became tenants of the premises at a rent of Rs. 1,000 a month.

Six days after the decree had been taken, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants in the following form :—

You are in occupation of our client's go-down at Colaba being Soni Lane No. 2 as our client's monthly tenant at the monthly rent of Rs. 1,000. You are, however, aware that the standard rent of the said go-down is Rs. 2,571-7-0 per month. Our client several times requested you to agree to pay the said rent as our client is entitled to demand from you but you have refused to do so. We are, therefore, instructed to give you this notice that from the first day of September 1922 our client will charge you rent at the said rate of Rs. 2,571-7-0 per month. If you do not desire to pay any more rent than Rs. 1,000 you can vacate the preminses before the said September 1, 1922.

The defendants sent no reply to that notice.

The plaintiff wrote again on November 21, 1922, pointing out that the defendants had neither vacated the plaintiff's go-down nor paid rent at the rate demanded from September 1, 1922, nor had they paid rent for July and August 1922 at Rs. 1,000 a month. Notice was, therefore, given calling upon the defendants to pay the arrears for July and August at Rs.1,000 a month and pay rent from September 1, at the higher rate.

On december 21, 1922, the defendant's solicitors replied :—

" Our clients deny their liability to the requisitions, made in your letter under acknowledgment. Our clients would have paid your rent at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per month but for the intimation given to them by Mr. N. H. Moos that he has been appointed Receiver in Suit No. 5239 of 1922 of the go-down in question and his demand for rents in arrears and growing rents. Our clients deny that they are liable to vacate as required by yours and also deny your client's right to demand any rent other than at Rs. 1,000 per month under the consent decree between our respective clients.

The plaintiff then filed suit No. 947 of 1923 claiming that the standard rent should be fixed at Rs. 2,571-6-10 and that defendant should be ordered to pay rent at this rate from September 1, 1923, with previous arrears at the rate of Rs. 1,000 a month. In their written statements the defendants pleaded that on a proper construction of the consent decree dated July 12, 1922, they became monthly tenants of the plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per month. They further stated that the notices given by the plaintiff were invalid in law and that their tenancy was not duly determined.

No issues were raised at the hearing and it would appear from the judgment that the defendants gave up the point taken in para. 7 of the wtitten statement for Mr. Taleyarkhan contended that although the defendants were entitled to a statutory tenancy, they were only entitled to it, if they paid rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, and I find nothing in the judgment to show that there was any argument on the question whether the defendants were in possession of the premises under their agreement as constituted by the consent decree or whether they were in occupation under the provisions of the statute. The learned Judge said :—

" There was no provision in the Act entitling the landlord to increase the rent without terminating the tenancy simply because the rent he was charging fell short of the standard rent. Sections 3 and 12 of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act II of 1918 made rent in excess of the standard rent recoverable by the tenant, but the converse proposition that the landlord could recover deficit below the standard rent was nowhere enacted. The claim, therefore, made by the plaintiff in this suit to increase the rent merely because it fell short of the standard rent is altogether unsustainable. The suit for excess rent must fail."

Accordingly a decree was passed against the defendants for the rent for July and August at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per month and for the subsequent months down to May 31, 1923, when the defendants vacated, at the same rate.

It seems to me that the legal position of a tenant whose tenancy has been determined but who is entitled to continue in possession under the provisions of the Rent Act has not been fully appreciated at the hearing. The plaintiff was entitled to terminate under the ordinary rules of law the contract which had been established between him and the defendants' by consent decree, and on August 31, 1922, when the plaintiff's notice expired that tenancy terminated. Had it not been for the Rent Act, the defendants would have been bound to vacate, but under its provisions they might remain in possession, and under section 9 no order for the recovery of possession of the premises could be made so long as they paid or were ready and willing to pay rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, and perform the conditions of the tenancy. I presume that would mean the conditions of the tenancy existing between the parties before the agreement terminated, which would be continued to that extent by virtue of those words if the tenant remained in possession under the Act.

Now the tenancy having terminated, still the plaintiff could not get an order for possession so long as the tenant was paying the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act. We have to turn to section 2 to see what the definition of standard rent, is in order to ascertain what is the rent which can be charged to a person who remains in occupation of the premises under section 9. It seems to me that there is nothing in the Act which prevents a landlord from charging his late tenant, as soon as he claims protection under the Act, the standard rent, because the payment of that rent is the sole condition which the Act recognises as enabling a tenant to remain in possessions. There is no analogy between the provisions of the Act which enable a tenant, who has been charged without his cognizance a higher rent than the standard rent, to recover according to the terms of the Act the excess by deducting it from the current rent, and the ordinary proposition of law that a person in occupation of premises is bound to pay compensation for the use and occupation after the expiration of the contract between him and his landlord, which equally applies to a person who is allowed by the provisions of the Rent Act to remain in possession.

We think, therefore, that when the tenancy was terminated at the end of August 1922, and the defendants remained in possession and occupation of the premises, they should only have been allowed to do so provided they paid rent to the full extent allowable by the Act, that is to say the standard rent, and as no issue was framed in the Court below as to what was the standard rent, the case will have to go back to the lower Court to ascertain what is the standard rent, and pass a decree accordingly in favour of the plaintiff. The appellant will get his costs of the appeal.

Crump, J.—I entirely agree.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Land occupied by methila, whether religious—Gift, oral validity of—Trust, private, whether created.

The predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff, who was a methila, held certain land on a squatter tenure on which she had built a small residence for herself. She subsequently gave up her vows and married. Afterwards she made an oral gift of the land to a monk who gifted it to the defendant ;

Held (1) that the land was not religious ;

(2) that the oral gift in favour of the monk was invalid for want of a registered deed ;

(3) that in the absence of a deed it could not be said that a private trust of the land had been created;

(4) that, therefore, the plaintiff's title to the land subsisted and he was entitled to recover it.

Mr. Chari, for the Appellants.

Mr. Halkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

May Oung, J.—The plaintiff (now respondent) sues as the surviving husband and sole legal representative of one Ma E Thi, for possession of a piece of land, which the latter had held on a squatter tenure. When she became the registered occupier, Ma E Thi was a Methila or female lay devotee. She put up on the land a small residence for herself ; this is referred to as a Zayat, but this word does not here mean a public rest-house or similar building within the precincts of a monastery or cemetery. For the purpose of this case, the building was an ordinary dwelling house and it did not stand on religious land.

Subsequently, Ma E Thi gave up her vows and married. The couple lived for some time in the Zayat and then moved to Kemmendine, leaving Ma E Thi's sister, Ma Shwe Ma, in occupation.

Later, it is alleged, Ma E Thi made a gift of the house and site to a monk, who has since left the priesthood, and is now Moung Po Thet, the 1st defendant. Moung Po Thet in his turn, before he became a layman, is alleged to have made a gift of the same to U Kumaya, the 2nd defendant, who is now in occupation. Recently, U Kumaya dismantled the old building and erected a new one. Hence the suit.

Ma E Thi's original title is unchallenged. Moung Po Thet admitted it. And although U Kumaya did not, he claims through Moung Po Thet and urges that Ma E Thi's gift, though it may be invalid as such, is good as a trust.

It is not contended that the alleged gifts are valid They were obviously not, since no deed was executed

Hence, Ma E Thi's title subsisted, unless it can be shown that she lost it by her own act, or by lapse of time. As to the latter, it is sufficient to note that "adverse possession" was not pleaded, and it is clear that neither Ma E Thi's nor her legal representative's right was barred.

As to the alleged trust set up here again as there was no deed, there could have been no valid private trust and there is nothing to show that Ma E Thi at any time intended to effect a public trust. The contention of the defendants was that she made a poggalika gift, i.e., a gift to an individual who could thereafter dispose of it as he pleased: and it is significant that Maung Po Thet professed to have the right to give the property to U Kumaya.

Had the property been of a religious nature, some question of a trust might conceivably have arisen, but this was not religious property and the question does not, therefore, arise.

I see no reason to disturb the finding of the Trial Court and would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Heald, J.—I concur.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff delivered seven bags of miscellaneous goods to the defendant Company for carriage from Bombay to Dulia via Chalisgaon. He signed Risk-Note in Form B. Six bags were delivered correctly at Dhulai. One bag unfortunately, instead of being taken out at Chalisgaon, was carried on to Jalgaon, and some days afterwards was brought back and delivered to the plaintiff. Plaintiff complained that there was a shortage of nineteen seers in the contents. The defendant Company admitted the shortage. They claimed, however, exemption from liability on the strength of the Risk-Note. We think there was a clear deviation from the route orginally intended when the goods were delivered for transit. In these circumstances, we think that in any event the onus would lie upon the Railway Company, if they claimed exemption under the Risk-Note, to prove that the shortage had not occurred during the deviation. That they never attempted to do. The case we have been referred to, viz., Arunachellam Chettiar v. The Madras Railway Campany (1), does not assist the Railway Company, because the facts in that case was entirely different. The Court there relied upon the decision in Hales v. London and North-Western Railway Company (2) in which it was held that a customer dealing with a Company is bound not only by the ordinary route, but also by the ordinary train arragements and hours of arrival according to which they profess to carry.

Here it cannot be said that the deviation was due to the ordinary train arrangements, for it was clearly due to a mistake on the part of the Company's servants. We think the case of Vali Mahomed v. G. I. P. Railway (3) is clearly applicable. In that case it was proved that the loss had occurred during the deviation. But the general principle was laid down that the Company by carrying the goods via Kalyan, went outside the terms of the contract and could no longer rely on the protection afforded by the risk-note so as to be absolved from liability for the loss which had occurred.

We must, therefore, make the rule absolute, and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs throughout.

A suit for refund of purchase-money is not maintainable by the auction-purchaser on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the land.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal (with him Babu Peari Mohan Chatterjee), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

B. B. Ghose, J.—The plaintiff, who was the auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree for rent, sued both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor for refund of the purchase-money and also for compensation on certain allegations made in the plaint. The suit was decreed in the primary Court against both the defendants. On appeal by the decree-holder defendant, the learned Judge dismissed the suit holding that it was not maintainable. The plaintiff appeals to this Court and two questions have been raised on his behalf: (1) Whether a suit for refund of purchase-money is maintainable by the auction-purchaser on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the land, and (2) whether the suit is maintainable on the ground of fraud of the defendants.

With regard to the first question, the learned Vakil for the appellant has placed before us all the cases decided by the different High Courts with reference to sales held after the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 came into operation. He admits that the general view is that such suits are not maintainable. It is only necessary to refer to the latest cases, which are Ram Sarup v. Dalpat Rai (1), Balvant Raghunath v. Bala Malu (2), Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramanian Chettiar (3) and Juranu Mahamad v. Jathi Mahamad (4). He, however, relies on two cases in support of his contention that such a suit is maintainable, namely, the cases of Rustomji Ardeshir Irani

(2) 67 Ind. Cas. 360; 46 B. 833; 24 Bom. L. R. 308; (1922) A. I. R. (B.) 205.
(3) 45 Ind. Cas. 109; 40 M. 1009.
(4) 46 Ind. Cas. 783; 22 C. W. N. 760.

v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (5), and Prosanna Kumar Bhattacharjee v. Ibrahim Mirza (6). The case of Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (5) was under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice in Balvant Raghunath's case (2). The only case then in which a discordant note was struck is that of Prosanna Kumar Bhattacharjee v. Ibrahim Mirza (6). That case, however, was based on the decision in Rustomji Ardeshir Irani v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (5), which is no authority on the question where the sale was held under the Code of 1908. We must, therefore, follow the later case in our Court, Juranu Mahamad v. Jathi Mahamad (4), which is in agreement with the decision of all the other High Courts, and hold that such a suit is not maintainable.

The learned Vakil for the appellant further contends that there is a difference between the present case and the others, as in the present case the sale was a sale in execution of a rent decree and there is a warranty of title in the case of such a sale. The authority cited in support of this proposition is the decision in Abdul Sobhan Seikh v. Nakbar Mandal (7). That case, however, does not lay down any such rule, as it decides merely a question of estoppel by representation. That there is no such distinction as regards warranty will be apparent from the fact that the proclamation of sale which has to be published is in the same terms in both classes of cases. The difference in the rights acquired by purchasers in execution of decrees does not affect the question as regards warranty of title.

Before parting with this question, I must observe that the plaintiff does not 'state that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, the allegation being to the effect that the plaintiff purchased only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and not the holding free from all encumbrances as in a rent sale. On that allegation, the question discussed does not arise and the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable on any ground whatsoever.

With regard to the second point the matter of fraud was not investigated by the learned Judge on appeal and the appellant asks us for a remand of the case for retrial on that ground. The learned Vakil for the respondent contends that, assuming that such a suit on the ground of fraud is maintainable, there is no such averment of fraud in the plaint by which the plaintiff was induced to purchase the property and that there is nothing to be enquired into; although the words "fraud" and "collusion" have been used several times in the plaint, if those words are struck out, the facts alleged do not disclose any fraud which would entitle the plaintiff to maintain this action nor was any issue raised on that question. Reference has been made in this connection to the case of Ganga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhury (8), where Lord Watson quoted the well-known dictum of Lord Selborne on that question. The appellant urges that, although no issue was raised, the Trial Court decided the question of fraud and the defendants cannot be said to have been prejudiced or taken by surprise. The Trial Court, however, seems to have decided two points on the facts alleged in the plaint. First, that in the rent suit the defendant No. 2 who was a grandson of the recorded tenant did not represent the entire body of tenants deriving title from the recorded tenant and, secondly, that the enhanced rate of rent claimed by the landlord in his suit was not bona fide as the defendant No. 2 had no authority to agree to an enhancement on behalf of all the tenants and this enhancement was made by the landlord in collusion with the defendant No. 2. These findings can hardly be said to be findings of fraud which would entitle the auction-purchaser to have the sale set aside. I have examined the plaint and there is no allegation in it beyond those which have been found by the Munsif. It seems to me clear that these findings were not considered to be findings on any question of fraud by the parties in the lower Appellate Court as it does not appear that the lower Appellate Court was asked to come to any finding on the question of fraud. This ground also, therefore, fails.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. IV, O. II, rr. 2, 4—Suit for possession—Mesne-profits subsequent suit for, whether barred.

Where a plaintiff sues for possession of immoveable property and obtains a decree for possession and mesne profits from the date of the suit, he can bring a separate suit against the same defendant for mesne profits prior to the suit.

Mr. V. D. Limaye, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff purchased a house on March 12, 1921. He did not get possession. Accordingly he had to file a suit on June 17, 1921, for possession, on which he got a decree for possession and rent from the date of the suit. He then filed the present suit in the Small Cause Court to recover rent for the house prior to the date of the suit. The Judge held that the suit was barred by the previous suit, and accordingly dismissed it. It seems to us that he has missed the real point in the case which does not fall under section 11, Explanation IV, of the Civil Procedure Code, but under the provisions of Order II. If the claim for possession and the claim for rent prior to the suit for possession are separate causes of action, there is no obligation on the plaintiff to join these two causes of action in the same suit. It is only under the provisions of O. II, r. 4, that it is possible for seeking possession to join in that suit a claim for mesne profits prior to the suit. In Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), the same point arose, and it was held following a series of authorities that :—

"Where a plaintiff sued for possession of lands only when he might have joined in the same action claims for mesne profits and damages, it was open to him to bring a subsequent suit against the same defendants for the profits which became payable before the institution of the former suit and which might have been included in such suit."

We agree with that decision. Accordingly we must make the rule absolute and remand the suit for trial on the merits. The applicant will be entitled to the costs of the rule. Costs in the lower Court will be costs in the cause.

Appeal from the decree of the District Court, Tharrawaddy, in C. A. No. 59 of 1922.

SAKALCHAND MOTI v. AMBARAM HARIBHAI

Mr. Maung Lat, for the Appellant.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a right of pre-emption in respect of a piece of land which originally belonged to the 1st defendant Ma Hmu and her deceased husband Maung Shwe Kye, and was sold by her after his death and the sole question argued before this Court was whether the lower Courts were right in holding that a right of pre-emption existed in favour of Maung Po Saing and Maung Sin U, the sons of Ma Hmu's deceased husband U Shwe Kye by a former marriage.

In Mo Thi v. Tha Kwe (1) it was held that the rule regarding the right of a Buddhist widow to dispose of family property after her husband's death, viz., that she has an absolute right of disposal over her own share and a life interest in the remainder does not affect, but is subject to the general rule regarding the right of all co-heirs to pre-emption, and that, therefore, Thwa Kwe had a right of pre-emption over the whole property. This case is recited in the head-note to the Full Bench case of Maung Ye Nan O v. Aung Myat San (2) as having been dissented from and Ormond, J. in his judgment in the latter case states, that the case decided that when a widow after partition sold her share to a stranger, her son had the right of pre emption as to the whole. If this is correct Ye Nan O's case certainly overruled that of Mo Thi's case so far as the question of the rights to pre-emption after partition is concerned, but from the judgment I am unable to see that there was anything about partition in the case, and in any event the case was only overruled so far as concerned the rights to pre-emption after partition and did not touch the authority of the case for the proposition laid down in the head-note and we have not to travel further than Maung Ye Nan O's case (2), itself to see that pre-emption in the case of co-heirs is recognised before, though not after partition: Fox, C. J., citing with approval the view of the law laid down in Sparks' Code that if a person wish to sell his share in an undivided ancestral estate, he should first offer it to all the co-heirs.

It is admitted by learned Counsel for the appellants that Maung Po Saing and Maung Sein U are co-heirs and it is not contended that there has been any partition; it follows, therefore, on the authority of Mo Thi's case and Sparks' Code that Ma Hmu should not have sold the whole or any portion of the undivided family property without offering it first to them and that the appeal must be dismissed.

Application against the order of the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge, Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 443 of 1921.

Mr. D. G. Dalvi, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—There were two brothers Sakalchand Moti and Jadav Moti who entered into a partnership to supply bricks to a certain company. A field was purchased in partnership, but the sale-deed was taken in the name of Sakalchand. Disputes arose between the partners, and two suits were filed in which other parties were impleaded. It is not necessary to refer to the detailed pleadings. The suits were referred to the arbitrament of a pleader of the Court by the joint wishes of the parties on January 10, 1922. The arbitrator gave his awards on August 31, 1922. Objections were filed against the awards by both the brothers. The main ground that the applicants relied upon was that the awards were illegal and void as they were not delivered within the time fixed by the Court. There were also allegations that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct.

It was represented to me when the application for revision was entertained that the time for filing the award as originally fixed in the orders of reference was February 10. Certainly it appears from the judgment that the learned Judge considered that that was the correct time, and consequently he said that it had been urged by the plaintiff's pleader that the arbitrator examined the witnesses between February 10 and 28, 1922, after the time had expired before it was extended, and, therefore, the whole proceedings were vitiated. It was only on that ground that I entertained the application. Now it appears that there was an error in the judgment, and that as a matter of fact the original time was February 28. The only question then would be whether due applications had been made to the Court, and admittedly the Rojnama shows that time was extended until August 31 when the awards were made.

It has been argued by the petitioner's pleader that an application to the Court for extending the time should be in writing and Monji Premji Set v Malivakel Koyassan Koya Haji (1) has been cited in support of that proposition. But all that the learned Judges said in that case was as follows:—

" We must accept the declaration made by the Subordinate Judge that extensions of the period for the submission of the award were from time to time granted, though we may observe that applications for such extensions should ordinarily be in writing, and that most certainly orders thereon should be."

It cannot possibly be deduced from those words that an oral application to the Court is void, and that any order passed thereon, even though in writing, as in this case, was equally void. It must follow that these rules must be discharged with costs. If the true facts had been placed before me, I should not have granted them.

S. R. M. M. C. T. PEREINAN CHETTY FIRM—RESPONDENT.

Banker and Customer—Forged Cheque, payment of, liability for.

Before a banker can debit his customer's account with the amount of a forged cheque he must prove negligence on the part of the customer which was intimately connected with the drawing or encashment of the cheque which was the proximate cause of the loss. (p. 262, col. 1).

Mr. Cowasjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Leach, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.— Appellants, who are executors of Yacoob Abdul Gunny's estate sued respondents, a firm of Chetty brokers to recover Rs. 3,741-9-9 which they alleged to be the amount standing to Yacoob Abdul Gunny's credit of his account with respondents. They said that a cheque for Rs. 7,500, with which respondents claim to debit the account was a forgery.

Respondents denied that the cheque was a forgery and said that the amount standing to Yacoob Abdul Gunny's credit was only Rs. 241-9-9 which amount they paid into Court.

The learned Judge on the Original Side found that appellant failed to prove that the cheque was a forgery and gave them a decree for Rs. 241-9-9 only, allowing special costs against them.

The appellants appeal on the ground that they succeeded in proving that the cheque was a forgery and that respondents were negligent in cashing it.

On the first of these grounds we may say at once that we are of opinion that the cheque was in fact a forgery, it was torn out together with the counterfoil and apparently also with the next following cheque and counterfoil from the end of appellant's cheque book. We have examined the signature carefully comparing it with the large number of undoubted signatures of Lodhia which are on the record and we find that it bears all the marks of a forgery. The loop in the middle of the initial " H." the upstroke of the initial "V" the break between the "v" and "I" the break in the upstroke of the letter "d"; the break between that letter and the following letter "h", all these peculiarities distinguish it from the genuine signatures of H. K. Lodhia which are all written with a break from the last stroke of the "h" to the finish of the penultimate" writing " and they are all in our opinion indications of efforts in effecting the forgery. The spelling of the word "hundred" does not occur in any of the genuine cheques and although the body of the cheques may usually have been filled in by a clerk and not by Lodhia himself the difference indicates that the cheque was not written up by the usual clerk, or in the usual manner, renders it probable that the forger was an Indian, since the short "u" sound in English is written by Indians with an "a."

We, therefore, find that the cheque which respondents cashed was a forgery and we have to consider whether they or appellants must bear the loss.

There are divergences of opinion between The House of Lords in London Joint Stock Bank Ltd. v. Macmillan and Arthur (1) and the Privy Council in Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Marshall (2) as to the extent of a customer's duty to his banker, but it seems to be well settled that before a banker can debit his customer's account with the amount of a forged cheque he must prove negligence on the part of his customer which was intimately connected with the drawing or encashment of the cheque which was the proximate cause of the loss.

In the case of the Kepitigalla Rubber Estaes Limited v. The National Bank of India Limited (3) in which the facts were similar to those of the present case, it was said that in order to make the customer liable for the loss the neglect on his part must be in or intimately connected with the transaction itself and must have been the proximate cause of the loss, and it was suggested that there was no authority for the proposition that beyond the care which must be taken in the transaction itself a customer must in the course of carrying on his business take reasonable precautions to prevent his servants from forging his signature.

In the case of the Punjab National Bank Limited v. The Mercantile Bank of India Limited (4) the manager of the former Bank used to leave the Accountant with blank drafts and blank letters of advice, ready signed by him for use as occasion required and the Accountant filled up these documents fraudulently with the result that the Mercantile Bank cashed certain drafts, it was held that it was not incumbent on the customer to contemplate the perpetration of such a crime as a forgery or theft and that the negligent act of the Manager was not the proximate cause of the draft being cashed, and it was decided that the Mercantile Bank must bear the loss.

In the case of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland v. The Trustees of Evans' Charities in Ireland (5) the House of Lords says: "If a man who loses his cheque book or neglects to look the desk in which it was kept and a servant or stranger should take it up it is impossible in our opinion to contend the banker paying his forged cheque would be expected to charge his customer with that payment."

We are of opinion that the principle laid down in this case is sufficient for the disposal of this appeal. All that was alleged against appellants on the score of negligence was that they or their agent were negligent in the custody of their cheque book and of their rubber stamps which were used on their cheques. Even if that were proved it would not, on the authorities which we have cited, be sufficient to charge appellants with the loss which resulted from the forgery of a cheque stolen from their cheque book and the fraudulent use of their stamps. There can in our opinion be no doubt that the cheque in this case was so stolen and forged, and as the respondents cashed the forged cheque and have not been able to establish such negligence as would in law render appellants liable, they must bear the loss.

We, therefore, set aside the judgment and decree in the suit and give judgment for Costs in the cause, meaning of—Interlocutory order—Decree in favour of one party—Costs, award of.

The words " costs in the cause " in an order made in an interlocutory proceeding do not mean that the costs would inevitably follow the event, but that those costs remain to be dealt with by the Court at the hearing, the Judge at the trial having still power to deal with such costs.

Where, however, an order has been made in an interlocutory proceeding that costs will be costs in the cause, and a decree is passed in favour of one side or the other for costs, then those costs must be taken as being included in the final order unless the Judge expressly excludes them.

Application against the order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad, in Darkhast No. 388 of 1923.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—A suit was filed by the present petitioner-plaintiff in the Small Cause Court at Ahmedabad to recover Rs. 154 on a promissory-note. The Judge awarded only Rs. 45-12-0, calculating the rate of interest at nine per cent. An application was made in revision to this Court which held that the rate of interest was insufficient and sent back the case to the lower Court for disposal having regard to the observations made in the judgment, and further directed that the costs in the High Court were to be costs in the cause. Thereupon the learned Judge raised the amount of interest to eighteen per cent. and passed a decree in favour of the petitioner for Rs. 61-6-6 with proportional costs. These costs would necessarily include the costs incurred in the High Court. The petitioner then filed a Darkhast to recover the decretal amount and costs, including therein the costs in the High Court which came to Rs. 37-13-0. That application was wrong to this extent that the plaintiff could only recover proportional amount of the High Court costs under the decree of the Small Cause Court. The Judge in execution disallowed costs incurred in the High Court on the ground apparently that his predecessor who had passed the decree had refused to allow Rs. 37-13-0.

We may refer to the decision in Templeton v. Laurie (1) where it was held that the words "costs in the cause" in an order made in interlocutory proceeding do not mean that the costs would inevitably follow the event, but that those costs remain to be dealt with by the Court at the hearing, the Judge at the trial having still power to deal with such costs. That is perfectly correct. But when an order has been made in an interlocutory proceeding that costs will be costs in the cause, and a decree is passed in favour of one side or the other for costs, then those costs must be taken as being included in the final order unless the Judge expressly excludes them. The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to have this item of Rs. 37-13-0 included in the total amount of costs when the calculation was made of the proportionate part which was due to him under the decree.

We must, therefore, set aside the order made in the Court below, and direct that costs, a proportionate part of which was awarded to the plaintiff, would include the High Court costs. Rule absolute. No order as to costs of this application.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 31st January 1918.

Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the cases out of which these three second appeals, Nos. 1452, 1453, and 1454 of 1918, have arisen are stated in ample detail in the judgments of the Courts below, and need not, therefore, be repeated here at length. Briefly stated they are as follows :—

One Raja Badan Singh was the ala malik of mauza Shahna in the Ludhiana tahsil of the same district. There were certain lands in this village which were till recently held by certain adna maliks who have now died heirless, and the sole question for determination in these appeals is whether or not on the death of an adna malik, who has died heirless, the land held by him reverts to the ala malik free of all encumbrances created by the former, if any. In one case, which has given rise to appeal No. 1452, the dispute related to 61 bighas 2 biswas of land held by Mt. Indi, widow of one Bela. Mt. Indi died in September 1910, without leaving any heirs. Upon her death, the land was mutated in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 16 who belonged to the same Got as her deceased husband Bela. During his life-time Bela had created certain mortgages in favour of defendants Nos. 9 to 12, 14, 17, 18 and 19, and the plaintiff's case was that he was entitled to possession of this land as ala malik, and that the mortgages created by the deceased were not binding upon him.

In the second suit the dispute was in respect of 45 bighas 19 biswas of land in this very village. One Sadna, who was the adna malik of this land, died heirless in May 1915, and on his death the land was mutated in favour of the plaintiff as ala malik in June 1916. The defendants were, however, in possession as mortgagees, and the plaintiff brought the suit alleging that the mortgage had been extinguished on the extinction of the adna malkiyat, and that he was entitled to get possession free of any encumbrance.

In the third suit one Mt. Bhagwani had executed a deed of gift in favour of one Tulsi, defendant No. 2, and the plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration that the gift was invalid and that it would not affect his reversionary rights as ala malik after the death of the widow.

The suits were resisted on a variety of grounds, but the main contentions, with which we are now concerned in these appeals, were :—

(1) That the plaintiff was not an ala malik.

(2) That he had no right of reversion in respect of these lands.

(3) That in any case the mortgages were binding and that the plaintiff was not entitled to get possession free of the encumbrances created by the adna maliks. Both the Courts below have concurred in holding that the plaintiff is an ala malik, but they have also found that he is only entitled to a certain percentage on the revenue by way of quit-rent, and that he has no right of reversion in respect of these lands. In this view of the case all the three suits have been dismissed.

The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court and it has been contended on his behalf that the finding of the Court below that he was only entitled to a certain amount of percentage on the revenue by way of quit-rent and that he had no right of reversion is erroneous and that in coming to this finding the Court has entirely misread and misconstrued certain documents on the record.

A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondents that the finding of the Court below on the question of plaintiff's status is a finding of fact and that it cannot be attacked in second appeal. In our opinion this contention is well founded and must prevail. In the case of Hira v. Chahnnu (1), it has been held by a Bench of this Court that there are two ways in which the classes of ala maliks and adna maliks are created in a village :—First, where the ala maliks so called are mere talukdars whose ancestors have been farmers of revenue or conquerors who have been content to leave all the management, etc., of the lands to the conquered peasantry and to take quit-rents. Secondly, where the ala maliks, originally the sole proprietors of the soil of the village have called in outsiders and settled them on some or all of the lands. It has further been held that it is only in cases of the latter class that an ala malik is entitled to the right of reversion and in no other case. The plaintiff's contention is that he is an ala malik of the latter class, and in support of this contention he relies upon certain entries in the Revenue records of 1856 and 1882. These entries have been fully considered by the Court below, and the finding is that they are of no value in view of the subsequent orders passed by the Commissioner and the Financial Commissioner. In our opinion, the District Judge was fully entitled to reject a particular piece of evidence and to hold that it did not support the case of the plaintiff. With regard to the conclusion drawn by the learned District Judge from the Revenue papers, it should be borne in mind that there is a distinction between conclusions of fact and conclusions of law. It has been held in Chatenay v. The Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co. (2) that the expression 'construction' as applied to a document includes two things : First, the meaning of the word ; and secondly, their legal effect. The meaning of the words is in all cases a question of fact. The effect of the words is a question of law. In the present case there is no question of the legal effect of a document, and unless there is a question of the legal effect of a document which may be treated as a document of title or embodies a contract or is the foundation of a suit, a second appeal does not lie. It is contended by Mr. Abdul Aziz, that the lower Appellate Court has mistaken the meaning of the Revenue records in question. It is, however, clear that a second appeal is not admissible merely because some portion of the evidence is in writing of which the meaning has been mistaken by the lower Appellate Court. In our opinion, the decision of the District Judge does not involve any error of law, and there is no ground for a second appeal.

We accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs.

Bombay Mamlatdars' Courts Act (II of 1906) s. 23—Order of Mamlatdar—Interference by Collector, when justified—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Under section 23 of the Bombay Mamlatdars' Courts Act, a Collector can set aside an order made by a Mamlatdar only if he considers that it is illegal or improper. The mere fact that the Mamlatdar has entered upon complicated questions does not entitle the Collector to set aside his order. However complicated the questions may appear to be the Mamlatdar is entitled to give possession to one party or the other, and there is nothing improper or illegal in such an order.

When a Revenue authority has clearly exceeded the powers granted under the Act, the High Court should interfere in the ends of justice.

Application against an order of the Collector, East Khandesh, setting aside an order of Mamlatdar, Bhusaval, in Vahivat Suit No. 2 of 1922.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, with Mr. S. G. Desai, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. C. Joshi, with Mr. P. S. Bakhale for Mr. D. C. Virkar, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Collector acting under the powers given under section 23 of the Bombay Mamlatdars' Courts Act (Bom. Act II of 1906) set aside an order made by the Mamlatdar in favour of the plaintiff in Vahivat Suit No. 2 of 1922. The Collector can only set aside such an order, if he considers that it is illegal or improper. The ground on which the Collector set aside the order according to the judgment, was that the Mamlatdar had entered upon complicated questions which were entirely outside the province of the Act, and which ought to have been referred to a Civil Court. If that decision were to stand, then it practically deprives the Mamlatdars of the power to decide who should be in possession of the disputed property until the questions in dispute have been finally determined by the civil Court. However complicated the questions may appear to be, he is entitled to give possession to one party or the other. That is entirely within his jurisdiction. There is nothing improper or illegal in such an order. We think, therefore, although we are averse to interfere with the decision of the Revenue authorities in a suit of this character, that when they have clearly exceeded the powers granted under the Act, we should interfere in the ends of justice. The rule is made absolute and the order of the Mamlatdar restored with costs.

In a suit for recovery of money due on a promissory-note the Court found that the promissory-note sued on was a forgery but gave the plaintiff a decree on the basis of the oral settlement made between the parties before the promissory-note was given.

Held, that the suit was based throughout on the promissory-note and this having been found to be a forgery, the claim must necessarily fail. (p. 267, col. 2).

LAKSHMAN MARUTI JADHAR v. MARUTI LAKSHMAN TELI

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued for money on a promissory note, which he alleged had been executed by the defendant in consideration of certain sums due under a mortgage and a bond and a decree. The defendant denied having executed the promissory note. The plaintiff was examined and stated that he could not say on oath whether the promissory note produced by him was the same which the defendant had executed. He said that the defendant after executing the promissory note went inside the house, telling him that he would show the note to his mother to explain the account to her, and that he came out after some minutes and gave him the note. He suggested that the defendant might possibly have substituted a forged promissory note for the one which he had written. The document was sent by the lower Court to the Finger Print Bereau at Allahabad and the opinion received was, that the finger prints on the document did not agree with those of the defendant. The Subordinate Judge has accordingly found that the promissory note in suit is a forgery, and he has come to the conclusion that the defendant substituted it for the one which he had written. He has, however, held that the plaintiff is entitled to sue on the oral settlement made before the promissory note was given, and on the basis of that settlement he has given the plaintiff a decree for the full amount claimed. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

Mr. Rozdon, on behalf of the respondent, has presented an application in which he says that the appeal has been adjusted and the case compromised by the execution of a bond and a mortgage-deed by the appellant, but it appears that all that was settled by the execution of the bond and the mortgage-deed was the matter of the execution of the decree, which had been stayed by the order of this Court conditionally on the appellant furnishing security and there is nothing in those documents to show that the suit or the appeal had been adjusted. It appears that they were executed only for the purpose of satisfying the decree so as to prevent the respondent from putting the appellant's property to sale until his appeal was disposed of and their execution is no bar to the hearing of the appeal.

The appeal has been heard ex parte as Mr. Rozdon appeared only in support of the application mentioned above, and in our opinion it must succeed. It is not necessary for us to determine whether the plaintiff would be entitled to sue on the basis of the oral settlement, which he alleges was made before the promissory note was given. The point is that he is not in fact suing on that settlement, and the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in thinking otherwise. The plaintiff has nowhere stated that he wished to change the basis of his suit and fall back on the oral settlement, nor has he asked to be allowed to amend his plaint. The suit has been based throughout solely on the promissory note, and when it has been found that the promissory note sued upon is a forgery, the claim must necessarily fail. There is consequently no need to go into the merits of the case.

We accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Court, and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

RAM LAKHAN v. JANKA

JUDGMENT.—This rule must be discharged with costs. Section 115 of the Code does not apply to an order of a Court refusing to grant a review of its decision. The application for review was based on the allegation that the present applicants could bring evidence of Parvati's remarriage. There is no reason, as the Judge finds, why Parvati was not called when the case was decided. The Judge said :—

"I am of opinion that as Parvati's existence was known to plaintiffs, as their heirship to Ganpati was disputed and there was an expression on it, it was their duty to produce evidence of Parvati's remarriage in the lower Court. They produced no evidence. The lower Court found in their favour without sufficient evidence and when the finding was set aside in revision they cannot be allowed to produce the evidence now. Supposing a finding of fact by a lower Court is reversed in appeal the party affected cannot be allowed to produce further evidence, which he might have produced in the lower Court. There was nothing to prevent the plaintiffs' producing Parvati as a witness in the lower Court, as she has been produced here, and if she refused to come, persons who were aware of her remarriage should have been called. But the plaintiffs made no effort to do so. If the lower Court had found against them on the question of heirship on the ground that Parvati's remarriage was not proved they would not have been allowed to produce further evidence on this point in revision."

That is a perfectly correct statement of the law. The Judge having refused to grant a review on the ground that the evidence ought to have been produced in the lower Court, was justified in his decision.

Where a Munsif possessing Small Cause Court powers is transferred and the decree is made by his locum tenens who does not possess such powers, while a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court exists in the district, the decree is ultra vires. (p. 269, col. 1).

Application for revision of the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Gonda, dated the 31st January 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 133 of 1923, preferred against the decree of the Munsif, Utraula, dated the 16th March 1923.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's application arising out of a suit for the recovery of Rs. 69 from the defendants on the basis of a parol transaction of loan. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes.

The Munsif, however, left the Court on transfer before he could decide the suit. His locum tenens had no such jurisdiction but he proceeded with the suit under directions from the District Judge and decided it in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed from the decree of the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, who heard the appeal, allowed it and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The argument before me is, as it was in the Court below, that the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction to try the suit under its original civil jurisdiction and that the decree which that Court passed must be deemed to be one of a Small Causes Court and, therefore, was not appealable.

I am of opinion that the contention must be allowed though with different results. When the Munsif, who was invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, was transferred and his successor was not possessed of the same jurisdiction, it is clear to my mind that the provisions of section 35 of the Provincial Small Couse Courts Act (IX of 1887) applied. The suit should, therefore, have been tried by a Court in which it might have been instituted in the absence of the Court in which it was as a matter of fact instituted ; the suit being one which could only be tried by a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes could not have beed instituted in the Court of Munsif not invested with that jurisdiction nor could it have been instituted in any other Court than the Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes if such a Court were in existence having local jurisdiction over the suit. This is the effect of section 16 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887). It is admitted that the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda had such a jurisdiction. The result is, that the decree by the Court of first instance was ultra vires and the appeal from that decree was equally incompetent. I ,therefore, allow this application, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and send the suit to the Court of Subordinate Judge of Gonda, exercising jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes for disposal according to law. As this application was resisted in this Court by the defendant No. 1, Mst. Janka, she must pay the plaintiff's cost here. Other costs hitherto incurred and to be incurred hereafter will abide the event.

The whole of the proceedings under Act XIX of 1841 are interlocutory depending upon the filing of an application for relief asking the Court to determine who has the right to possession pending the final determination of the rights of the parties in a regular suit. (p. 271, col. 1).

Considering the wide powers that are now given to the Courts to make interlocutory orders in regular suits, an application for relief under Act XIX of 1841 should not now be entertained. The Act is really out of date, and there is no necessity whatever for parties claiming the estate of a deceased person to have recourse to it. The relief which is properly open to them is to file an administration suit, and apply for the appointment of a Receiver, in which case the question will be, who should be given possession until the dispute between the parties has been decided in the suit. Then the Court can by an interlocutory order either appoint a Receiver and so take the property into its own possession, or it can allow any of the disputing parties to have possession on such terms as it may think fit. (p. 270, col. 2).

Mr. G. N. Thakor, with Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Applicants.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—The original applicants in this case were the widow and three daughters of one Haji Nabi, who died in or about the month of October 1922 at his residence, within the jurisdiction of the District Court of Broach. The application purported to be made under Act XIX of 1841. It stated that deceased had died leaving a considerable amount of property, that opponent No. 1, who was the nephew of the deceased, together with two daughters by a previous wife of the deceased residing with him, had taken into possession all the property of the deceased with the intention of appropriating it to himself, and prayed that an inventory of the estate and effects of the deceased Haji Nabi Miyaji should be made and some officer of the Court appointed as curator of the property belonging to the deceased. It is true that the applicants prayed for any other relief that might be deemed fit and proper to be granted. But that prayer can only be read in conjunction with the main prayer for the relief which was for the appointment of a curator and the taking of an inventory.

On that application an order for inventory was made after hearing opponent No. 1 on December 18, 1922. On September 6, 1923, an order was made by the District Judge at the applicants' request which runs as follows:—

"Whereas on the application of Bai Havabai widow of Nabi Miyaji danger is apprehended that before the summary suit can be determined there is danger of waste or misappropriation of the property by the opponent No. I, Mahomedbhai Pirbhai, who is alleged to have taken all the property, and though his pleader has made various promises which he has never carried out, I order that the said Mahomedbhai do furnish security to the extent of two lakhs within three days or a Curator will be appointed. This embodies the oral order issued by the Court on Thursday 30th August 1923."

Against this order the original opponent No. 1 has applied to us in revision. It has been contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction under the Act to make the order, on the ground that the opponent No. 1 was an heir of the deceased, and was entitled to be in possession of the whole, until the question had been decided how the estate should be distributed. There might have been some weight in that argument had it not been that the first opponent had claimed a half share of the property as belonging to himself during the life-time of the deceased. He was, therefore, setting up a claim to at least half the property against the heirs.

But the real objection to the order of the District Judge is that no summary suit has been filed as contemplated by the Act. The Act is really out of date, and there is no necessity whatever for parties claiming the estate of a deceased person to have recourse to it. The relief which is properly open to them is to file an administration suit, and apply for the appointment of a receiver, in which case the question will be, who should be given possession until the dispute between the parties has been decided in the suit. Then the Court can by an interlocutory order either appoint a receiver and so take the property into its own possession, or it can allow any of the disputing parties to have possession on such terms as it may think fit.

Now the scheme of Act XIX of 1841 seems to us to be as follows. First a person must have died possessed of moveable and immoveable property, and the same must have been taken or alleged to have been taken upon some pretended claim of right by gift or succession. Then the Act contemplates that it shall be open to any persons claiming a right by succession to the property of the deceased, to make application to the Judge of the Court of the district where any part of the property is found or situate for relief, and that application for relief must clearly take the nature of a plaint in a summary suit.

Then section 3 states what should be done after a party has applied to a Court for relief. The Judge to whom such application shall be made shall, in the first place, enquire by the solemn declaration of the complainant, and by witnesses and dcoument at his discretion, whether there be strong reasons for believing that the party in possession or taking forcible means for seizing possession has no lawful title, and that the applicant, or the person on whose behalf he applies, is really entitled and is likely to be materially prejudiced if left to the ordinary remedy of a regular suit, and that the application is made bona fide.

Under section 4, the Judge if he is satisfied of the existence of such strong ground for belief, but not otherwise, shall cite the party complained of, and give notice of vacant or disturbed possession by publication, and after the expiration of a reasonable time shall determine summarily the right to possession (subject to a regular suit as thereinafter mentioned), and shall deliver possession accordingly. Then the section goes on to give the Judge interlocutory powers pending the summary determination of the right to possession, to appoint an officer who shall take an inventory of the effects, whether he shall have concluded the enquiry necessary for citing a party complained of or not.

Under sec. 5 the Judge can appoint one or more curators whose authority shall in no case continue beyond the determination of the summary suit, and under section 6 the Judge can authorize the curator to take possession of the property generally, or until security be given by the party in possession, or until inventories of the property shall have been made, or for any other purpose necessary for securing the property from misappropriation or waste by the party in possession, provided always that it shall be entirely discretionary with the Judge whether he shall allow the party in possession to continue in such possession on giving security, or not.

So that the whole of these proceedings are interlocutory depending upon the filing of an application for relief asking the Court to determine who has the right to possession pending the final determination of the rights of the parties in a regular suit.

There has been in this case no application to the Court for the primary relief which it was intended by the Act the Court should give to a person claiming a right to the estate of a deceased person. The whole of this proceeding, which is of an interlocutory nature, is misconceived, because assuming that this order made by the District Judge directing opponent No. 1 to give security were confirmed, there is nothing further for the Court to do.

There is no application or pleading on which a further order could be made. It is perfectly clear that interlocutory proceedings cannot be filed until the plaint or proceeding on which they depend has first been placed on record. So that, therefore, in our opinion, the learned Judge has misconceived the nature of these proceedings, and had no jurisdiction to make the order in the case. We think, considering the wide powers that are now given to the Courts to make interlocutory orders in regular suits, that an application for relief under the Act should not be entertained, because under section 3 the Judge has to be satisfied that the applicant is really entitled to the property, and is likely to be materially prejudiced if left to the ordinary remedy of a regular suit. Now it cannot be said that any person in such a position is likely to be materially prejudiced if he is told to file a regular suit, because if he proceeds with ordinary diligence, he can ask for relief of an interlocutory nature in that suit.

The rule is made absolute and the order of the lower Court set aside. There will be no order as to costs.

Per Pullan, A. J. C.—It is doubtful whether sub-section (10) b of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act is intended to apply to suits which are not brought against the landlord. (p. 273, col. 2).

The provisions of the Oudh Rent Act would be rendered nugatory if a party were allowed to let slip the remedy afforded by sub-section (10) of section 108 against the party from whom his relief can be obtained and institute proceedings in Civil Courts against another party who is entirely unconcerned with that relief. Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Kendall, A. J. C.—This appeal arises from a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed possession of a certain occupancy tenancy in the following circumstances :—

The whole of the occupancy holding used to belong to one Dirgaj Singh, and it is not now in dispute that the plaintiffs and a non-contesting defendant became entitled to the holding on the death of Dirgaj Singh in the proportion of 3|4 and 1|4. Dirgaj Singh died in 1914. The plaintiffs—appellants, however, only succeeded in obtaining possession of 1|4 of the occupancy holding, while the respondents secured one half, and the remaining 1|4 fell to the share of the non-contesting defendant. The plaintiffs' suit for possession of the one half in the hands of the respondents was met in the first place by the plea that the suit being one for possession of an occupancy holding, should have been brought in the Revenue Court and not in the Civil Court. The first Court disallowed this plea, but the learned District Judge on appeal has upset that finding and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The appeal has been argued before us solely on the question of jurisdiction.

Dirgaj Singh died in 1914, and the plaintiffs have never been in possession of the property in suit. The learned Judge has pointed out that sub-section 10 (b) of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act.....which came into force with the U. P. Act 4 of 1921.....is apparently intended to cover a suit for occupancy of a holding by a person claiming such occupancy as the heir of the deceased tenant of the holding, whether such suit is brought against the landlord or the tenant. The wording of the section certainly lends force to this view. It is argued on behalf of the appellants, that the section is only intended to apply to suits brought against the landlord. It is suggested that it is to be read in connection with section 48 of the Act, and further that the word "Occupancy" has been loosely used for "possession."

In support of this line of argument, a number of decisions have been referred to with a view to showing that suits between tenants for possession of agricultural holdings should be brought in Civil Court Kalap Nath v. Mata Din (1), Ashiq Ali v. Ghulam Sarwar (2) Lachhmin v. Ram Singh (3) and Gaya Din, Singh v. Chanharja Pande (4). Several of these are not very much to the point at issue in the present appeal, or are previous in date to the amendment of the Oudh Rent Act by which sub-section 10 (b) of section 108 was added. In Gaya Din v. Chanharja Pande (4), a single Judge of this Court held that a dispute between two parties, both claiming to be tenants of the same land under the same zemindar, where the claimant has never held possession of the land, is within the jurisdiction of the civil and not of the Revenue Court. The learned Judge came to this conclusion reluctantly because he believed the intention of the Legislature to have been that cases of this kind should be decided by a Revenue Court and he referred to Kalap Nath v. Mata Din (1). He added, "If this were a case in which the plaintiff might by impleading the Zamindar have filed a suit in the Revenue Court under section 108, sub-section 10 of the Oudh Rent Act, I might have been inclined to think in spite of that decision that such a suit was his true remedy. In this case, however, the plaintiff has never been ejected, for he has never held possession. It is not suggested that there is another provision of the Oudh Rent Act under which the suit might have been brought." The suit concerned in that appeal was evidently brought before the amendment of the Oudh Rent Act, and it appears that if the present sub-section 10 (b) of section 108 had been in force, and could have been applied, the learned Judge's decision would have been different. In Ashiq Ali v. Ghulam Sarwar (2), it was held by a single

BIKARMAJIT SINGH v. BANSRAJJ

Judge of this Court that " Section 108 sub-section 10 (b) of the Oudh Rent Act has no application to a suit for the recovery of an occupancy tenure based on title, where the plaintiff has not been in actual occupation or possession of the tenure." That was a suit in which the question of title between the parties was somewhat complicated, and the learned Judge based his decision on Chandrika Bakhsh Singh v. Raghunath Kunwar (5). In the course of his judgment, however, the learned Judge remarked, " Clause 10 (b) has been added to make suits for occupancy of a holding by a person claiming such occupancy as the heir of the deceased tenant of the holding, cognisable by a Revenue Court." He goes on to point out that a Bench of this Court held in Raghubar Dayal v. Chandan (6) that a person must have been in occupation of the land at the time of the ejectment to give jurisdiction to the Revenue Court to try a suit by him for the recovery of the occupancy of the land, and that a suit for possession by the heirs of an occupancy tenant was triable by the Civil Court, but that the Legislature has now enacted that such a suit should be tried by the Revenue Court.

Much stress has been laid on these two decisions and in connection with the second one it has been pointed out that the defence undoubtedly raised questions of title, which could be more properly contested in a Civil Court than in a Revenue Court. Not only was it denied that the plaintiff was not the nearest reversioner of Dirgaj Singh, but it was alleged that there had been a family arrangement or settlement under which the contesting defendant had succeeded to half the occupancy holding.

Now it is not denied that the plaintiffs would have to sue in the Revenue Court if they had made the landlord a party to the suit, and it appears that they might in 1914, or at any time within a year after Dirgaj Singh's death, have sued him under sub-section (10) of section 108 for the recovery of the occupancy, if the landlord had put in another tenant. The plaintiffs did not attempt to obtain possession of the holding. They simply slept on their rights for nearly 10 years. They could not expect the landlord to allow the land to lie fallow. If the appellant's interpretation of the law is followed to its logical conclusion, it would seem that an heir to an occupancy tenant may sleep on his rights for a period limited only by Article 144 of the Limitation Act, and at any time within that period sue in the Civil Court for the ejectment of any tenant whom the landlord has put in to cultivate the holding, in which the plaintiff claims an occupancy right. It is difficult to see what would happen to the tenant's statutory right in such circumstances. It is argued that the landlord has not been impleaded, because no relief is claimed as against him, but it is impossible to hold that the landlord is not affected. We have heard the learned Counsel for the appellants at considerable length, and have been impressed by some of his arguments, but the conclusion that we have arrived at is that sub-section 10 (b) of section 108 was not intended to be limited to suits against a landlord, and that a suit for possession of an occupancy holding is intended to be brought under that section and to be decided in the Revenue Courts. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Phullan, A. J. C.—I am in general agreement with the reasoning of my learned brother and in the order which he proposes, but I am not convinced that sub-section 10 (b) of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act is intended to apply to suits which are not brought against the landlord, nor do I consider that a decision on this point is necessary in the case before us.

It is established law, that rival tenants must fight out their cases in the Civil and not in the Revenue Courts, but the present suit is not one between rival tenants. It is a suit in which the plaintiff wishes to show that he is the heir of the deceased occupancy tenant and entitled to inherit his occupancy holding. This is essentially a suit between the plaintiff and the landlord, for it is only between the landlord and the tenant that the question of occupancy rights can arise. The plaintiff in this suit describes the defendant as a trespasser on the land which he, the plaintiff, has inherited by virtue of a right of occupancy. But this is not his real case. The defendant is merely a figurehead whom he has substituted for the landlord against whom his real relief lies. Whether he has or has not inherited occupancy rights is not a matter which concerns the defendant but the landlord, through whom the defendant must be held to cultivate the holding. In my opinion, the plaintiff's suit is not bad because he could have brought a suit against this defendant under sub-section 10 (b) of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act but because his real remedy was under that section, or for that matter under clause 10 of the Act before it was amended, against the landlord, and that at no period has he been able to establish a claim for any relief against the present defendant. The provisions of the Oudh Rent Act would be rendered nugatory if a party were allowed to let slip the remedy afforded by the Act against that party from whom his relief can be obtained, and institute proceedings in the Civil Courts against another party who is entirely unconcerned with that relief. The present plaintiff's claim for possession against the present defendant could only arise when he had established his right of inheritance against the landlord.

(5) 18 Ind. Cas. 284 ; 16 O. C. 105.
(6) 10 O. C. 23.

For these reasons in addition to those stated by my learned brother, I am of opinion that the plaintiff was debarred from proceeding against the defendant in the Civil Court and that the appeal was rightly decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

Section 57 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not require the party in whose favour a document is executed to appear at the time of execution before the Registrar, and his absence does not, therefore, invalidate the registration. Section 63A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act provides that after the Sub-Registrar has followed the procedure prescribed for a village-registrar, he shall then register the instrument according to the provisions of the Registration Act This means that he shall register the document as directed in sections 58 to 61 of the Registration Act, but all the necessary preliminaries have to be taken under sections 57 and 59 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act; whereas in the case of any other document, which has to be registered under the Registration Act, the prior formalities required are prescribed by sections 32 and 35 of that Act. (p. 275, col. 1).

Appeal from an order of the Assistant Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 490 of 1920, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Karad, in Civil Suit No. 732 of 1919.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in these appeals is a very technical one. The document which required to be registered under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act, as one the parties was an agriculturist, was written and executed before the Sub-Registrar according to the provisions under section 63A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The parties in whose favour the document was taken were described as Balvantrao, Shankarrao and Ganpatrao Chitnis, residing at Nigdi, by their Vahivatdar Rango Vishnu Aphale. He signed the declaration required by rule 23 of the rules made under section 61 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, as the Vahivatdar of those persons in his own handwriting. Objection was taken at the hearing of the suit, which was filed on this document, that it had not been proved that it had been properly registered.

The suit was accordingly dismissed in the Trial Court. But by the Appellate Court an order was passed that the decree dismissing the suit should be set aside and the case remanded for trial.

We think the whole question turns upon whether section 57 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act requires that the party in whose favour a document is executed is bound to appear at the time of execution before the Registrar, and that if he does not appear, the document cannot be be considered as capable of being properly registered. Whatever was intended by the provisions of section 57 and 59 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which are incorporated in section 53A, the only persons who are bound to appear before the Registrar are the persons who intend to execute any instrument to which the provisions of the Act are applicable. Though the 3rd para of section 57 of the Act provides that "every executant of any such instrument shall appear in person before theVillage-registrar;but every other party thereto may appear either in person or by any agent, being his relative, servant or dependent, whom he has duly furnished with a power of attorney," if such other party is not bound to be present under the 1st para of the section, then it cannot be said that the document is not duly registered according to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, if he does not appear. It may be that that was not the intention of the framers of the Act. But we can only read the Act as it stands. We cannot read into it words, which are not there, merely by implication, or because we think it advisable that those words should be included.

It has been urged that the document after it had been written out before the Sub-Registrar, or by him, and executed and attested according to the Act could not be said to be duly registered until it had been presented by the person claiming under it under the provisions of section 32 of the Indian Registration Act. But section 63A of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act provides that after the Sub-Registrar has followed the procedure prescribed for a Village-registrar, he shall then register the instrument according to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, and that means that he shall register the document as directed in sections 58 to 61 inclusive of the Indian Registration Act. All the necessary preliminaries had to be taken under sections 57 and 59 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, whereas in the case of any other document which has to be registered under the Indian Registration Act prior formalities required are prescribed by sections 32 and 35 of the Indian Registration Act.

We think, therefore, there is no substance in this point raised by the appellant, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an application by the respondent, Avis Mary Kathleen Goulding, who is the wife of the Appellant, that the Appellant do furnish security for the costs of the appeal to the satisfaction of the Registrar of this Court and that until such security is furnished all proceedings in this appeal be stayed.

It appears that an order was made by a learned Judge sitting on the Original Side of this Court that Mrs. Goulding should be the guardiain of her infant daughter Lydia Barbara Goulding who is aged about 6½ years. The Appellant, the father of the infant, has appealed to this Court against that decision.

The petition, which has been filed by the Respondent, states that the Appellant resides in England, and is outside the jurisdiction of this Court and that he has no immoveable or other property in British India. No affidavit has been filed in reply and the learned Counsel, who has appeared for the Appellant, has stated that he is not in a position to deny the allegations to which I have referred.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant however, has taken the point that this Court has no jurisdiction to make the order. His argument was to the effect that O. XLI, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply in the case of an appeal from a learned Judge sitting on the Original Side of this Court but that its operation is confined to appeals from Courts outside Calcutta to this Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction ;and, secondly, that even though this Court might have inherent jurisdiction to make the order, which has been asked for, it could not exercise such jurisdiction until a rule somewhat similar to that which appears to obtiain in the Bombay High Court has been passed by this Court.

In my judgment O. XLI, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code does apply to an appeal from the judgment of a learned Judge sitting on the Original Civil Side, in the absence of any rule of this Court framed in the exercise of the power to regulate its own procedure in its Original Civil Procedure. The only authority which was cited as being contrary to that view is the case of Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (1) which was the decision of a learned Judge of the Madras High Court sitting alone.

Our attention was drawn to the case of Nawab Behram Jung v. Haji Sultan Ali Shustry (2), and from that case it appears that the Bombay High Court has a rule which prescribes that in an appeal from the judgment of a learned Judge on the Original Side the Appellant is required to deposit with the memorandum of appeal a sum of Rs 500 as security for the costs of the Respondent in the appeal or, if more than one, for the costs of each Respondent having different interests. In that case the learned Chief Justice and the other learned Judge, who was sitting with him, came to the conclusion that, inasmuch as the Appellant had complied with the rule as regards the deposit of Rs. 500 and inasmuch as the Respondent had abstained from applying for security of the costs of the original hearing, as he might have done, there was no reason why they should exercise their discretion by ordering that the Appellant should give further security either for the cost of the original hearing and for the costs of the appeal : and the learned Chief Justice concluded his judgment by saying : "We have been referred to no reported case in which such an order has been made, and we do not think (although we do not doubt our power if it were necessary in the interests of justice to make such an order) that a case has been made out for such an order at present."

It seems to me that that case is an authority against the contention which has been put forward by the learned Counsel for the Appellant. That case, as I read it, is not an authority that O. XLI, r. 10. Civil Procedure Code does not apply to such a case as that which we are now considering. It is an authority for the proposition that the rule which was made by the High Court for depositing Rs. 500 was inconsistent with O. XLI, r. 10 ; but in my judgment, it is not necessary for us to consider the matter at any length, because, in my opinion, there is a decision of this Court which covers this matter.

Our attention was drawn at the end of the argument to the case of In re Goberdhone Seal (3) which was a decision of Mr. Justice Woodroffe, Mr. Justice Mookerjee and myself and the judgment which was appealed from was delivered by Mr. Justice Chowdhury sitting on the Original Side. The learned Judge held that the sale, which was the subject of the enquiry, by the insolvent to his wife was a fictitious sale and he also held that the transfer by Sorbasundari in the name of Lakhypriya, the appellant, was a fictitious one; and he held that both the transfers were void as against the Official Assignee. Against that Lakhypriya preferred an appeal. My learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe delivered the judgment of the Court. An application was made for security for the costs of the appeal and in that case the learned Counsel, who appeared to oppose the application, relied upon the case of the Madras Court on which the learned Counsel in this case relied and Mr. Justice Woodroffe said as follows:—"The application is opposed both on grounds of law and fact. As regards the first question the point is whether O. XLI, r. 10 applies to the case of an appeal from an order passed by a Judge in insolvency under Act III of 1909. Section 8 (b) of that Act states that an appeal shall lie in the same way and be subject to the same provisions as an appeal from an order made by a Judge in the ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. The question then is, does the order apply to the latter case? No doubt the case of Sesha Aiyar v. Nagarathna (1) answers this question in the negative. This case was decided prior to the present Code and has not been referred to nor followed so far as we are aware in this Court where the previous practice has been to entertain such applications. Under section 117 of the Code its provisions apply to the High Courts save as provided in parts IX and X. I am of opinion, therefore that we have power to entertain and adjudicate this application under section 117 and O. XLI, r. 10 of the Code. This conclusion is in conformity with the previous practice under which such applications have been adjudicated. It cannot be reasonably held that this Court when sitting in appeal from a decision of the Original Side is deprived of powers necessary to an effective jurisdiction admittedly existent on the Appellate Side of the same Court. For if O. XLI, r. 10 does not apply, there is no other provision applicable and in such a case it would be necessary to invoke the provisions of section 151."

The learned Judge concluded by saying that on the facts of that case security should be required.

In view of these decisions, especially in view of the case to which I have referred In re Goberdhone Seal (3) I have no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain this application and, if it thinks fit, to make an order in respect of it.

We direct that security to the extent of Rs. 500 for costs of the appeal be furnished by the Appellant on or before the 1st June 1924 to the satisfaction of the Registrar. The appeal will not be heard until the security is furnished; and if the security is not furnished by the 1st June the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

The Appellant must pay the Respondent's costs of this application.

Since the delivery of judgment, my attention has been drawn to the case of Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi (4), which is a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and which confirms the opinion which I have already expressed.

Richardson, J.—I agree.

The question is, in my opinion, one of procedure; and even if the view were taken that O. XLI, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, does not of its own accord apply to appeals from the Original Side and even in the absence of any rule on the subject made by this Court, under the powers conferred by section 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, I should have been disposed to say that a Court having the general powers of this Court would have ample jurisdiction to demand in proper cases security from an appellant for the costs of the appeal. It appears, however, that it has been decided by this Court in the case to which the learned Chief Justice has just referred that O. XLI, r. 10 does apply to appeals from the Original Side; and, that being so, there is nothing further to be said in the matter. Since judgment was delivered our attention has been called to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sabitri v. Savi (4) which puts the question beyond doubt.

N. H. Order accordingly.

Held (1) that the amendment was not such a variation of the original cause of action as to preclude permission to amend under O. VI, r. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code.

There is no objection to amendments which amplify and develop the original cause of action, so long as they do not vary it. (p. 278, col. 2).

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 11th April 1923, of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Madura, in I. A. No. 103 of 1923 in O. S. No. 85 of 1922.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnasami Iyer and S. R. Muthuswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Iyengar and K. V. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is plaintiff in O. S. No. 129 of 1922 Madura, Sub-Court. He sued to set aside a sale-deed alleging inter alia that 2nd defendant took advantage of his youth.

> "The plaintiff has just attained his majority and the defendants have in collusion cheated him."

After filing this plaint, he had reason to believe that he was a minor at the time of the sale, and applied for leave to amend his plaint accordingly.

Leave has been refused by the Additional Subordinate Judge in the order appealed against dated 11th April 1923 on the grounds that the application was not bona fide and that amendment could not be allowed under O. VI, r. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. There was two months delay between plaintiff's learning his age and making this application, but I do not think that this interval suggests want of good faith.

The real question is, whether the amendment is such a variation of the original cause of action as to preclude a permission to amend under O. VI, r. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The terms of the rule are very wide and permit the Court to allow a party to amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just. It is well recognised as unjust if the defendant is confronted by way of amendment with contentions foreign to the other contentions in the plaint (Venkata rama Rao v. Venkatalingama Nayanim Bahadur Varu (1). But in the present case a plea of minority can scarcely be said to be foreign to the plea of the plaintiff being unable to defend his interests because "he had just attained majority." No doubt the new plea is much stronger (if established) but that is not the point. There is no objection to amendments which justly develop the original cause of action so long as they do not vary it, and there is little variation between

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 703 ; 42 M. L. J. 43;15 L. W. 72; (1922) M. W. N. 42; 30 M. L. T. 204; (1922) A. I. R. (M.) 49.

"they imposed on me because I was just out of my minority."

and

"they imposed on me because I was a minor."

It so happens that a minor is presumed, so to speak, to be imposed upon from the bare fact of his minority and if plaintiff proves the fact, there will be no need to go into the specific allegation of fraud. But nevertheless the essential character of the plea that plaintiff was led into this sale owing to his youth remains unaltered.

I may remark that if this amendment is refused, plaintiff can still obtain leave to withdraw his suit and bring a fresh one on the plea of minority ; so the defendants are not much affected by this decision.

The ruling quoted by the learned Subordinate Judge (Ma Shawe Mya v. Maung Mo Hnaung)(2), hardly seems upon all fours with the present case. There a contract of 1912 was set up and negatived, and the Court was held to have acted irregularly in permitting the plaintiff to set up another contract of 1903. But in that very ruling it is laid down that "full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised" p. 835.

It is also argued that the Court committed no material irregularity. But I think a refusal to exercise its lawful power so as to deprive the plaintiff of what appears to be a vital plea amounts to material irregularity, and I certainly find no proof that the petition to amend was mala fide.

Accordingly I allow the revision petition and order the lower Court to permit plaintiff to amend his plaint as prayed. The counter-petitioners may have their costs (one set).

Under section 72 of the Railways Act, the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss of goods delivered to it to be carried by railway is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 168 of the Contract Act. (p. 280, col. 1).

A finding of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal but it is open to a Court of second appeal to see whether the inference drawn from the facts found is correct. (p. 281, col. 2).

Babus D. N. Chakravarty and Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council for damages for loss sustained by the plaintiff with respect to sixty-eight bales of jute booked by the Eastern Bengal Railway, and consigned to the National Jute Mills. The Plaintiff alleged that he contracted to sell jute to the National Jute Mills and made over sixty-eight bales of jute to the Eastern Bengal Railway at the Khalulbali Station for carriage to the jute mills at Rajgunge and that in the course of transit the jute got damaged in consequence of which the jute mills refused to take the same and the plaintiff had to sell it (after notice to the Railway Administration) at a loss. The loss suffered by the plaintiff has been found to be Rs. 1,822-7-3.

The defendant did not deny that the goods were damaged but the defence shortly stated was that they were damaged by an act of God in a severe cyclone during transit and that he was consequently not liable for damages.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit holding that the defendant did not take proper care of the goods during transit, and that the consequences of the act of God would be avoided had proper care been taken. On appeal that decree was reversed, and the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The facts are not in dispute. The goods after arrival at Chitpur Ghat were transhipped into a boat of the Calcutta Shipping & Landing Company by 10 A. M. on the 20th September 1916 and the boat was detained at the ghat for the day. On the night of the 21st September there was a severe cyclone and the boat sprang leaks as it bumped against the other boats and the jetty to which it was securely fastened during the cyclone. On the 22nd September the leaky boat was towed to Rajgunj where the goods were delivered to the National Jute Mills on the 23rd September. The goods were damaged by water which entered the boat through the leaks, and as stated above they were rejected by the Jute Mills with the consequence that they had to be sold by the plaintiff at a loss.

Under section 72 of the Indian Railways Act IX of 1890, the responsiblity of a Railway Administration for the loss of goods delivered to it to be carried by railway is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 162 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Section 151 of the Contract Act lays down that in all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed and section 152 provides that in the absence of any special contract, the bailee is not responsible for the loss of the things bailed if he has taken the amount of care of it described in section 151.

It is contended before us on behalf of the appellant that the defendant failed to take care of the goods which he was required by law to take. The first ground is that the boat should not have been detained at Chitpur Ghat on the 20th September but should have been despatched at once to Rajgunj as on the morning of the 20th September, intimation was received of an expected storm with in thirty-six hours. It is urged that the 20th September was a fair day, there was only one shower of rain in the afternoon and the distance from Chitpur Ghat to Rajgunj Ghat being about twenty miles the boat could have reached its destination long before the cyclone. But as the learned Subordinate Judge rightly points out the storm was expected within and not after thirty-six hours, the defendant's agents could not know when the storm would come and the storm signal was given evidently to detain the boats at the ghat. It would have been imprudent to start the boat in these circumstances at once, because it might have been overtaken on its way to Rajgunj by the storm which was expected every moment. We are accordingly of opinion that the Defendant could not be liable on this ground.

The second ground urged is that the bales of jute ought to have been unloaded from the boat and stored in the goods shed, at any rate upon the open pontoon with tarpaulins spread over them, and should not have been left in the boat when a cyclone was expected. It appears that after the storm signal was hoisted on the morning of the 22nd September the boat was fastened with the jetty like other boats. The Court of first instance pointed out that coolies were available for the purpose of unloading the boat, and that the goods could have been stored in the goods shed, at any rate placed on the open pontoons, with tarpaulins spread over them which would have saved them from being damaged to any very great extent. But it is found by the Court of Appeal below that in the ordinary course of business boats are not unloaded when the storm signal is hoisted. That being so, this ground also fails.

The third ground is that the defendant in sending the bales of jute in a leaky boat from the Chitpur Ghat to Rajgunj did not act as a man of ordinary prudence would have done under similar circumstances with his own goods.

It is found that the boat while fastened to the jetty at Chitpur Ghat during the cyclone had bumped against the jetty and other boats and had sprung 20 to 30 leaks of 1 or 1½ inches in length. Although the leaks had been caused by bumping due to the cyclone which was beyond the control of the defendant, the defendant as a bailee was bound to use all reasonable care, skill and diligence to avoid the consequences of an act of God, and if there was any damage which is attributable to this breach of duty he is liable for damages. A man of ordinary prudence would not have sent the bales of jute in boat with 20 to 30 leaks of 1 or 1½ inches in length. The Court of first instance found that "the boat was kept afloat by continuous pumping of the water that got into the hold." When the leaks were on the sides, the water would naturally pass over the bales lying about them and no amount of pumping out the water could save them from being wetted. The goods as a matter of fact remained in that condition for thirty hours, and from the letter, Ex. III, addressed by the Mills to Messrs. Ducat and Co., the brokers, we got it that some of the bales when received appear to have been lying in the water. That the goods would be further damaged if sent in such a boat struck even the manji, and he asked for orders for unloading it, but the Agent of the Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co. did not permit him to do so. On the contrary, he sent for a launch and ordered the boat with the cargo to be towed to its destination. That it was a very rash act none possessed with a sense of fitness of things could doubt for one moment. The facts found by the Court of first instance have practically been accepted by the Court of Appeal below. The learned Subordinate Judge observed :—"It appears that the boat was kept afloat by continuous pumping and the goods were delivered to the consignee not long after the storm subsided. No doubt the bales were about thirty hours within the hold of the boat, but that fact does not show that the defendant's agents did not take care of them. As the boat sprang leaks it would have sunk if the pumping was not going on. In these circumstances it cannot be argued that the defendant's agents did not take steps for the protection of the goods. I find that they took steps for the protection of the goods as well as for their speedy delivery to the consignee."

The degree of the care required of a carrier in dealing with goods depends upon and varies with the nature and condition of the thing carried. Had the goods been of such a nature that they would not have been damaged even if carried in a leaky boat, and left in the hold of the boat for thirty hours, the pumping out of the water would be sufficient to show that reasonable care was exercised, because in that case the only thing necessary was to see that the boat was not sunk. But bales of jute would be wetted and damaged by water entering the boat; the defendant's agent must have been perfectly aware of the same. A man of ordinary prudence would not have sent his own jute in a boat with twenty or thirty leaks of 1 or 1½ inches in length and kept the jute in the hold of the boat for thirty hours. The pumping out of the water no doubt saved the boat from being sunk, but it is clear that the goods were damaged by their being despatched in such a leaky boat, as the learned Subordinate Judge himself finds that they were damaged by water which entered the boat through the holes. It was not, and could not, be suggested that a good boat was not available at the Chitpur Ghat, and we think the learned Subordinate Judge upon the facts found should have come to the conclusion that the defendant by despatching the sixty-eight bales of jute in a boat with 20 to 30 leaks, 1 or 1½ inches in length, on its sides and allowing the jute to remain in the hold of the boat for 30 hours did not take as much care of the goods as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the respondent that the finding arrived at by the Court of Appeal below is a finding of fact which cannot be interfered with in second appeal. We are, however, not questioning the facts found, indeed the facts are not in dispute in this case. We are differing as to the inference which the Court below drew from those facts and as to the legal standard of reasonable care set up by it. We think it is open to us to see whether the Court below was right in holding that the defendant in despatching baled jute in a boat with 20 or 30 leaks, 1 or 1½ inches in length, through which water entered into the boat, the jute being left in the hold of the boat for thirty hours, complied with the requirements of section 151 of the Contract Act, merely because there was continuous pumping out of the water which had only the effect of saving the boat.

We are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and below, and we direct accordingly.

Income-Tax Act (XI of 1922) ss. 3, 10 (2) (VII)—Assessment for 1922-23—Value of discarded machinery, exclusion of.

For the purposes of the income-tax assessments for the years 1921-22 and 1922-23, the petitioner Company submitted a printed copy of its audited Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Account for the year ending 30th June 1921. That would form the basis of its final assessment for the year 1921-22 under the Income-Tax Act of 1918, and for the year 1922-23 under section 3 of the Income-Tax Act of 1922. In calculating the profits and gains for the year 1922-23, the Company claimed to deduct a certain sum under section 10 (2) (VII) of the Income-Tax Act of 1922 as representing the value of machinery which had been sold as having become obsolete.

The Commissioner of Income-Tax was of opinion that the profits and gains for the year ending June 30, 1921, for the purposes of the assessment for 1922–23, should be calculated without making that allowance on the ground that that allowance had already been made in computing the income for the year ending June 30, 1921, when making an adjustment for the financial year 1921-22 of the actual income earned by the Company for that year under the provisions of Act VII of 1918 :

Held (1) that under section 3 of the Income-Tax Act of 1922, the assessment for the year 1922-23 must be based on the income, profits and gains of the Company for the previous year, that is to say, the year ending 30th June 1921, and these profits etc. must be calculated according to the provisions of the Act of 1922 ; (p. 283, col. 1).

(2) that, therefore, the Company was entitled to make the deduction under section 10 (2) (VII) of the Act and the fact that under the previous Income-Tax Act the profits and gains for the then current year formed the basis of the assessment for that year, was irrelevant. (p. 283, col. 1).

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-Tax Act XI of 1922 at the instance of the Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents of the Raja Gokaldas Mills, Limited. For the purposes of the income-tax and super-tax assessments for the years 1921-22 and 1922-23 the Company submitted a printed copy of its audited Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Account for the year ending June 30, 1921, and that would form the basis of its final assessment for the year 1921-22 under the Indian Income-Tax Act VII of 1918 and the Super-Tax Act XIX of 1920, and of its assessment for 1922-23 under the Indian Income-Tax Act XI of 1922. We are not concerned in this reference with the assessment for the year 1921-22. We are only concerned to see on what basis the assessment for 1922-23 has to be levied under the Indian Income-Tax Act XI of 1922.

Under section 3 of the Act :—

" Where any Act of the Indian Legislature enacts that income-tax shall be charged for any year at any rate or rates applicable to the total income of an assessee, tax at that rate or those rates shall be charged for that year in accordance with, and subject to the provisions of, this Act in respect of all income, profits and gains of the previous year of every individual, company, firm and Hindu undivided family."

The term " previous year " is defined by section (2) (11), and it is not disputed that for the assessment of the year 1922-23 the " previous year" within the meaning of section 3 was the year ending June 30, 1921. For the purposes of that assessment the income, profits and gains of the Company were to be ascertained for the year ending June 30, 1921.

Section 10 provides how the profits and gains are to be computed and under sub-section (2) the deduction of certain allowances is permitted. Under sub-section (2), sub-clause (vii), allowance could be made in respect of any machinery or plant which, in consequence of its having become obsolete, had been sold or discarded.

It is admitted that the year ending June 30, 1921, the Company had discarded obsolete machinery to the extent of Rs. 72,460-0-0. Therefore in calculating the profits and gains for that year the allowance was permissible, the result was that the profits and gains for that year amounted to Rs. 2,70,223-3-2. The Commissioner of Income-Tax was of opinion that the profits and gains for the year ending June 30, 1921, for the purposes of the assessment for 1922—23, shall be calculated without making that allowance on the ground that that allowance had already been made in computing the income for the year ending June 30, 1921, when making an adjustment for the financial year 1921—22 of the actual income earned by the Company for that year under the provisions of Act VII of 1918. We do not think that the Commissioner of Income-Tax was entitled to take that view. He was only concerned with the assessment for 1922—23 and that assessment was to be based on the income, profits and gains of the Company for the previous year, which, as we have said, was the year ending June 30, 1921. He was bound to calculate the profits and gains according to the provisions of Act XI of 1922, and as the Company were entitled to make that allowance for obsolescence under that Act, the Commissioner was bound to accept their estimate of their profits and gains for that particular year, and the fact that under the previous Income Tax Act the profits and gains for the then current year formed the basis of the assessment for that year, was irrelevant when considering how the Company had to be assessed for the years 1922-23 under Act XI of 1922. Assuming for the moment that the Company had earned a profit in the year ending June 30, 1921, which was non-recurring, and in the nature of a wind-fall, undoubtedly the Commissioner would have had no hesitation in taxing it twice over, once under the Act of 1918 and secondly under Act XI of 1922.

The first question is :—

" Whether having regard to section 10 (2) (vi) (c) of Act of 1922 the Income tax Officer was not bound to allow the Company to deduct the sum of Rs. 72,460 for obsolescence in computing the taxable income of the Company for the assessment of 1922-23 ?"

It is difficult to understand this question. Section 10 (2) (vi) (c) deals with depreciation of plant and buildings, not with obsolescence.

The second question is also unintelligible and unnecessary. It will be simpler for us to state our answer to the reference in the following form :—

This Court is of opinion that the Company were entitled in making their returns for the years 1922—23 on the basis of their income, profits and gains for the year ending June 30, 1921, to deduct an allowance for obsolescence under section 10 (2) (vii).

The Company will be entitled to their costs of the reference.

Costs to be taxed as on the Original Side scale.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 31st August 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 64 of 1922.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Vithal Rao filed a suit for foreclosure on a mortgage on the 8th of December 1920. The property mortgaged consisted of a four-pie share in each of the two villages of Digras and Isassari and two houses in Bigras. The respondent Ganpat Rao was impleaded in that suit as the fourth defendant, as he had subsequently purchased the two houses mortgaged. The two appellants, who are brothers, were also impleaded as the fifth and sixth defendants, being subsequent mortgagees. Their mortgage covered both the village shares and another house, also in Digras but not one of the two mortgaged to Vithal Rao and subsequently sold to the respondent Ganpat Rao.

On the 28th of June 1921 a preliminary decree for foreclosure in Form No. 3 of Appendix D of the Civil Procedure Code was passed against all the defendants and time was allowed for payment up to the 28th of December 1921.

The appellants paid the whole amount into Court on the 21st of December 1921 and it was subsequently withdrawn by the decree-holder. Thereafter on the 15th of March 1922 they applied to be made plaintiffs in the suit and to have a final decree for foreclosure passed in their favour, on the ground that section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act had invested them with all the rights of the original mortgagee including the right to a final decree.

This application was opposed by the respondent Ganpat Rao alone, who not only owned a part of the mortgaged property but also had purchased the preliminary decree and been brought on the record as decree-holder, though he preferred to do these things in the name of his son Bhaskar Rao who is joint with him. The reasons for this tortuous course are not clear, but we are not concerned with the matter. The appellants succeeded in the first Court and were given the final decree for which they prayed, but on appeal by Ganpat Rao to the Court of the District Judge this decree was set aside, and they have now come in Second Appeal to this Court.

The learned District Judge has followed the ruling of the Privy Council in Gopi Narain Khauna v. Babu Bansidhar (1) mentioning also that of the Madras High Court in Sundara Reddiar v. Subbiah Koundan (2) and of the Calcutta High Court in Sarat Chandra Roy v. Nahapiet (3). The judgment of the Privy Council which was delivered in 1905 was based mainly on the consideration that thepayment of the decree bythe puisne mortgagee extinguished it and left him nothing to execute. But whatever the state of things may have been before 1908, since then "it is no longer open to any sort of doubt", as Drake-Brockman, J. C., said in Digambar v. Ganpat (4), "that a mortgage suit is pending at any rate till a final decree is passsd". The consideration that influenced the Privy Council has, therefore, no longer any force. Their Lordships also adverted to the impossibility in that suit of working out the respective rights of the different mortgagees without additions to the decree, which was in what is now called Form 3, and recommended for use in such cases what has since been prescribed as Form 6. But here there is no question of that. The appellants do not wish to enforce their rights under their own mortgage.

In the Madras case mentioned this ruling of the Privy Council was followed without any mention of the change in procedure which had by that time made it obsolete. It is to be noted that the ruling has not been published in the official Indian Law Reports. Between the Calcutta case and the present case I am unable to find any connection. It seems clear then that there is nothing in the Privy Council case to prevent the appellants being made plaintiffs in the suit for the purpose of carrying it on; it was there held that they could not be made decree-holders for the purpose of executing the decree.

The transposition of parties is authorised by r. 10 of O. I of the Civil ProcedureCode, as was explained in Brojendra Kumar Das v. Govinda Mohan Das (5) and under section 74 of the Transfer of Property A t the appellants by their payment of the money due on the mortgage acquired "all the rights and powers" of Vithal Rao in respect of that mortgage, which undoubtedly include the right to carry on the then pending suit on it. For these reasons the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and the final decree for foreclosure passed by the first Court will be restored. The respondent will pay all the costs.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale by person out of possession—Sale for consideration of costs of litigation to recover property—Champerty—Validity of sale—Vendor refusing to join as plaintiff—Suit by vendee, joining vendor as defendant, whether competent.

In India there is no law of Champerty and a transaction by which an indigent person out of possession makes over his property to some other person who is prepared to recover it by paying the costs of the litigation, though involving a claim of a speculative nature, is not invalid in law. (p. 286, col. 1).

Kazim Husain Khan v. Achal Ram, 20 C. 149 : Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan, 27 A. 271 ; 15 M. L J. 197 ; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 774 ; 9 C. W. N. 477 ; 8 O. C. 155. 32 I. A. 118 (P. C.), relied upon.

Where a vendor backs out of his agreement with the vendee to join with the latter as co-plaintiff in recovering possession of the subject-matter of the sale, then is no alternative for the vendee but to sue alone and implead the vendor as a defendant and the suit cannot be said to be defective on that ground. (p. 286, col. 1).

Appeal against the decree, dated the 17th February 1923, in an Appeal No. 19 of 1922, preferred against the decree of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, District Sultanpur, dated the 21st March 1922, in Original Suit No. 255 of 1921.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The transactions out of which this appeal arose are as follows : Chandka Singh, Dwarka Singh and Sheo Dayal Singh were brothers. Chandka Singh left certain property which was held by his widow for her life-time. On her death mutation was effected in the names of Chandka Singh's two nephews Sankata Singh and Indarpal Singh. The latter, however, obtained an alteration of the papers in his own name by setting up a will in his favour. Sankata Singh retaliated by selling half of his share in the property to the present plaintiff for a nominal sum of Rs. 1,000 which would cover the cost of the litigation necessary to recover half of the whole property from the hands of Indarpal Singh. When, however, the plaintiff prepared to bring the proposed suit, Sankata Singh refused to join him and was very evidently won over by his cousin Indarpal Singh. Consequently the plaintiff made Sankata Singh a co-defendant, and he has obtained a decree in his favour for one-fourth of the whole property less a certain sum of money found by the Court of first instance to be due to Sankata Singh as balance of the sale consideration. In appeal only two points have been raised, (1) that the whole transaction was ab initio void as being a sale of a share in litigation and (2) that the plaintiff according to the terms of his agreement could only bring the suit in conjunction with the vendor. The second plea is of little force for it is impossible to make any person join as plaintiff in a suit and all that any plaintiff can do is to implead such a person as co-defendant. This has been done in the present case and the suit is not defective on that ground. It is admitted that under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act a mere right to sue cannot be sold. In India, however, there is no law of champerty and there have been countless cases in which indigent persons have made over property to which they lay claim to some other person who is prepared to pay the costs of litigation. Such is the case reported in Kazim Hussain Khan v. Achal Ram (1) and which was ultimately decided by the Privy Council in the ruling reported in Achal Ram v. Kazim Hussain Khan (2). The present case is similar in character and certainly involves a transfer of property and does not convey a mere right to bring a suit. The rulings cited by the learned Counsel for the appellant deal with cases of pre-emption in Oudh which are governed by a special law, and they have no direct bearing on the present suit. Undoubtedly the plaintiff's claim is in a sense a case of speculation in litigation but it is not of such a nature as to be rendered invalid in law. The transactions out of which the suit arose are no more creditable to the defendants than to the plaintiff, and I am not prepared to interfere with the concurrent findings of the two lower Courts. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. II, r. 2, scope of—"Cause of action", meaning of—Different properties—Different acts of ouster—Separate suits whether barred—Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908) s. 14—Plaint returned for want of jurisdiction—Exclusion of time occupied.

A cause of action refers entirely to grounds set forth in the plaint and has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. (p. 288, col. 2).

A cause of action must be antecedent to the institution of the suit. If the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit the subsequent suit is not barred under O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. (p. 288, col. 2).

Order II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code will have no application where properties are different and plaintiff's rights are infringed at different times by different acts of ouster, because the object of this rule is to give effect to the maxim interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium.

Where a Court returns a plaint for want of jurisdiction the time occupied in that Court counts towards limitation and saves it under section 14 of the Limitation Act.

VENKAT BHAT v. YAMUNA

Mr. B. R. Pendharkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question is whether the present suit is barred by O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. It has been dismissed by both the Courts below on that ground. One Gopibhat had two sons-Narayanbhat and Venkatbhat (plaintiff). Narayanbhat died in 1911. His son Ganpati had predeceased him leaving a widow Mt. Saraswati. Yamunabai (defendant No. 1) is the daughter of Narayanbhat and wife of Kesheobhat (defendant No. 2). The present defendant No. 1 Yamunabai filed Civil Suit No. 187 of 1913 against the said Saraswatibai and the present plaintiff Venkatbhat for possession of the fields Survey Nos. 23 and 29 of mouza Mangrul and a house of mouza Wun besides other properties on the ground that she succeeded to the estate as heir of her father Narayanbhat. She also claimed damages for loss of crops of the fields. The suit was dismissed by the Sub-Judge Yeotmal on 13th November 1914 on the ground that the property was not proved to be the separate property of Narayanbhat and could not, therefore, devolve on his daughter Yamunabai. Both Saraswatibai and Venkatbhat had contended in that suit that Narayanbhat with the advice of Venkatbhat gave to Saraswatibai in 1906 the Mangrul fields for her maintenance and the Wun house for her residence, and that she was in possession of the said property in virtue of that arrangement. Venkatbhat resisted the claim on the ground that the property was vested in him by right of survivorship. The Court came to the conclusion that no partition was proved and, therefore, the property being joint Venkatbhat took it by survivorship to the exclusion of Yamunabai defendant No. 1. Yamunabai's claim thus stood dismissed in 1914 (See Ex. P-3). The fields and the house thus remained in the possession of Saraswatibai till her death. It appears her death took place either on the 3rd or 4th of March 1918.

On 11th May 1918 the present plaintiff Venkatbhat instituted Suit No. 196 of 1918 in the Court of Munsif, Kelapur for possession of Wun House against the present defendants Nos.1 and 2 alleging that it belonged to him and that the defendants wrongfully took possession of a part of the house on 4th March 1918 and of the other part on 23rd March 1918. The defendants disputed the valuation of the house as made in the plaint in that suit and a preliminary inquiry was held on that point. The Court came to the conclusion that the value of the house was Rs. 1,200 and that it was beyond the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court and, therefore, returned the plaint for presentation to the Court of higher jurisdiction of 19th December 1918. Nothing was done after that till 14th July 1920. On 21st July 1920 that plaint was presented to the Court of Sub Judge, Yeotmal along with a petition drawn up under date 14th July 1920 Ex. P-4 which contains the following important allegations which have a great bearing on the question whether O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the present suit. That suit is Civil Suit No. 102 of 1920 of Sub-Judge's Court.

> "After the institution of the suit in the Court of Munsif, Kelapur namely in the month of June 1918 plaintiff was dispossessed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of two fields.

> The plaintiff's title to these fields and the house in suit has been the subject-matter of the previous litigation and has been once adjudicated upon and there would be common question of law and fact with respect of this property. Plaintiff, therefore, prays that he should be allowed to add this cause of action and the relief about possession of these fields in the suit presented to-day as both these causes of action against the same defendant can be conveniently tried in this case and as this course will avoid multiplicity of suit." (The italics are mine.)

Apparently no orders were passed on this application by the Sub-Judge. The suit was, however, decreed against Yamunabai on her admission that the question of Venkatbhat's title to the property was res judicata by reason of the decision in the former suit No. 187 of 1912 but the claim was decreed against her husband also in ignorance of the fact that he had put no appearance and made no such admission. This was on 10th January 1921. Taking advantage of this Kesheobhat appealed to the District Judge urging that the plaintiff could not succeed as against him as he was not bound by the decision in Suit No. 187 of 1913 to which he was not a party. This appeal No. 79 of 1921 was filed on 2nd March 1921 and the case was remanded on 29th September 1921 to permit the defendant Kesheobhat to contest the suit on the merits. After remand the defendant Kesheobhat raised pleas of partition and nuncupative will by Narainbhat in his favour but they failed and the claim was decreed on the merits as against him, on 25th March 1922. Defendant Kesheobhat preferred appeal against the said decree dated 25th March 1922 but without success. The Appellate Court's judgment is dated 17th November 1922.

After the disposal of the suit on 10th January 1921 but during the pendency of the appeal No. 79 of 1921 by Kesheobhat which reopened it the present suit for possession and mesne profits of the fields for three years was instituted by plaintiff against both the defendants on 5th April 1921, in the Court of Munsif, Kelapur. The plaintiff alleged that the fields were in the possession of Saraswatibai for maintenance and that on Saraswatibai's death the plaintiff's right to possession accrued but that as he was dispossessed from the fields by the defendants on 25th June 1918 the defendants were liable to be ejected as trespassers and to pay mesne profits to plaintiff. The defendants amongst other defences pleaded the bar of O. II, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code alleging that the cause of action in the previous suit No. 196|18 and in the present suit was illegal dispossession by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at the time of Saraswatibai's death, and that the plaintiff could not legally split up his claim. The plaintiff alleged that the causes of action were different and that in any case he was not aware of the existence of his cause of action at the time he filed his former suit No. 196 of 1918. This gave rise to issue No. 1 which ran as follows :—

> " Whether the suit is barred by O. II, r. 2? Whether plaintiff got possession of the fields and house on the death of Saraswati and was plaintiff subsequently dispossessed by defendants as alleged by plaintiff?

The first Court found the issue in plaintiff's favour and held that his cause of action was different and arose on 25th June 1918 i.e., after the suit was filed in the Munsif's Court, when he was dispossessed of the fields. That Court disbelieved the evidence adduced by the defendants to show that plaintiff was not dispossessed. The cause of action in the previous suit No. 196 of 1918 related to the house at Wun from which he was ousted on 4th and 23rd March 1918 while the present suit related to the fields at Mangrul from which the plaintiff was dispossessed on 25th June 1918. A cause of action is defined as constituting every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It refers entirely to grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action and has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant; nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. In other words it refers to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. A cause of action must be antecedent to the institution of the suit. See Gobind Ramanju Das v. Debendrabala (1). If the cause of action in the subsequont suit is different from that in the first suit the subsequent suit is not barred. See Mullick Kefait Hossain v. Sheo Pershad Singh (2). It has been held that two separate suits by the plaintiff against the same defendant for possession of two houses acquired under one sale-deed are not barred where his ouster from the two houses on different occasions gave rise to two separate causes of action which he was not bound to join in the former suit, there being nothing in the Civil Procedure Code to compel him to do so. The words subjects in dispute used in O. II, r. 1 must mean in relation to the former suit the house in Wun only, while the same words in relation to the present suit must mean the fields in Mangrul. I have already stated above that the ouster of plaintiff from the Mangrul house was stated to have taken place partly on 4th March 1918 and partly on 23rd March 1918, whereas his ouster from the fields of Mangrul took place as found by the Court of first instance on 25th June 1918. Each of these ousters furnished a separate cause of action to the plaintiff and he was under no obligation to join his several causes of action together. Cf. Riayatulla Khan v. Nasir Khan (3) and Jardine Skinner and Co., v. Rance Shama Soondaree Debia, (4) and Ram Soonder Saha v. J. P. Delanney (5) and Narayan v. Shamrao (6). The infringment by the defendant of the plaintiff's right plays an important part in giving rise to a cause of action and consequently plaintiff could have had no cause of action to sue the defendants for fields until they illegally dispossessed him from them. The result is that until 25th June 1918 plaintiff could not fancy that simply because the defendants took possession of the house at Wun illegally, they dispossessed or must have dispossessed him also from the fields of Mangrul, and include, in the former suit for the house, his claim in respect of the fields also, on the mere ground that his title to both the items of property was common. Where, therefore, properties are different and plaintiff's rights are infringed at different times by different acts of ouster, as in the present case, O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, will have no application, because the object of this rule is to give effect to the maxim interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium. In Brunsden v. Humphrey (7), it was held that damage to goods and injury to person although they have been occasioned by one and the same wrongful act, are infringements of different rights and give rise to distinct causes of action. This clearly shows that where there is some discrepancy in the two causes of action they are different, and they need not be the subject of one suit. The rule merely requires that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action on which the suit is founded, and not that every suit shall include every claim on every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendants in respect of the subject-matter of the suit. As observed by Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (8), the rule is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transaction."

In the plaintiff's application dated 14th July 1920, filed along with the plaint presented on 21st July 1920, plaintiff distinctly stated that the cause of action in respect of the fields was a different cause of action, which arose only by reason of the ouster dated 25th June 1918, and he prayed for permission to add the new cause of action. He was under no obligation to add it, but in his application he has signified clearly that even then, he looked upon his ouster from the house, and his ouster from the fields, as constituting different or separate causes of action. It will thus be seen that the present suit in respect of the fields of Mangrul based as it is upon his ouster therefrom on 25th June 1918, is not barred by O. II, r. 2.

It is, however, argued that if the date of the institution of the suit be taken to be 21st July and not 11th May 1920 the plaintiff's cause of action in respect of the fields was also anterior to the institution of the former suit. I am not, however, prepared to accept this contention as correct. Where a Court returns a plaint for want of jurisdiction the time occupied in that Court counts towards limitation and saves it under section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act from being barred. I, therefore, regard the date of the initial institution of the suit as the date of its institution even for the purposes of the operation of the bar of O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code.

For all these reasons I am of opinion that the suit has been wrongly thrown out as barred by O. II, r. 2. The case is, therefore, remanded to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits according to law. The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal to this Court as also to the District Judge's Court, will be refunded to the appellant. Other costs in this and the lower Appellate Court will be paid by the respondents. Costs in the first Court will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Second appeal—Finding of fact.

A finding of fact cannot be interfered with in second appeal unless it can be shown that there is no evidence to support it or that it has been influenced by an erroneous view of the law. (p. 290, col. 2).

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 11th August 1921, affirming the decree of the Munsif, Second Court, Midnapore, dated the 26th May 1920.

Babu Panchanan Ghosh (with him Babu Karnamoy Bose), for the Appellant.

Babu Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. — This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Midnapore reversing the judgment and decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Midnapore, and arises out of a suit for the recovery of the money in lieu of paddy on a mortgage-bond. The defendant (now respondent) admitted execution of the mortgage-bond but pleaded that it had been satisfied by the execution of a subsequent bond (Exhibit A,) on the 30th Bisakh 1323 corresponding to the 13th May 1916. The Trial Court disbelieved the story of payment. On appeal the District Judge held that the bond in suit had been satisfied and discharged by the execution of the second bond and accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiff has now filed this second appeal. In our opinion the matter is concluded by the finding of fact arrived at by the first Appellate Court. The learned District Judge has found that the bond in suit was satisfied and discharged by the second bond. That is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere unless it can be shown that there is no evidence to support it or that it has been influenced by an erroneous view of the law. It is clear that there is evidence on which such a finding could be arrived at and the learned District Judge has given reasons for his conclusion. Whether these reasons are good reasons or bad reasons it is not necessary for us to consider. If we did we should be virtually hearing an appeal on the facts. The learned Vakil for the appellant has argued that the second bond was cumulative and not substitutionary and that the original obligation, the mortgage-bond, was not destroyed thereby unless it has been distinctly found that that was the intention of the parties. It seems to us that that is in effect the finding of the District Judge. He has also found that there was a satisfactory explanation of the omission on the part of the plaintiff to return the first bond.

In the result we find that no case has been made out for our interference in second appeal. Nor do we see any reason to suppose that substantial justice has not been done. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is affirmed.

The general presumption is that the income of a Hindu widow from her husband's estate is an accretion to the corpus and not her stridhanam, unless it is shown to have been dealt with by her as her own.

The bare fact that the widow had obtained a decree for arrears of rent is not proof sufficient to rebut the presumption. (p. 291, col. 2).

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1921 (Appeal Suit No. 17 of 1921, on the file of the District Court, Nellore) preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Kavali, in E. P. No. 1547 of 1919, in O. S. No. 463 of 1914.

Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Iyer, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Respondents are absent and this appeal is heard ex parte. A widow obtained a decree in Original Suit No. 463 of 1914 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Kavali for arrears of rent and died before executing it. Her son's daughter claimed to execute it as succeeding to the estate of the widow's husband under a Will. Her daughter's daughter claimed to execute it as heir to her private estate arguing that the money if collected would be part of the income and the widow could treat it as her stridhanam. The District Munsif accepted this plea, and the son's daughter appeals. In Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (1) it has been held by the Privy Council that if the stridhanam was due to accumulated savings from the income of the property received from her husband's estate, the widow might so deal with it that it would remain her own, yet it must be shown to have been so dealt with. It was held in Madras that the onus lay the other way ; Akkanna v. Venkayya (2) and this ruling was upheld in Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (3) where the ruling in Nabhakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (1) seems to have been overlooked. In Raja of Ramnad v. Sundaram Pandyasamy Tevar (4) occurs this passage at page 588.

> " a widow may so deal with the income of her husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus. It may be that the presumption is the other way. A case has been cited to their Lordships which seems so to say. But at the outside it is a presumption and it is a question of fact to be determined if there is any dispute whether a widow has or has not so dealt with her property."

I do not think that this last ruling detracts from the clear ruling in Nabhakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (1) and so it is held in Mayne's Hindu Law, page 915, 9th Edition.

> " This view (Akkanna v. Venkayya (2) and Subramania Chetty v. Arunachalam Chetti) (3) is no longer tenable."

The bare fact that a widow has obtained a decree for arrears of rent is not proof that she so dealt with the property as to make it remain her own.

Accordingly the appeal is allowed with costs and the order of the lower Court is reversed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXVI, r. 9—Local inspection—Judgment, whether can be founded on inspection—Record of inspection, whether necessary.

Though the Civil Procedure Code empowers the Court to go on local inspection of any property in respect of which it is called upon to decide a question in controversy, it is still the duty of the Court not to make the result of such inspection the foundation of its judgment which must be based upon evidence adduced by the parties. It does not entitle the Judge to put his view obtained by means of such inspection in place of evidence. (p. 292, col. 2).

There is nothing, however, in the Code to make it obligatory on the Court when holding a local investigation to leave a note of the same on the record and no such provision should be read into it. (p. 293, col. 1).

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Tipperah, dated the 2nd February 1923, reversing the order of the Munsif First Court, Brahmanbissa, dated the 1st May 1922.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appellants.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Tipperah remanding the case to the Court of the Munsif for re-trial. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for declaration of his right over a pathway. The learned Munsif held a local investigation and after recording the evidence dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. There was an appeal and the learned Subordinate Judge without going into the evidence or merits of the case, remanded it for re-trial by the first Court on the ground that the Munsif had made use of his knowledge of what he saw in the locality, without making any note of the result of his inspection. Reliance has been placed by the Court below on the case of Rai Kishori Ghose v. Kumudini Kanta Ghose (1). That case was decided under section 392 of the repealed Code of 1882. In the new Code there has been some alteration in that section as well as in the rule regarding the inspection of the locale by the Court. Section 392 of Act XIV of 1882 has been enacted word per word in O. XXVI, r. 9 with the exception of the words—" and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person ". These words have been left out in view of the new provisions introduced in the present Code by O. XVIII, r. 18 which invests the Court with power to inspect a property at any stage of the suit. Although there has been this alteration in the law the law as it stood before has not been materially changed. Though the present Code empowers the Court to go on local inspection of any property in respect of which it is called upon to decide a question in controversy, it is still the duty of the Court not to make the result of such inspection the foundation of its judgment which must be based upon evidence adduced by the parties. It does not entitle the Judge to put his view obtained by means of such inspection in place of evidence. The Judge is to hold such inspection for the purpose of better following and understanding the evidence adduced before him or to test its accuracy.

In the present case what the learned Munsif did is this. It was a part of the plaintiffs' case that the pathway extended beyond the house of the defendants up to the District Board road. The learned Munsif found on inspection of the locality that the broad pathway extended up to the house of defendants Nos. 5 and 9 and beyond that there were merely footpaths in several directions. He further observes in one portion of his judgment " I had been to the locality being accompanied by parties and am convinced that the disputed pathway which is broad enough for use for all purposes is a passage common to the members of the house of defendants and though a single foot pathway can be traced from house to house beyond the house of defendants Nos. 5-9 or beyond the eastern bank of the tank up to the Municipal road mentioned above as in any other direction it can in no case be said that the disputed pathway has extended further east beyond the houses of the defendants." The learned Vakil for the respondent has argued that the learned Munsif has correctly stated the facts as they appeared at the time of the inspection but not the facts when the obstruction occurred i.e, more than a year ago. That may be so and it is a matter of evidence. The learned Munsif accepted all the evidence the parties chose to adduce. He did not shut out any evidence. It is, however, argued that as the learned Munsif left no note on the record of the result of his inspection, it was not possible for the plaintiff to foresee the points that struck the Munsif most and to adduce evidence to explain it. I do not desire to be a party to laying down any such proposition as has been done in some of the cases, that it is the duty of the Court when holding a local inspection to leave a note of the same. There is nothing in the statue to make it obligatory on the Court and no such provision should be read into it. The only limitation that has been placed on the right of the Court to make such local inspection is that the Judge should not make it the basis of his judgment irrespective of the evidence adduced by the parties. In this particular case the learned Munsif has not made his observation of the locality the foundation of his judgment. He has considered the plaintiff's case as placed before him and attempted to be proved before him by evidence. He observes that the plaintiff has based his claim on prescription and finds that the plaintiff came into occupation of the alleged dominant tenement within 20 years and that before his occupation the whole locality was jungle. From these facts he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has not acquired any right of prescription by user. He has further examined the evidence and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff did not aquire any right of way over the disputed property either by prescription or as a way of necessity. The evidence on this point has been dealt with fully in a lengthy judgment. In my opinion the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that as the Munsif did not keep a note of the result of his inspection his judgment is to be set aside and the case has to be retried is not correct.

The result is that the order of the Court of appeal below is set aside and the case remitted to it for hearing of the appeal on merits and according to law. Costs will abide the result. The hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

Graham, J.—I agree. The Trial Court clearly had power under O. VIII, r. 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure to make the local inspection. This provision appears to have been overlooked by the first Appellate Court. Two main points have been urged on behalf of the appellants firstly—and this is the main contention—that the learned Munsif was not entitled to base his judgment on what he found at the time of local inspection ; and secondly that if he made such local inspection he ought to have placed on record a note of what he observed at the time so as to make the parties explain any matter that might arise therefrom and to cross-examine if necessary. With regard to the first point it is to be seen whether the Munsif has in fact based his decision on what he observed at the time of the local inspection; on a careful consideration of the matter it appears to me that the Munsif cannot be said to have based his judgment on the result of his local inspection. On the contrary, he has dealt with the evidence at some length and it cannot, I think be said that his judgment is based entirely on what he observed when he went to the locality.

We have been referred to the case of Ahmed Sahib Shuhari v. The Magnesite Syndicate Ltd., (2) but that case is clearly distinguishable as the decision there was found to be based solely on the result of the local inspection. As regards the second contention it is to be observed that the Civil Procedure Code nowhere lays down that the result of a local enquiry must be placed on record and I do not think that we ought to read into the rule something which has not been stated therein. If it had been the intention of the Legislature that this should be done it could easily have said so in plain language.

For the reasons given I agree that the appeal must be allowed and the case sent back to the Court below to be disposed of in accordance with law.

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.—One Satkari Seikh, a Mussalman of the Sunni School, died leaving him surviving one widow, one daughter and two sisters. The plaintiff acquired by purchase the shares of the two sisters and, on attempting to obtain possession of the land, was resisted by the widow and the daughter. At the trial, the widow claimed that a sum of Rs. 925 being due to her for deferred dower and she being in possession of her husband's estate she was entitled to retain such possession until the sum due to her had been paid out of the rents and profits by reason of the widow's lien for dower recognised by the Mussalman law. To that defence it was answered that the widow had not obtained possession by any consent, express or implied, of her husband or his other heirs. The learned Munsif found as a fact that no consent was obtained and he followed the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1) and rejected the widow's defence of lien for dower. The learned District Judge, on appeal, has accepted this finding of the Munsif, has agreed with his view of law and has dismissed the appeal.

On this appeal, the first question for consideration is whether the judgments of the Courts below can rightly be subjected to any valid criticism on the ground that the question of implied consent has not been found upon. In my judgment, there can be no doubt that the learned Munsif had before him the question of implied consent and, on the facts of this case, he found and meant to find that there was no consent at all. The learned Vakil who appeared for the widow, the appellant before us, contended that though the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hamira Bibi's case (1) contained a statement to the effect that consent was necessary to give validity to such a defence, such statement was only obiter and he pointed out that a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Beeju Bee v. Syed Moorthiya Sahib (2) had adopted this view and had held, contrary to the dictum of the Judicial Committee, that such consent was not necessary. In these circumstances, he asked us to follow the Madras decision, to treat what is said in Hamira Bibi's case (1) as not binding upon us and to allow this appeal.

Now, it is quite true—and I am glad to know that it is recognised—that, in appreciating decisions of Court, it is necessary to remember that a case is only an authority for the ratio decidendi. This principle is in constant exercise when dealing with the decisions of Courts wherein each Judge gives or may give his individual opinion. It is, however, particularly difficult to apply to decisions of the Judicial Committee and every lawyer in India knows that the Judicial Committee, in giving its reasons, has always a very scrupulous regard to the inconvenience that may be caused by obiter dicta. In the present case, the argument on behalf of the appellant is that the case before the Judicial Committee involved only the question whether or not interest should be allowed to the widow in the accounts. The case was one in which undoubtedly the widow had obtained possession by the consent of her husband or his heirs. In these circumstances, it is said that the observations were unnecessary for the decision, that the decision is contrary to a series of decisions in India and that it ought not to be followed.

The first question is as to whether or not the observations of the Privy Council are merely intended to apply to a case where, in fact, consent has been obtained. In my judgment, it is not possible so to read the decision. The question whether interest should or should not be allowed was argued on behalf of the appellant on the view that the widow's claim for dower was a creation of the Mahomedan law, that interest was in general obnoxious to the Mahomedan law and that the ordinary principles of English equity should not, therefore, be applied to a right which was entirely defined by a different law altogether. Accordingly, one of the questions stated in the report as a main point for determination was the question whether the dower payable by a Mahomedan husband to his wife in consideration of marriage was in the nature of an ordinary debt. The members of the Board were Lord Atkinson, Lord Parker, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali. It is impossible not to notice, as indeed was noticed by one of the Judges in the Madras case, that two of the members of the Board must have been well-acquainted with the conflict of authorities on the present point that has been exhibited in the Indian decisions. In these circumstances, the actual decision of the Board was prefaced by a statement of the nature of the widow's right to dower and of the extent to which under the Mahomedan law she had a security therefor. The statement is as follows:—"Dower is an essential incident under the Mussulman law to the status of marriage; to such an extent this is so that when it is unspecified at the time the marriage is contracted the law declares that it must be adjudged on definite principles. Regarded as a consideration for the marriage, it is, in theory, payable before consummation; but the law allows its division into two parts, one which is called prompt payable before the wife can be called upon to enter the conjugal domicil; the other deferred, payable on the dissolution of the contract by the death of either of the parties or by divorce. Naturally, the idea of payment of interest on the deferred portion of the dower does not enter into the conception of the parties. But the dower ranks as a debt and the wife is entitled along with other creditors to have it satisfied on the death of the husband out of his estate. Her right, however, is no greater than that, of any other unsecured creditor, except that, if she lawfully with the express or implied consent of the husband or his other heirs obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate to satisfy her claim with the rent and issues accruing therefrom, she is entitled to retain such possession until it is satisfied. This is called the widow's lien for dower and this is the only creditor's lien of the Mussulman law which has received recognition in the British Indian Courts and at this Board." That statement of law is a statement, first of all, in an intentional form or restriction. The statement is that the widow's right is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor except as there defined. That this decision is contrary to the view taken by the Full Bench of Madras in the case referred to above and the view pressed upon us on this appeal admits of no doubt whatsoever. The contrary view, if I may take its expression from the judgment of the Officiating Chief Justice in that case which will be found at p. 233, is as follows:—"All the authorities suggest that the Mahomedan widow's lien for dower on property of which she is in possession arises not by virtue of any agreement with her husband or his heirs but by the provisions of Mahomedan law relating to the administration of a deceased person's estate. That is why it stands on the same footing as any other creditor's lien. If a widow or any other creditor of a deceased Mahomedan acquired the rights of a pledgee or pawnee by reason of being placed in possession of the deceased person's property by the consent of his heirs, then she or he would have a preferential right relatively to the rights of other creditors of the deceased. If it is not as a pledgee properly so-called that a widow having a claim for dower has a lien over property in her possession, then there can be no necessity under the Mahomedan law that she should have obtained possession with the consent of the heirs. What is called a widow's lien in this connection is founded on the rule of Mahomedan law as to the administration of a deceased person's estate, namely, that a creditor who has obtained possession of the property of the deceased debtor should be allowed to continue in possession until the debt is satisfied."

SAHU BIBI v. ISMAIL SHEIK

Coming to the next point, it is not in my opinion, a sound comment on the decision of the Board in Hamira Bibi's case (1) to say that their exposition of the nature of the widow's lien for dower had no connection with their decision on the point about interest. Having set forth that her lien was to take its origin with the express or implied consent of the husband or his heirs, the Judicial Committee on that basis addressed themselves to the question whether on ordinary equitable principles she ought to be allowed interest as a consideration for her forbearance in enforcing her debt against her husband's estate. It seems to me that it would be both unnecessary and presumptuous to say that, if the Board had taken a different view of the nature of the widow's lein their decision on the point of interest would necessarily have been different. But that their Lordships considered the application of equitable principles to be dependent on their general view of the nature and origin of the widow's lien for dower is to my mind fairly clear. It was for that reason and for that reason only that the question arose whether the dower was in the nature of an ordinary debt, whether it could only be given the incidents which particular provisions of the Mahomedan law had already attached. It is to be observed that one decision wherein interest was allowed but wherein a different view of the widow's lien had been adopted was laid before the Judicial Committee in that case. I refer to the decision in Sahebjan Bewa v. Ansaruddin (3). It was suggested in the Madras Full Bench case already referred to that there was a preponderance of opinion in India to the effect that consent of the heirs was not necessary and that accordingly it must not be supposed that the Judicial Committee intended to settle the question which had been agitating in Indian Courts for some time. In my judgment, it is impossible to think that the Board gave the definition of the widow's right to dower which is to be found in the judgment of Lord Parker without knowing very well that in so doing they were passing upon a matter as to which difference of opinion had prevailed. It is a difficult question and one upon which I think it unnecessary to pronounce whether the preponderance in the previous decisions was very great in favour of one view or the other. That is and must remain a matter of opinion ; but it is undoubted that, at all events, ever since 1870, there has been authority in the case law for the view that consent of the husband or his heirs is necessary to ground the widow's right to lien. That view will be found stated in the case of Wahaidenessa v. Shubrattam (4). It was a main point of the decision to which Sir John Edge was a party in the cases of Amantannessa v. Basirunnessa (5) and Mahammad Karimullah Khan v. Amani Begum (6). It was followed in this Court in 1910 in the case of Bibi Tasliman v. Bibi Kaseman (7) and although in the following year in a case already cited a different view was taken, it seems unnecessary in view of the recent decision of the Judicial Committee to address oneself to the question as to the preponderance being in favour of one view or the other. Much depends upon whether one confines oneself to a review of the cases in which the present point was exactly raised. To take a particular instance, the language used by Mahmood, J. in the case of Azizulla Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (8) must be controlled by the consideration that he was there dealing with a second appeal in which the consent of the heirs has been found as a fact. For all these reasons, it is, in my opinion, the duty of this Court to follow the decision in Hamira Bibi's case (1). It may be observed that under this decision the widow has for her dower all the rights of an ordinary creditor and may be given by the consent of the husband or his heirs, a right to possession of the estate until by the rents and profits the debt has been liquidated. That means a position of great privilege. I can see no reason why that privilege as defined by the highest tribunal should not be taken as settled. For these reasons, this appeal must, in my opinion, fail and be dismissed with costs.

Ghose, J.—I entirely agree. I only desire to add that the rule of Mahomedan law with regard to this matter was laid down by the Privy Council in the Case of Bibee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (9) where it was said that where a widow obtained possession lawfully without force or fraud, she had a lien on the property for her dower. This expression has been interpreted in some of the cases as possession peacefully obtained without force or fraud. It seems to me that peaceful possession cannot always be said to be lawful possession and the case of Hamira Bibi v. Zubidia Bibi (1) only reiterates the law laid down by the Privy Council, and explains the expression "lawful" by adding the words "with the express or implied consent of the husband or his other heirs." This interpretation we are bound to accept as a correct statement of the law.

A mortgage of moveable property which was not in existence at the time when the contract of mortgage was entered into is valid and is enforceable as against a transferee of the property with notice of the mortgage. (p. 298, col. 2).

Bansidhar v. Sant Lal, 10 A. 133; A. W. N. (1888) 35; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 90, followed.

The method of assessing damages in case of a breach of a contract to deliver sugar-cane juice produced out of a certain area of land would be to ascertain the quantity of juice which could be produced out of the stipulated area, to ascertain the price at which it might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related, deducting from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of juice in question. The amount so awarded should not, however, in any case exceed the amount of liquidated damages fixed by the parties. (p. 299, col. 2).

Ordinarily the question as to the amount of damages to which a party is entitled is a question of fact and a finding as to the amount of damages arrived at by the first Appellate Court would be binding on the High Court in second appeal; but where the finding is an arbitrary done the High Court is entitled to interfere with it. JUGAL KISHORE v. RAM NARAIN

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of damages for breach of a contract to supply sugar-cane juice. This and other remaining appeals are connected and in all of them practically the same point arises for determination. I propose to take up Second Appeal No. 1627 of 1920 as the principal case. In this case there was a contract between the plaintiff, on the one hand, and defendant No. 1 on the other, entered into on the 21st of February 1919 under which Rs. 40 were paid by the plaintiff as an advance and it was agreed that the defendant No. 1 would supply to the plaintiff the sugar-cane juice which would be the product of the 8 bighas of land mentioned in the contract and that this juice would be supplied at the rate of Rs. 34 per karda each karda being equivalent to 50 maunds. There was a provision in the deed that, if the juice supplied was not in value equal to the amount advanced then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the balance together with interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem. It contained an undertaking that defendant No. 1 would not sell the juice to any one else and would not enter into a contract for the supply of this juice with any third party, that in case he did so and broke the contract the plaintiff would be entitled to recover damages at Rs. 10 per bigha. The amount advanced was made a charge on the future produce of the land. On the findings of both the Courts below it is clear that defendant No. 2, with a full knowledge of the existence of this contract, purchased the juice from defendant No. 1 and appropriated it and thereby assisted defendant No. 1 in breaking his contract with the plaintiff.

The plaintiff had claimed damages at the rate mentioned in the written contract both as against defendant No 1, and his transferee defendant No. 2. On behalf of the transferee it was pleaded that he himself was not liable inasmuch as he was a purchaser without notice. Both the Courts below have found it, as a fact, that defendant No. 2, had full notice of the previous contract and was liable equally with defendant No. 1.

The Court of first instance decreed the amount claimed in full but that amount has been reduced by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal from the decree of the lower Appellate Court and asks for the whole amount claimed. The defendant transferee has filed cross-objections denying his liability to pay anything at all. I propose to take up the cross-objections first, because, if those objections are allowed, defendant No. 2, would have to be exempted completely. On his behalf it is strongly contended that the mortgage of moveable property which was not in existence at the time when the contract was made was invalid and that in any case the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief against the defendant transferee. In my opinion, this point is concluded by the case of Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (1) which I am unable to distinguish. In that case a contract was entered into by one Deoki Prasad with the plaintiff for supplying indigo produce for the years subsequent to 1292 Fasli and the said produce was agreed upon to remain hypothecated in lieu of the amount from Deoki Prasad and attached the indigo produce in the hands of Bansidhar the latter objected on the ground that the property had been previously sold to him. On a suit brought by the plaintiff against Deoki Prasad as well as Bansidhar it was held that in effect a valid charge had been created on the indigo produce even though that produce was not actually in existence at the time when the contract was entered into and further that Bansidhar having wrongfully converted the security created by the bond was liable to the plaintiff for damages sustained by him. The decision was based on the general principles of equity and the claim was held to be enforceable as against the transferee of the produce with notice of the equitable interest. This case does not seem to have been dissented from in any subsequent case. On the other hand, the principle laid down therein has been followed in the case of Navajee v. The Administrator General of Madras (2). The facts of the former case are parallel to the facts of the case before me and I am unable to distinguish the two cases and as a single Judge I am bound to follow the ruling in Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (1). In my opinion, therefore, the objections raised by the defendant-transferee that he is not liable at all are without force and must be dismissed.

JUGAL KISHORE v. RAM NARAIN

Coming to the question raised in appeal, I am of opinion that it is necessary to have a clear finding on the amount of damages claimed by the plaintiff before disposing of the appeal finally. Ordinarily the question as to theamount of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled is a question of fact and the finding as to the amount of damages arrived at by the lower Appellate Court would be binding on this Court. In the present case, however, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge has fixed the amount of damages obviously in a most arbitrary manner. He says "I think the plaintiff should have been awarded reasonable damages and they should not have influenced the fact that the plaintiff would have made large profits, if the juice had been delivered to him. I think damages equal in amount to the sum advanced would be sufficient and reasonable in each case." It is noteworthy that the amount advanced was really in the nature of an earnest-money and did not by any means, represent the greater part of the amount which would ultimately have to be paid by the plaintiff for the quantity of juice actually supplied. To fix the damages at an amount equal to the earnest-money advanced in all the cases without exception is obviously arbitrary. Furthermore the lower Appellate Court has professedly ignored the fact that, if the contract had been carried out the plaintiff would have made huge profits and it was of opinion that that circumstance should on no account be taken into consideration. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion, that the amount fixed by him arbitrarily cannot be taken as an amount arrived at on a finding which is binding on this Court.

In my opinion, when a contract like the present was broken the plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount which was actually fixed by the parties. The amount of damages fixed by the parties was at the rate of Rs. 10 per bigha. If there was anything to show that this amount was excessive it would be open to the Court to reduce it to a reasonable amount. Under section 74 of the Indian Contract Act the Court now is not bound to award the same amount of damages which is mentioned in the contract as the amount to be payable in case of such a breach of contract and that amount is to be taken only as a maximum amount and the Court has power to reduce it to a sum which it considers reasonable. In the case of Nait Ram v. Shib Dat (3) which also on facts was a case somewhat similar to the present one, it was said that the method of assessing damages in case of a breach of the contract would be to ascertain the quantity of indigo which could have been pressed out of the stipulated amount of indigo plant, to ascertain the price at which the indigo might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related deducting, of course, from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of indigo in question and that in no case the amount so awarded should exceed the amount of liquidated damages fixed by the parties. In the present case the plaintiff actually led evidence to show that about the time when delivery of the sugar-cane juice should have taken place the price had gone up unusually high and the difference in the correct rate and the market rate even exceeded considerably the rate which had been fixed by the parties as the basis for liquidated damages. Whether this in fact was so or not is a matter which I do not propose to determine just now. The fact remains that there was an agreement between the parties to pay damages at a fixed rate, and the lower Appellate Court has not come to any finding that calculating on the difference between the market rate and the contract rate the amount of damages to which the plaintiff would have been entitled was much lower than the amount agreed upon. His finding is, therefore, defective, and I feel that I cannot dispose of this appeal without having a clear finding on the amount of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled. I accordingly send down the following issues for determination by the lower Appellate Court:—

(1) Was the rate at which damages were to be assessed as mentioned in the contract excessive ?

(2) If so, what is the reasonable compensation (not exceeding that amount) to which the plaintiff is entitled on account of the breach committed by the defendants ?

On return of the findings the usual ten days will be allowed for cross-objections.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. 6—Attachment of immoveable property before Judgment—Provincial Small Cause Court, jurisdiction of.

A Provincial Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to attach immoveable property before judgment and to adjudicate on claims which such attachment may produce. (p. 302, col. 2).

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 2nd February 1923, reversing an order of the Munsif, Alipur, dated the 28th July 1922.

JUDGMENT.

Rankin, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant in an ejectment suit. The Defendant's defence was a denial of the Plaintiff's title. The Plaintiff claimed title as purchaser at an execution sale against one Majammil Mea under a Small Cause Court decree for money obtained under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It appears that in the Small Cause Court at Sealdah he obtained an attachment of the land now in suit before judgment, that there was an investigation of claim held under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, that the claimant succeeded and that the plaintiff then brought a suit to establish the right of his judgment-debtor, but that suit was withdrawn. Later, the decree was transferred to the ordinary Civil Court; the property was attached and sold to him ignoring the previous claim case.

The Munsif held that the Small Cause Court had power to attach immoveables before judgment and to decide the claim case. Accordingly he dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that the plaintiff had no title. The learned District Judge held that the Small Cause Court had no such power and that the proceedings which purported to have been taken under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, were ultra vires. Accordingly, he remitted the suit for retrial to the first Court on the other issues. The only point made by the learned Vakil for the defendant-appellant is that, under the Code of 1908, a Provincial Small Cause Court has power to attach immoveable property before judgment and to decide a claim case thereon. This matter has been elaborately argued before us. It is quite clear that the proper method is first to examine this matter on the face of the Code and of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). So far as the latter Act is concerned, it is only necessary to note that by the second schedule great care has been taken to exclude from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court all suits in respect of immoveable property whether for possession or declaration or partition or otherwise howsoever, with small exceptions as regards certain classes of rent suits. In effect, rights to, or interests in, immoveable property are elaborately excluded; but as questions of this character may arise incidentally in suits, for example, for money, a facultative provision is made by section 23 enabling the Small Cause Courts to send the matter to the ordinary Civil Court but not obliging it to do so. Section 17 of this Act deals with procedure. It is the only section applying anything in the Code to Small Cause Courts. The provisions in the Code itself are directed entirely to excluding certain powers of the Court from application to Small Cause Courts. The provisions of the Code of 1882 specified in its second schedule "so far as those chapters and sections are applicable" were made to obtain in the Small Cause Court by virtue of section 17. They include Chaps. XIX and XXXIV "Execution" and "Arrest and Attachment before judgment." In each case the words "except as regards immoveable property" are inserted as a qualification in the second schedule itself. In form section 17 is entirely inapposite now. Since 1908 it must be taken by virtue of section 158 of the Code to refer to section 7 and O. L of the Code of 1908. By section 7 of the present Code so much of the body of the Code as relates to certain things is declared not to extend Small Cause Courts, namely, suits excepted from their cognizance, execution of decrees in such suits and the execution of decrees against immoveable property. Also certain sections are made inappplicable, including sections 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. This provision is badly drafted. Section 94 appears to refer entirely to interlocutory orders and even to call them so, but the parts of this section intended to be excluded are apparently cls. (c) and (e). Cl. (b) is not excluded by the words of section 7 [Kumud Behary Pal v. Hari Charan Mandal (1)] and it can certainly take effect as regards moveables. The actual words of the clause, however, are "order the attachment of any property." Still section 94 only confers powers of any sort "if it is so prescribed" which means that unless the power is given by the orders in the first schedule, it is not in existence. It is fairly clear that we must, therefore, go to the schedule which by O. L declares that certain provisions of the schedule shall not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts. This repeats the matters mentioned in the first half of section 7 and adds two new matters. It then mentions certain rules and orders specifically and declares them also to be inapplicable to Small Cause Courts. It may be noticed that whereas by sections 7 and 94 a Provincial Small Cause Court cannot grant a temporary injunction, O. XXXIX, r. 1 is not expressly mentioned in O. L. Order L. is not, it would appear, drafted either on the principle of repeating every exclusion made by section 7 or of not repeating any such exclusion. Further in O. XVI, r. 10 the power of compelling the attendance of a witness by attachment of his property is qualified by the proviso "that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immoveable property." In these circumstances, the question seems to turn on the exact implication of the exclusion from the Small Cause Court powers of "the execution of decrees against immoveable property" in section 7 and O. L. There can be no doubt that in O. XXXVIII attachment before judgment is contrasted with and distinguished from "attachment of property in execution of a decree." Nor can it be doubted that there is an important difference between these two things [see Tasiram Malo v. Kalyani Debi (2)] though it may be doubted whether the difference is really fundamental since attachment in execution is a step taken to crystallise the creditors' rights and prevent loss of the property prior to sale: attachment before judgment is also for the purposes of preservation so far as the plaintiff is concerned.

Two views have been taken. The District Judge has adopted the view stated in Woodroffe on the Civil Procedure Code. That is, in effect, the principle applied in Madras to the Code of 1859 under Act XI of 1865 that "a Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it" [Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (3)].

The other view was adopted in Kanchedi v Kanchedi (4) by the Judicial Commissioner at Nagpur. He regarded the express exception in O. XVI, r. 10 as in favour of this construction and he did not think that r. 7 of O. XXXVIII was against it. He pointed out that the exclusion of this power was express and clear in the Code of 1882 and that it is not repeated in the present Code.

O. XXXVIII, r. 7 lays down: "The attachment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree." Rule 8 applies in like manner to the provisions as to the method of investigation of claims.

This not only refers inter alia to O. XXI, r. 54 but also to the provisions for investigation of claims (rr. 58 to 62) and further to r. 63 which makes the order in a claim case conclusive subject only to a suit. If there is power to attach before judgment, then whether it be limited to moveables or not, r. 63 must be intended to apply [Sri Malikharjuna Prasada Naidu v. Matapalli Virayya (5).

However the matter be regarded, r. 63 is not in reality a mere question of "manner."

Again by section 36 of the Code " the provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders." It cannot be contended that " the execution of decrees against immoveable property" is not meant to cover the Execution of orders for the purposes of section 7 or O. L; yet they are only excluded by implication.

The argument from previous Codes is apt to exceed the limits laid down in Bank of England v. Vagliano (6), but no doubt in so far as a revised Code takes the form of an amendment as regards a particular provision something may legitimately be gathered by a comparison. Compare, for instance, section 73 of the present Code and section 295 of 1882. But the whole manner and scheme of declaring the powers of Small Cause Courts were recast in 1908, though section 17 of Act IX of 1887 lives on. Section 5 of the Code of 1882 declares everything expressly mentioned in the second schedule to extend to Small Cause Courts to the extent provided. Section 7 and O. L of the present Code mention certain things as not to extend. Formerly every chapter was specifically dealt with, i.e., inserted with or without qualification or omitted. Thus " Chap. XXXIV of Arrest, Attachment before judgment," except as regards " immoveable property." The Code of 1877 as amended in 1879 was exactly the same. The position which arose under Act XLII of 1860 (which first created the Provincial Small Cause Court) and the amending Act XI of 1865 was that these had to be read with the Code of 1859 which knew nothing of Small Cause Courts. Section 21 of the Act of 1860 provided that " except as hereinbefore provided " the Code of 1859 should be applicable " in so far as the same may be applicable and necessary." Section 47 of the Act of 1865 was equally general "so far as the same are or may be applicable." In this respect I think the comment of the learned Vakil for the appellant upon the Madras decision [Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (3)] has force. In 1871 there was a wide general direction left to be applied by common sense. From 1877 to 1908 there was clear and specific provision. The Code of 1908 did not revert to wide or general direction.

It is by no means absurd to suppose that the Code of 1908 may have meant, subject to the right of High Courts to amend the Rules . . . . . to extend the power of attachment before judgment to immoveable property in the case of Provincial Small Cause Courts, while refusing to such Courts the right to attach such property in execution of decrees. As the language of section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) is now inapposite, I am inclined to think that the onus is on the person denying the existence of the power to show that it is excluded by the Code. I agree that the principle of Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (3) is not so forceful as it was under the old Acts. On the other hand, I think the difference between attachment before and after judgment is not so great as has been sometimes thought and I do not think the comparison of the present Code with the clear language of the Code of 1882 affords ground for a safe inference to the effect that the power was not meant to be excluded.

It is very difficult to think that a Court which so far as is possible is prohibited from entertaining questions of rights in immoveables and which may not levy thereon, nor attach such property to compel a witness to appear, should have been given without plain language the extreme right of attachment before judgment and of adjudicating on all claims which such an attachment may produce. That the debt must be small in all cases makes the difficulty greater. It is quite true that on the language of r. 54 of O. XXI the attachment is made an order ; but the peon or the officer who affixes on the premises the order of the Court and proclaims it by beat of drum could hardly deny that he was executing an order upon immoveable property any more than the Sheriff when seizing moveables could deny that he was executing an order. If section 7 (a) (iii) is read with section 36 as meaning to exclude " the execution of decrees or orders against immoveable property "— as I think it must—then, apart from O. L, I think that the power to attach immoveables before judgment is sufficiently, if not too clearly, negatived. [Cf. O. XXXVIII, r. 11.].

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPLICATION No. 448 OF 1921.

October 5, 1922.

MEHTA & CO.—RESPONDENTS NO. I

versus

MESSRS. PARMESHARDAS PARSHOTAMDAS—RESPONDENTS NO. II.

Sale of goods—C. I. F. contract, incidents of—Seller, duty of—Property, when passes—Failure of buyer to make payment—Cause of action, where arises—Place of suing—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c).

A C. I. F. sale is not a sale of goods, but a sale of documents relating to goods. It is not a contract that goods shall arrive, but a contract to ship goods complying with the contract of sale, to obtain, unless the contract otherwise provides, the ordinary contract of carriage to the place of destination and the ordinary contract of insurance on that voyage and to tender these documents against the payment of the contract price. (p. 805, col. 1).

That he secures the freight for the carriage of the goods in question to their destination, has the goods covered by an insurance policy for the voyage, places the goods on board the ship proceeding to the destination mentioned in the contract, and then tenders the necessary documents to the buyer. When he has done this, he has done all that he need do to entitle him to the payment of the price at which the goods have been agreed to be purchased. The insurance of the goods is intended for the protection of the buyer and if the goods are lost in transit, it is the buyer that recovers the amount of the insurance policy. The buyer, therefore, protects himself against the loss of the goods by getting the seller to insure them as soon as they are placed on board and the property in the goods, therefore, which are appropriated to the buyer passes to him as soon as the seller puts the goods on board a ship bound for the place of destination. (p. 804, col. 2).

Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 were both residents of and carried on business at Amritsar. Respondents No. 2 contracted to purchase certain goods from respondents No. 1 C. I. F. Karachi.

The indent contained the following clause :—

" For reimbursement we authorize you or your corrrespondents to draw upon us at 30 days sight with relative documents attached for payment (in case of need sellers invoice to be taken in lieu of the draft) which drafts we engage and bind ourselves to accept, on presentation and pay on maturity notwithstanding any objection we may have regarding maturity or on account of any variation whatever from the terms of the Indent. "

The goods arrived at Karachi and the drafts for the price together with the relative documents were despatched to the Amritsar branch of the Chartered Bank of India. Due notices were sent to Respondents No. 2 to retire the drafts and make arrangements for taking delivery of the goods but they failed to do either, contending that the goods had been late shipped. Respondents No. 1 then retired the draft and referred the disputes between them and Respondents No. 2 to the arbitration of certain arbitrators at Karachi, who made an award in their favour. Respondents No. 1 then made an application to the Court at Karachi to file the award :

Held, that the contract having been made at Amritsar, the documents of title having been tendered to Respondents No. 2 at Amritsar, and the latter being bound to make the payment at Amritsar, no part of the cause of action had arisen at Karachi, and the mere fact that the goods were lying at Karachi did not give the Karachi Court jurisdiction to deal with the matter.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Respondents No. 1.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Respondents No. II.

JUDGMENT.—This an application to file an award under the Indian Arbitration Act and the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it has been challenged.

Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 are both residents of, and carry on business, at Amritsar. By an indent dated the 21st January 1920 and executed at Amritsar, respondents No. 2 contracted to purchase from respondents No. 1, five bales of cotton blankets at Sh. 7—6d. per piece, shipments to be of June, August 1920. Para. 5 of the Indent is as follows: It is distinctly understood that all prices in this Indent are C. I. F. C. I. Karachi. Regarding payment for the goods, clause 1 of the Indent provides "For reimbursement we authorize you or your correspondents to draw upon us at 30 days sight with relative documents attached for payment (in case of need sellers invoice to be taken in lieu of the draft) which drafts we engage and bind ourselves to accept, on presentation and pay on maturity notwithstanding any objection we may have regarding maturity or on account of any variation whatever from the terms of the Indent." The goods arrived at Karachi and the drafts for the price together with the relative documents were despatched to the Amritsar branch of the Chartered Bank of India. Due notices were sent to respondents No. 2 to retire the drafts and make arrangments for taking delivery of the goods but they failed to do either, contending that the goods had been late shipped. Respondents No. 1 then retired the draft and referred the disputes between them and Respondents No. 2 to arbitration, the arbitrators have made their award in favour of Respondents No. 1 who now seek to file it.

The objection as to jurisdiction is based on the contract being on C. I. F. terms. Mr. Dipchand for respondents No. 2 contends that as the contract was on C. I. F. terms which implied that the seller was to contract for freight and effect insurance the seller fulfilled his obligations by shipping the goods and tendering to the buyer the relative documents to the goods and the buyer had to pay at Amritsar the price agreed upon in exchange for the documents. As the property in the goods had passed to the buyer from the moment they were shipped, the seller's responsibility was discharged in respect of them, all that remained for the seller to do was to tender the documents of title to the purchaser and accept from him (of course through the Bank) the agreed purchase price. The tendering of the documents of title and the payment were to be made at Amritsar and consequently no part of the cause of action arose at Karachi. Mr. Kimatrai on the other hand for respondents No. 1 disputes the assertion that the property in the goods passed to the buyer as soon as the goods have been shipped, the appropriation of the goods and the assent thereto by the buyer, he argues, can only take place after the goods have arrived at their port of destination, and the buyer is entitled to an opportunity to examine the goods before any obligation arises to pay for them, and as the examination or inspection of the goods could only take place in Karachi where the goods were lying, a material part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of this Court.

The leading case as to the significance of a contract on C. I. F. terms is that of Biddell Bros. v. Clemens Horst Company (1), where the dissenting judgment of Kennedy, L. J., was adopted on appeal, Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddel Bros. (2). The obligations for a seller under a C. I. F. contract, are I conceive to be, that he secures the freight for the carriage of the goods in question to their destination, has the goods covered by an insurance policy for the voyage, places the goods on board the ship proceeding to the destination mentioned in the contract, and then tenders the necessary documents to the buyer. When he has done this, he has done all that he need do to entitle him to the payment of the price at which the goods have been agreed to be purchased. The insurance of the goods is clearly intended for the protection of the buyer and if the goods are lost in transit, it is the buyer that recovers the amount of the insurance policy. The buyer, therefore, protects himself against the loss of the goods by getting the seller to insure them as soon as they are placed on board and the property in the goods, therefore, which are appropriated to the buyer passes to him as soon as the seller puts the goods on board a ship bound for the place of destination. If this be the true significance of a contract on C.I. F. terms it is hardly open to a purchaser to contend that the obligation to make payment does not arise till he has had an opportunity to inspect the goods. And no better answer to Mr. Kimatrai's argument before me could be given than in the words of Kennedy, L. J. " Suppose the goods to have been shipped, the bill of lading taken, and the insurance for the benefit of the buyer duly effected by the sellers, as expressly stipulated in the contract. Suppose the goods then during the ocean transit to have been lost by the perils of the sea. The vendor tenders the bill of lading, with the insurance policy and the other shipping documents (if any) to the purchaser, to whom from the moment of shipment the property has passed and at whose risk covered by the insurance, the goods were at the time of loss ; is it, I ask myself, arguable that the purchaser could be heard to say "I will not pay because I cannot have delivery of and an examination of the goods ?" But it is just this which is necessarily involved in the contention of the plaintiffs. "The seller's answer, and I think conclusive answer is " You have the bill of lading and the policy of insurance." In Groom Ltd. v. Barber (3) it was held that in a contract for sale on C I. F. terms the seller's obligation is performed by delivering to the buyer within a reasonable time from the agreed date of shipment the shipping documents, namely, the bill of lading, the invoice, and the policy of insurance which will entitle the buyer to obtain, on arrival of the ship, delivery of the goods, or in case of their loss, will entitle him to recover on the policy their value if they have been lost by a peril agreed to be covered, and will give him a rightful claim against the ship in respect of misdelivery or wrongful treatment of the goods. In Arnold Karberg & Co. v. Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co. (4), Scruttan, J., made the following observations : I am strongly of opinion that the key to many of the difficulties arising in C. I. F. contracts is to keep firmly in mind the cardinal distinction that a C. I. F. sale is not a sale of goods, but a sale of documents relating to goods. It is not a contract that goods shall arrive, but a contract to ship goods complying with the contract of sale, to obtain, unless the contract otherwise provides, the ordinary contract of carriage to the place of destination and the ordinary contract of insurance on that voyage and to tender these documents against the payment of the contract price."

With these authoritative decisions on a C. I. F. contract, I wish to consider in closer detail some of the clauses in the Indent between the parties in this case. It is not denied that the goods arrived in Karachi and that the draft for their value and the relative documents were presented to respondents No. 2 at Amritsar, and that the drafts were payable at Amritar. That the contract between the parties was on C. I. F. terms is equally open to no doubt as clause 5 and the heading of the last column at the foot of the contract clearly shows it. Clause 6 refers in express terms to the insurance being effected by seller for the benefit of the buyer, and by clause 1 which I have already reproduced in full, the buyer binds himself to accept the draft on presentation and pay it on maturity notwithstanding any objection that he may have in respect to any variation in the terms of the Indent. The acceptance of the draft and its payment is to be independent of any objection on the part of the buyer either to the quality of the goods or to any violation of the conditions in the Indent, and this is obvious from clauses 1 and 16 of the Indent which provides for a reference to arbitration in the event of any disputes between the parties as regards the quality of the goods or in reference to any of these conditions. Mr. Kimatrai relied on clause 10 of the Indent in support of his argument that the property in the goods does not pass to the buyer by their shipment. He contended that the arrival of the goods in Karachi was a condition precedent to the passing of the property and that in addition, there must be an appropriation by the seller after the arrival of the goods and the purchaser must assent to the appropriation. Clause 10 of the Indent is as follows : " The whole or any portion of the goods noted below are cancelled on account of non-shipment or non-delivery arising from force majeure or from bankruptcy or failure of your manufacturers or suppliers or from non-arrival from perils of the sea, quarantine or stoppage in the Suez or Manchester Canal." Mr. Kimatrai is of the opinion that this condition differentiates this case from the English cases cited above. It does not appear to me that this clause in the Indent is destructive of the essence of the contract between the parties which is to be on C.I.F. terms. The clause is thus worded partly for the benefit of the seller and that of the buyer, and merely provides that in certain contingencies the contract should be deemed cancelled. In the present case the goods were placed on a ship bound for the destination in the contract, they were covered by an insurance policy and they arrived at Karachi. When the parties have themselves expressly stipulated in writing that the contract is to be on C.I.F. terms, it appears to me scarcely arguable that clause 10 could deprive it of the consequences incidental to a C.I.F. contract. Mr. Kimatrai's argument as based on clause 10 was to challenge the assertion that the property in the goods passed to the buyer as soon as the shipment took place, but even assuming that the property did not pass at the time of the shipment, the contract still remained a contract on C. I. F. terms. I have already mentioned the incidents of a C. I. F. contract and in Groom v. Barber (3) it was held inter alia "It is immaterial in whom the property of the goods was before the tender of the documents. The seller must be in a position to pass the property in the goods by the bill of lading if they are in existence, but he need not have appropriated the particular goods in the particular bill of lading to the particular buyer until the moment of tender." Mr. Kimatrai relied on the case of In re Cargo ex S. S. Rappenfels (5). This was a case where before the recent war H. S. N. C. & Co., British subjects had shipped some bales of jute by a German ship S. S. Rappenfels and had consigned them to D. C. and Co. British merchants. The Rappenfels was captured at sea after the declaration of war and was sent to Calcutta to have the liability of the cargo to condemnation determined by the High Court. H. S. N. & Co. submitted their claim and it was held that the property in the goods remained in the sellers and that it did not pass to the buyers at the time the goods were appropriated to the contract. The contract between the parties was no doubt on C. I. F. terms, but there was an express agreement for the goods to arrive, so that the arrival of the goods was an essential term. The goods had not arrived and their price had not been paid and the bills of lading were with the claimants. Jenkins, C J. in the course of judgment remarked "though under a C. I. F. contract, risk is ordinarily on the buyer, this is qualified in this case by a provision which makes arrival of the goods an essential term". The question in this case, was not as between the seller and the buyer and there is nothing in the judgment which would show that though the property in the goods still remained in the seller, yet the contract did not remain a contract on C. I. F. terms as between the seller and the buyer.

Now owing to the failure of respondents No. 2 to retire the draft respondents No. 1 paid the amount to the Chartered Bank at Amritsar and then had the disputes between them and respondents No. 2 referred to the arbitration of two European merchants at Karachi, respondents No. 2 did not appear before the arbitrators nor were represented. After the award respondents No. 1 sent to respondents No. 2 a statement of the account which showed the amount due to them as found by the arbitrators. The arbitrators have awarded respondents No. 1 the amount mentioned in the two drafts with interest thereon and some incidental charges that were claimed by the respondents No. 1. What, therefore, was referred to arbitration was the question as to the liability of respondents No. 2 to pay the amount of the two drafts, and if the subject-matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit, such suit, in my opinion, could not have been instituted in Karachi, as the cause of action arose entirely in Amritsar. The contract was made in Amritsar, payment was to be made in Amritsar and the contract being on C. I. F. terms respondents No. 1 had fulfilled their part of the contract by tendering the documents of title to respondents No. 2 which was done at Amritsar and no part of the cause of action arose at Karachi. The fact of the goods lying at Karachi was immaterial so far as the respondents No. 1's cause of action was concerned. If the goods did not conform to the quality agreed or if there were any variations from the terms of the Indent, respondents No. 2 could claim the necessary relief by the instrumentality of arbitration proceedings, but their obligation for the payment of the drafts was unconditional. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the objection of respondents No. 2 that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application for filing the award is sound and must be upheld.

Mr. Kimatrai pressed very strongly upon my attention my judgment in Loise Dreyfus v. Kuwarbhan Sukhanand, (6) as supporting his contention that this Court has jurisdiction. But the two cases present essential features of difference. In Louis Dreyfus case the contract was not on C. I. F. terms and secondly though it was on what is called "Agency Pass Terms" Louis Dreyfus reserved to themselves the right of the final acceptance of the goods at Karachi, and I stated in my judgment that though the wheat was examined and tested at Lyalpur before its despatch to Karachi, and if approved the purchase-price was paid, yet Louis Dreyfus reserved to themselves the right of further examination of the goods on their arrival at Karachi before they were finally accepted.

In view of my finding as to jurisdiction, it is unnecessary to discuss the other objections. I dismiss the application and at Mr. Kimatrai's request direct the return of the reference, the award and other papers connected with it to petitioner.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXIII, r.3—Compromise, decree in accordance with—Test for determining whether compromise lawful—Appeal, compromise during pendency of—Compromise enhancing amount payable, effect of.

It is incumbent on a Court to pass a decree in accordance with a compromise, only if the compromise is lawful, that is to say, enforceable in law, and one test for determining this is, whether the parties were competent to enter into the compromise in order to achieve the purpose they had in view. (p 307, col. 2).

Where during the pendency of an appeal, the parties effect a compromise, and the effect of the compromise is to enhance the amount payable under the decree appealed against, a decree ought not to be passed in terms of the compromise.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 31st May 1921.

Babus Mahendra Nath Ray, Sarat Chunder Khan and Bireswar Bagchi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit to enforce a mortgage-security executed in their favour by the Mandal defendants on the 20th June 1914. The Saha defendants have been brought before the Court, as a second mortgage was executed in their favour by the mortgagors on the 17th September 1914. The claim was decreed in part by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs, the first mortgagees, thereupon preferred this appeal, and the puisne mortgagees, when they entered appearance, filed a memorandum of cross-objection.

During the pendency of this appeal, on the 25th July 1922, a petition of compromise was filed which purported to settle the differences between the appellants (the first mortgagees) and the respondents (the mortgagors). The second mortgagees-respondents were not parties to this settlement. The effect of the compromise is to increase the amount payable under the decree to the first mortgagees. The compromise is thus detrimental to the interest of the second mortgagees, and the question consequently arises, whether a decree should be passed in accordance with the compromise, notwithstanding the opposition of the second mortgagees. The answer depends upon the true construction of r. 3 of O. XXIII of the Code of 1908, which provides as follows :

"Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, the Court shall order such agreement or compromise to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit."

It is incumbent on the Court to pass a decree in accordance with the agreement or compromise, only if the agreement or compromise is lawful, in other words, if it is enforceable in law. One test may be applied to determine whether the agreement or compromise is lawful; were the parties competent to enter into the agreement or compromise in order to achieve the purpose they had in view? The decree of the Subordinate Judge directs the sale of the properties comprised in the first mortgage. As the second mortgagees are parties to the suit, the effect of such a sale would be to vest the properties in the purchaser, free of the interests of both the mortgagees. The sale proceeds would then have to be applied in satisfaction, first, of the dues of the first mortgagees, next, of the dues of the second mortgagees. Consequently, if the amount recoverable by the first mortgagees is increased, the balance available for the satisfaction of the dues of the second mortgagees would be disminished. The effect of the compromise is to alter the decree—a decree wherein the mortgagors as well as the first and second mortgagees are interested. Such a decree plainly cannot be varied by consent of two out of the three persons interested. It is an elementary principle that a consent decree cannot operate to a larger extent than the contract itself. As was observed by Parke, J., in Wentworth v. Bullen (1), the contract of the parties is not the less a contract and subject to the incidents of a contract because there is superadded the command of the Judge. The agreement between the first mortgagees and the mortgagors that the decree should be varied does not bind the second mortgagees and, a decree based thereon, cannot operate against them. If we accept the contention of the appellants, there will thus be two distinct and possibly contradictory decrees in the suit, for sale of the mortgaged properties and distribution of the sale proceeds, one, by consent, between the mortgagors and the first mortgagees, another, on contest, between the mortgagors and the second mortgagees.

We have been pressed to hold, however, that it is no concern of the second mortgagees how the matters in difference between the mortgagors and the first mortgagees are made up. This argument is manifestly fallacious. The first mortgagees seek to cut off the equity of redemption of their own mortgage. That equity of redemption is now vested not merely in the mortgagor but also in the second mortgagees, and can be affected, either by an adjudication of the Court or by an agreement of all the parties interested. A useful analogy is furnished by the decisions in Nityamoni Dasi v. Gokul Chandra Sen (2), Gobind Chandra Sarkar v. Bhagabat Sardar (3) and Taraprasanna Sarkar v. Kalikamohan Sarkar (4) where a similar question arose in respect of the subject-matter of a partition-suit. We hold accordingly that the compromise is not a lawful agreement or compromise within the meaning of r. 3 of O. XXIII of the Code and we must decline to make a decree in accordance with it.

To convert a proposal into a promise, the acceptance must be unqualified and without condition. When once a proposal has been refused no subsequent acceptance can convert the proposal into a promise so as to create a contract. (p. 311, col. 2).

The rule of one month's notice which applies to menials, does not apply to the case of a school-master. The rule as to yearly hirings extends to domestic and other servants such as clerks and others, but it is not an inflexible rule and each case must be considered by itself and in each case it must be decided what notice would be reasonable. In the case of a school-master, especially when he was intending to leave his profession and join another, a notice of three months would be reasonable. (p. 311, col. 2).

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the suit giving rise to this second appeal, sought for damages for wrongful dismissal against the Managing Committee of the Tej Narain Jubilee College, Bhagalpur.

It appears that the plaintiff-appellant was appointed Professor of History at the College on a salary of Rs. 100 per mensem in July 1908, but, beyond the mere appointment on that salary no agreement was drawn up as to the term of the appointment or as to the conditions on which it was made. In 1909, having been offered a Professorship at St. Columba's College, Hazaribaugh, the plaintiff resigned but subsequently withdrew his resignation, and, therefore, drew salary at the increased rate of Rs. 120 per mensem. Meanwhile he was studying law and in July 1912 passed the B. L. examination and obtained the B. L. diploma in March 1913. At the end of that year he was enrolled as a Pleader and obtained the permission of the High Court, Calcutta, to work as a Professor at the College while practising as a Pleader. He did not at the same time take the permission of the Managing Committee to practise as a pleader while holding the appointment of Professor of History. On the 6th April 1914 he obtained his license to practise, and from the 8th of April began to attend the Courts at Bhagalpur.

In November 1913 the Director of Public Instruction informed the Managing Committee of the College that it was the intention of Government to make a grant of Rs. 1,000 per mensem to the College on condition that an adequate staff of teachers was maintained and those teachers were paid salaries not less than certain minima to be approved by the Government, and requested the Committee if they accepted the conditions to submit their scheme. In connection with this matter the Principal of the College in his letter dated 13th September 1913 (Exhibit 8) suggested that the salary of the Professor of History should be raised from Rs. 120 to Rs. 150 and noted "Professor Ray" (the plaintiff) "is leaving the institution shortly but a Professor will have to be appointed in his place" and again "Professor N. C. Roy :—has passed his B. L. and applied for license to join the Bar, will do so within a month or two." In his letter dated the 22nd December 1913 the Director of Public Instruction communicated sanction to the payment of a grant of Rs. 1,000 per mensem to the College for one year with effect from June 1st, 1913 on condition among others, that a Professor of History should be maintained on a salary of Rs. 150. At the end of May 1914 the Managing Committee accepted the offer and in pursuance of the new system of graded salaries submitted to the Director of Public Instruction a list allowing increments with effect from June 1913 to some of the Professors and with effect from January 1914 to others, but allowing nothing to the plaintiff.

The reason for this attitude of the Managing Committee seems to have been that the Member had come to know of the plaintiff's intention to leave the College and join the legal profession, and also that the Committee had discovered that the plaintiff had been attending Court as a pleader without obtaining their permission.

A meeting of the Committee was held on the 31st May 1914 and in pursuance of instructions the Secretary wrote to the plaintiff on June 2nd,—

"It has come to the knowledge of the Managing Committee that you have taken out license and joined the local Bar. This, if true, would naturally stand in the way of your throwing your whole heart into the work of College which, if not done with earnestness and whole-hearted devotion, is bound to be ill done. The Committee, under the circumstances, feel constrained to demand that you will either be pleased to have your license cancelled and give the Committee an undertaking that you will serve the Institution devoting your whole time to it for at least two academical years or resign your post at the College."

In reply the plaintiff wrote on the 13th June 1914 that he agreed to give an undertaking "to stick to the College for a further and longer period, but that, as in order to qualify himself for enrolment as a High Court Vakil he would have to practise in the mofus-sil Courts for four years, he requested that a cancellation of his license should not be insisted on. He stated that he had already renewed his license for 1914, and was doubtful whether he could have it cancelled, while with regard to 1915 it would be optional with him to renew the license or not, but he was afraid that such renewal would be necessary in order to complete the four years' practice. He then proceeded to insist that he should be allowed salary at the rate of Rs. 150 per mensem with retrospective effect from June 1913, and that the Syndicate of the Calcutta University might be consulted on the question whether he should be allowed to practise as a pleader while holding the Professorship.

There was no further meeting of the Managing Committee till the 13th September 1914 and on that date the plaintiff handed to the Secretary a letter to be placed before the Committee. In that letter he stated, "As desired by you I undertake to serve the Institution devoting my whole time to it for two academical years. You have, however, desired me to cancel my pleader's license but this, I regret to point out, is not possible for me to do as there is no provision in the High Court rules for cancellation of a license already issued. I may, however, fulfil your desire by not practising as a pleader till the end of December next and then by not renewing my license for the ensuing year." He then again asked that increment of salary might be granted with effect from June 1913, and that the advantage of any new grade system which might be introduced should be extended to him.

After considering this letter and the letter of the 14th June, the Committee passed the following Resolution

"Resolved that the application of Babu Nirod Chandra Roy be rejected and that he be asked forthwith to resign his post, failing which his services will be dispensed with effect from the 1st October 1914."

The plaintiff was thus given fifteen days notice before dismissal, and was dismissed as from the 1st October, receiving salary up to that date. He moved the Syndicate and Senate of the Calcutta University, but, after some inquiry and a motion in the Senate it was decided to take no action. Similarly, the Director of Public Instruction, though moved, abstained from interference in the matter of the refusal to grant increment of salary to the plaintiff with retrospective effect.

The plaintiff then instituted the present suit on 31st October 1917, asserting that the letter of the 2nd June 1914 had contained a proposal by the Committee that he should serve them for two academical years and that, as he had accepted that proposal in his letter of September 13th, a contract had been entered into which had been broken by his wrongful dismissal on the 1st October 1914. He claimed salary from October 1914 till May 1915 at the rate of Rs. 160 per mensem and at the rate of Rs. 170 per mensem, for the month of June 1915, in all Rs. 1,450. He also claimed back increment at the rate of Rs. 30 per mensem from June 1913, at Rs. 40 from June to September 1914 in all Rs. 520, and damages for travelling expenses assessed at Rs. 300. His total claim amounted to Rs. 2,270, or if he were found entitled only to salary up to the end of the session, having been dismissed in the middle of it, to Rs. 2,100.

Both of the lower Courts have agreed in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The learned Munsif in a clear and well considered judgment found that the proposal contained in the Secretary's letter of June 2nd, 1914, was not accepted by the plaintiff in his letters either of the 14th June or the 13th September as to effect any contract between the parties, as there was no unqualified acceptance nor was there an acceptance within a reasonable time. He held that the Committee were justified in objecting to the plaintiff's conduct as being prejudicial to the interests of the College, and that the plaintiff took no heed of the warning but continued to practise in spite of the objection which fact might have given the Committee a right to dismiss him summarily, but he was given a fortnight's notice. He decided that the plaintiff was not wrongfully dismissed.

With regard to the sufficiency of the fifteen days notice, after discussing the evidence to show that notice of fifteen days or at most a month is customary in the College, he pointed out that the plaintiff really had notice on the 3rd June that he would be called on to resign, and, therefore, it could not be held that sufficient notice was not given.

As to the increments of salary claimed, the learned Munsif pointed out that the plaintiff's name had been expressly excluded from the list sent to the Director of Public Instruction, and no amount was officially sanctioned for the plaintiff, nor was any trust created by the Government in favour of any of the Professors. He found the claim to be unsustainable.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Munsiff and held that the plaintiff was guilty of a dereliction of duty which exposed him to summary dismissal, and that in any case one month's notice would have been ample. As to the increments, the District Judge found that the grant was made for the benefit of the College and not for that of a Professor who was known to be intending to leave his post, and that the recommendation of the Committee as to the exclusion of the plaintiff from the benefit of increment of salary was not dissented from by the Director of Public Instruction. He dismissed the appeal.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that the notice given to his client was insufficient, and that there not having been any period fixed at the time of the appointment, it must be held that there was a yearly hiring, and, therefore, the appellant was entitled to claim salary up to the expiry of the year during which he was dismissed. He contended that the appellant ought to be paid the equivalent of his salary up to June 1915, or if not that, up to the end of the current session, that is to say, up to May 1915.

His contention in the first place is that by the letter of June 2nd, 1914, the Committee made a proposal to the appellant that he should serve the College for two academical years and that the appellant by his letters of the 14th June and the 13th September agreed to serve for two years and thus, though at the time of his first appointment no agreement was made as to its term, a new contract was effected by the plaintiff's letters of acceptance. We need, I think, only look at the contents of the letters to see that the contention cannot be sustained. The Committee asked the appellant either both to have his license cancelled and to undertake to serve for two years or to resign. The plaintiff replied that he agreed to serve for two years, but was not ready either to cease practice or to have his license cancelled. He also insisted on an increment of his salary with retrospective effect. This was no acceptance of the proposal; to convert a proposal into a promise the acceptance must be unqualified and without conditions. By his conduct too the appellant showed that he did not accept the proposal for he continued to attend the Courts. Again by his letter of the 13th September the appellant, though undertaking to serve the College for two academical years, and suggesting that he might carry out the Committee's desire by not practising as a Pleader till the end of December and thereafter not renewing his license, refused to get his license cancelled and furthermore again asked for increment. Besides the fact that the letter contained no unqualified acceptance, the reply was made unreasonably late, and after the practical refusal of the 14th June. After that refusal the proposal cannot be held to have good, and after it no acceptance could convert the proposal into a promise so as to create a contract. The support of this proposition I need only refer to the case of Hyde v. Wrench (1). It is clear then that no new contract was effected between the appellant and the Committee for the former's service for the period of two years.

In case the first contention failed the learned Counsel fell back upon the general law that where no term is expressed a hiring will be held to be a yearly hiring and argued that the appellant would be entitled to be paid up to the end of the year in which he was dismissed. He has referred us to various works on the law of Master and Servant. It is quite obvious that the rule of one month's notice which applies to menials, will not apply to the case of a school master. The rule I have mentioned as to yearly hiring extends to domestic and other servants such as clerks and others, but it is not an inflexible rule and, as has been pointed out in MacDonnel's "Master and Servant" page 136, each case must be considered by itself, and in each case it must be decided what notice would be reasonable.

In my opinion, in the case of a school master, especially when he was intending to leave his profession and join another, a notice of three months would be reasonable, and this period was held to be reasonable in the case of Governors and School mistresses in Todd v. Kerrick (2).

In the alternative the learned Counsel argued that the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to receive pay to the end of the session, that is to say, till May. He relied on a Resolution of the Syndicate of the University of Calcutta dated the 21st January 1911 to the following effect :—

" In every case that the services of a teacher or a professor are dispensed with for reasons other than incompetence or dereliction of duty his pay for the full period of twelve months must be paid to him," and urged that this was binding on the Committee. It is unnecessary to discuss how far this resolution bound the Committee ; it will be sufficient to refer to my decision later in this judgment that the real reason for the dismissal of the plaintiff was a dereliction of duty, and so the resolution does not affect the circumstances of this case. The learned Counsel also relied on the case of Wittenbaker v. J. C. Galstaun (3). In that case the plaintiff had been appointed Master at the Armenian College, Calcutta, for a term of three years in 1912, and on the 26th July 1916, while he was still teaching after the expiry of his three years' term, received a notice that his services would be dispensed with on August 1st, and he was offered and received one month's salary. It appears that his dismissal was not due to any misconduct, or dereliction of duty on his part. In the suit which he subsequently instituted the Principal of the City College deposed that it was the custom in the City College and the Schools which he knew, that the teachers or Governing Body were entitled to terminate an engagement by giving notice to terminate it with the existing session. Greaves, J. after considering, what the plaintiff's position was after the expiry of the three years for which he was appointed, stated that he was inclined to think that after the three years the plaintiff's employment must be considered to continue as a yearly employment which would terminate with the end of the school year or session. He held, however, that the plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable notice and that a notice of three months would be reasonable.

That case can be distinguished from the present one in that the dismissal was not for any misconduct, dereliction of duty or fault of the plaintiff, and in the Armenian College the academical year is divided into three terms, while in the case of the Tej Narain Jubilee College there are not terms.

Whatever may have been deposed to be the custom in Calcutta schools and Colleges in that case cannot affect this case, in which the evidence, including that of the plaintiff himself would seem to show that a notice of one month or even fifteen days had ordinarily been held to be sufficient. However, the learned Judge in Wittenbaker v. Galstaun (3), held, as I hold in this case, that a notice of three months would be reasonable, and he considered three months to be about equivalent to a term.

In the present case the appellant was asked to cancel his license or resign by the letter of June 2nd 1914. This was practically a notice to him given four months before his actual dismissal, and thus I consider that he could not complain that he had no sufficient notice. He had full time to look for another appointment if he wanted one.

The letter of June 2nd too, informed him plainly that the Committee did not approve of his practising as a pleader, it was virtually a direction to him to cease practice, and he was informed that the Committee held that the practice was detrimental to the interests of the College. In spite of this the appellant continued to practice and paid no attention to the warning given to him. It is quite plain that the appellant's practice in Court must be detrimental to the interests of the College to which the appellant was required to give his whole attention. The direction, therefore, contained in the Secretary's letter was a reasonable one, and the appellant wilfully paid no notice to it. I am of opinion in agreement with the lower Court, that there was dereliction of duty on the part of the appellant and disobedience to a lawful and reasonable direction of the Committee which would have justified his summary dismissal.

I see no reason to differ from the findings of the lower Court and would dismiss the appeal. Having regard to all the circum-

JUDGMENT.—These Rules must be made absolute. It is not necessary that the application for execution made by a person other than the decree-holder under O. XXI, r. 11 (2) should be verified after the application for permission has been made; nor is it necessary that the verification should be made in the presence of the Court. All that is necessary is that the Court should be satisfied that the person who signed the verified application is acquainted with the facts of the case. In the present case there can be no doubt that the person who signed this application was acquainted with the facts of the case and there was no ground for rejecting the application.

We accordingly set aside the order of the lower Court rejecting these applications and direct that he do admit them and do proceed according to law.

This order will govern Civil Revision Nos. 143 to 146 of 1923.

We make no order as to costs in these Rules.

Custom—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Grove-holder, right of, to sell trees—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Revision—Interpretation of words—High Court, interference by.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that a grove-holder could fell any tree and appropriate the timber to his own use and was entitled to plant new trees in place of those he might fell. It was also provided that at the time of sale the proprietor of the land was entitled to receive one quarter of the sale price in virtue of his proprietary rights. A grove-holder sold two standing trees in the grove and the vendee cut and removed the timber. On a claim by the landlord to recover one-quarter of the sale price of the trees;

Held, that the trees not having been cut and removed by the grove-holder the landlord was entitled tc succeed under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz.

The High Court would decline to interfere in revision in a case where there is a mere question of the interpretation of particular words in a document and the circumstances are such that the words are susceptible of more than one interpretation. (p. 314, col. 1).

Revision against the order of the Munsif Jaunpur, dated the 29th March 1922.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Opposite-Partiy.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is the proprietor of a plot of land on which there is standing a grove. The first seven defendants are in possession of the said plot and of the trees thereon, with the rights of grove-holders. The finding is that these defendants sold two standing trees for Rs. 50 to defendant No. 8 who felled the trees and removed the timber. The plaintiff claims that, by village custom as recognised in the wajib-ul-arz he is entitled to ¼ of the price. It is quite clear from the pleading and from the Judgment of the Court below that both parties were agreed that the local custom determining the rights inter se of the proprietor of the soil and the grove-holders, in respect of the grove in suit, was correctly recorded in the wajib-ul-arz and that both parties were bound by that record. The only question remaining for determination was the interpretation of the relevant entry in the Wajib-ul-arz considered in its bearing on the established facts of this case. The Trial Court found that under the custom so recorded, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover ¼ of the price. The plaintiff has brought the matter before this Court in revision. The decision of the Court of Small Causes is one calculated to have far reaching consequences affecting the rights of the plaintiff and the other proprietors, if any, in this village with reference to grove lands. If it were a mere question of the interpretation of particular words in a document, and the circumstances were such that these words were clearly susceptible of more than one interpretation, I have no doubt that this Court would decline to interfere in revision. The view which I take, however, admits of being briefly stated. The parties are admittedly bound by a record of custom which says that at the time of sale the proprietor of the land receives ¼ of the sale price in virtue of his proprietary rights. The words are plain enough and really admit of only one possible interpretation. The only question raised in the Court below may be put in the form of a question, namely, at the time of the sale of what does this right arise in favour of the proprietor? The Trial Court was evidently much impressed with the very wide rights enjoyed by grove-holders in this village under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. The document contains other clauses very favourable to the grove-holders, and it is not surprising that the defendants in the present suit should have placed their reliance upon this document and should have been quite ready to accept it as a complete and correct record of the custom by which the parties were bound. The Trial Court obviously thinks that in as much as any grove holder in possession under this custom could have felled any tree and appropriated the timber to his own use, and moreover was entitled under the custom to maintain the character of the grove by planting a new tree in place of any tree that he might fell, it would be an illogical development of the custom to require him to pay to the zemindar a portion of the sale price, in the event of his selling the timber instead of appropriating it to his own use. My own opinion is that a good deal could be said by way of rejoinder to the argument as thus stated, but the consideration which determines my decision is that the facts as found by the Trial Court are not those assumed for the purpose of the argument above stated. The first seven defendants to this suit did not fell the trees, remove the timber and sell the same for their own profit. The finding is that they sold the trees as they stood and that it was the vendee who cut them down. In my opinion this circumstance makes the decision of the Trial Court hopelessly inconsistent with itself and fully warrants interference by this Court in the exercise of the general powers of supervision vested in it by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The Court below says that the right to receive ¼ of the price would arise in case of a sale of grove, or a fractional share thereof, or a specified portion of it. Now the sale of two standing trees is to my mind quite indistinguishable from the sale of a specified portion of a grove. I am of opinion, therefore, that this application must be allowed. I set aside the decree of the Court below and in lieu thereof give the plaintiff a decree for the sum of Rs. 12-8-0 claimed by him with costs throughout.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 179—Permanent and heritable Tenure—Mocurrari—Rent interest on—Rate fixed in kabuliyat excessive—Tenant, whether can get relief.

Plaintiff-landlord sued to recover interest on rent payable by the tenant under Kabuliyat which provided for payment of interest at the stipulated rate. It appeared that the word "mocurrari" had not been used in the document nor was there any express provision that the rent shall not be enhanced, but there was a provision that if there was an increase in the land on measurement, the tenant would have to pay rent separately at the stipulated rate

Held (1) that the tenure was and permanent heritable; (p. 316, col. 1).

(2) that the rent was agreed on and could not be enhanced ;

(3) that as there was no evidence on the record to show that any undue influence had been exercised by the Zemindar the tenant was liable to pay interest at the stipulated rate. (p. 316, col. 1).

Mr. Dwarkanath Mitter and Mr. Satyendra Nath Mitter, for the Appellant.

Moulvi Nural Huq, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in the appeal relates to interest on rent payable by the tenant under a kabuliyat.

The interest stipulated to be paid was 2 per cent. per annum.

The Courts below held that the tenant had no permanent mocurrary right in the land and that, therefore, the landlord was not entitled to interest at the stipulated rate and accordingly interest at 12 per cent. only was allowed.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-landlord that the interest of the tenant was that of a mocurrari permanent tenure-holder and that, having regard to the provisions of section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he is liable to pay interest at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat.

The kabuliyat describes the tenure as a darsikmi kayami taluka and states that the rent is payable in ten kists. It then goes on to say :—

" I down to my sons, son's sons and so on in succession, being vested with the right to make a gift and sale of the land covered by this kabuliyat, shall hold and enjoy the same, with the greatest felicity on payment of the rent, and on making improvements in the Mahal by excavating and filling up tanks, ditches and wells, making bastu and garden, constructing passages and roads and planting trees. etc., and by keeping intact the limits and boundaries as before."

There is no doubt, therefore, that it was a permanent tenure and also heritable. The power of transferability was expressly granted.

The only question is whether the rent was fixed.

The word "Mocurrari" has not been used in the document and there is no express provision in the document that the rent shall not be enhanced. But there is some indication in the document to show that the parties did not intend that there should be an enhancement of rent. The kabuliyat provides that if there was an increase in the land on measurement, the tenant would have to pay rent separately for the excess area at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat. That shows that the rent was a fixed one, because it could not have been intended that the tenant would pay for the excess area at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat and at the same time would have to pay at an enhanced rate for the original area mentioned in the kabuliyat.

Then, there are other terms in the document such as " There will be no remission of rent on account of decrease in the area of land except on the ground of the land being washed away by river, that the tenant shall be responsible for all losses and profits in respect of the land under settlement arising in consequence of drought, inundation, failure of crops, the land lying patit and Providential visitation etc., which also go to indicate that the tenure was not a ryoti holding but a permanent mocurrari tenure.

It is pointed out that there is a provision in the kabuliyat for payment of interest at 2 per cent. as well as damages at 25 per cent. and it is contended that the provision is a final one, but no damages have been claimed and only interest at 2 per cent. per mensem has been claimed in the suit.

It is also contended that the rate of interest is very high. But there is no evidence on the record to show that any undue influence was exercised by the Zemindar. We are unable, therefore, to give any relief to the defendant on this ground.

We are of opinion that the right of the tenant under the kabuliyat is a permanent Mocurrari right and the plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to interest at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat.

The same points arise in S. A. Nos. 1886, 1904, 2159 of 1919; and 300, 301, 322 and 374 of 1920 in which the tenancies are tenures and in S. A. Nos. 1893 and 2158 of 1919 in which the lands, though ryoti, are held at fixed rates. The above decision, therefore, will govern them all.

The result is that all the appeals are allowed and the plaintiff will be entitled to get interest at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat.

Each party to bear his own costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff being entitled to get costs in the Court of first instance on the amount which will be found due to the plaintiff under the decree of this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Execution of decree—Sale of properties belonging to judgment-debtor—Decree set aside on appeal—Restitution—Commission paid to auctioneer, whether can be deducted—Interest, whether can be allowed.

Where properties belonging to a judgment-debtor are sold in execution of a decree and the decree is subsequently set aside on appeal, the judgment-debtor is entitled to recover from the decree-holder under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code the full amount of consideration paid by the auction-purchaser for the properties plus interest on the amount for the period during which the money remained in the hands of the decree-holder. The latter is not entitled to deduct from the sale price the amount of commission paid to the auctioneer.

Appeal from the order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 29th March 1923.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Ludhiana made on an application under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the 29th of March 1917, the respondents obtained a decree from his Court for Rs. 5,705 against the present appellant. In execution of that decree the moveable and immoveable properties of the appellant were attached and put to sale. Some of the properties were purchased by the respondents while the rest were purchased by certain third parties. On an appeal by the appellant the decree was set aside by the High Court on the 4th February 1921, and the respondents' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

The appellant then made an application for restitution to the Court below under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. The properties which were purchased by the respondents themselves were restored to the appellant, while in respect of the others, which had been purchased by third parties, the respondents stated that they had realised a sum of Rs. 2,320 by the sale thereof, and that they were prepared to refund it to the appellant. The money was accordingly deposited in Court and withdrawn in due course by the present appellant. In the application out of which the present appeal has arisen it was stated by the appellant that the properties had been sold at much below their proper value on account of the illegal action of the respondents and that he was entitled to be fully recouped for the loss which he had without any fault of his sustained at their hands. The details of the loss claimed by the appellant are fully stated in the application, dated 4th of April 1921, made in the Court below, and it is not necessary that they should be recapitulated in this judgment.

A certain amount of oral evidence was produced in support of the contention that the value of the property was much more than what it had fetched at the time of the sale but this evidence has not been believed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and rejected on the ground that the witnesses were biassed and, therefore, not worthy of credit. I have carefully read this evidence and have no hesitation in holding that it is worthless and that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was right in discarding it. I, however, do not see why the appellant should not have been allowed interest at a reasonable rate for the period during which the money realised by the sale of the properties remained in the hands of the respondents. A sum of Rs. 40 has been claimed on account of mesne profits for the houses which were purchased by the respondents themselves and subsequently restored to the appellant. No satisfactory reason has been shown by the respondents for disallowing this item. The sum claimed is very reasonable and in my opinion, ought to have been allowed. Another item which, in my opinion, ought to have been allowed to the appellant is the commission which the respondents say was paid to the auctioneer on account of the sale of the properties and which of course was not included in the sum of Rs. 2,320 deposited by the latter for payment to the appellant. The property was sold at the instance of the respondents and on the decree having been set aside they were bound to restore the property to the appellant in its original condition. This, of course, was impossible on account of the property having been purchased by the third parties, but there is no reason why the actual price at which the properties were sold and which, of course, included also the commission paid to the auctioneer should not have been paid to the appellant. The contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents is that the fees paid to the auctioneer were not kept by his clients and that they have paid what was actually recovered. But, as already pointed out, it was on account of the illegal action of the respondents that the property was sold, and it is, therefore, only reasonable that they should pay the commission of the auctioneer out of their own pockets.

I accept the appeal and return the case to the Senior Subordinate Judge for fresh orders in the light of the observations above made. Parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) s. 22, application of—Suit cognisable by Small Cause Court instituted in High Court, effect of—Amount or value of subject-matter of suit, determination of—Presidency Small Cause Court, jurisdiction of—Suit for damages for trespass whether cognisable by Small Cause Court—Construction of statutes—Courts, duty of—Practices, questions of, how determined.

On a true construction of section 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, where a plaintiff institutes a suit of a character cognisable by the Small Cause Court, in the High Court, and estimates the amount or value of his claim in the plaint at a sum which is within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, that section is applicable to the suit, and the plaintiff must be taken to have deliberately accepted the risk to which the provisions of that section expose him. (p. 320, col. 1).

The test of the amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit is to be determined by the amount set forth in the plaint But by placing a fictitious value on his claim, the plaintiff is not at liberty to determine the tribunal by which the suit is to be tried. (p. 319, col 2).

A suit is cognisable by a Small Cause Court if in respect both of its character and the amount or value of its subject-matter it is within the jurisdiction of the Court. (p 318, col. 2).

A suit claiming damages for trespass to plaintiff's land by unauthorised deposit thereon of building materials is cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

In construing a Statute, Courts of Justice should endeavour to discover the meaning to be given to it by a consideration of its terms (p. 320, col. 2).

Questions of practice in India are to be determined in accordance with the principles laid lown by the Courts in India. (p. 320, col. 2).

JUDGMENT.—This application involves the determination of an important question of practice.

It is an application by the defendant, which, by consent of the parties, has been treated as an application under O. XLVII to review an order awarding the plaintiff costs.

The plaintiff brought a suit in the High Court claiming damages for trespass to his land by reason of the unauthorised deposit thereon of building material by the defendant. The plaintiff in his plaint claimed Rs. 5,300 as damages and obtained a decree for Rs. 10, and costs were awarded to him on the High Court Scale No. II.

The defendant now applies for a review of the above order relating to costs on the ground that the suit was cognisable by the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, and, inasmuch as the plaintiff obtained a decree for damages for trepass of an amount less than Rs. 300, the Court had no jurisdiction to award him any costs by reason of the provisions of section 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act of 1882. The plaintiff applied under this section for a certificate that the suit was one fit to be brought in the High Court, but this was refused.

I have, therefore, to decide whether the suit was cognisable by the Small Cause Court or not. A suit, in my opinion, is cognisable by the Small Cause Court if in respect both of its character and of the amount or value of its subject-matter it is within the jurisdiction of the Court. This suit in respect of the character of the relief claimed, was clearly one which the Small Cause Court was entitled to entertain. [See Peary Mohun Ghosaul v. Harran Chunder Gangooly (1).]

Was it also within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court by reason of the amount or value of its subject-matter? That depends upon whether the amount or value is that actually recoverable or ascertained at the trial, or that claimed by the plaintiff and set out in the plaint.

The law and practice in British India, contained partly in legislative enactments, and partly in a long and continuous stream of judicial decisions, are, in my opinion, in favour of the latter view.

Learned Counsel for the defendant urged that if this view is to prevail, the effect will be that if the plaintiff elects to value his claim at Rs. 1,200 the suit will come within section 22, while if he inflates his claim to Rs. 12,000 the section will not be applicable. In favour of his contention he has cited an unreported judgment of my brother Buckland, in suit No. 1657 of 1922. With great respect to the learned Judge I find myself unable to agree in the opinion which he expressed in that case as to the construction of section 22. If the test of the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit be that for which the defendant contends, one result would appear to be that in a suit, for example, in respect of negligence or of trespass, in which the damages are at large, and it is impossible a priori to estimate, even approximately, the amount of the damages which ultimately will be awarded, a plaintiff, however bona fide may be his estimate of the damage he has suffered, would be unable to bring his suit in the High Court without running the risk of losing his costs even if he were to be successful. In my opinion, the object of the Legislature was to prevent congestion in the High Court, and to provide, where the plaintiff values his claim at a sum which brings his suit within the jurisdiction both of the High Court and of the Small Cause Court, and yet elects to institute proceedings in the High Court, that he should do so at his peril. It is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended ex post facto to penalise a plaintiff because he had failed to guess correctly which was the proper Court in which to launch his suit. If the construction urged upon me by the defendant were the correct one, it would result in a mere gamble and add a new terror to litigation.

Chief Justice Edge makes some pertinent observations on this subject in Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (2). There the learned Chief Justice says :—

" Now it has been held by this Court in Mahabir Singh v. Behari Lal (3) that " for the purpose of determining the proper Appellate Court in a civil suit, what is to be looked to is the value of the original suit, that is to say, 'the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit ' ; such ' amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit' must be taken to be the value assigned by the plaintiff in his plaint and not the value as found by the Court, unless it appears that, either purposely or through gross negligence, the true value of the suit has been altogether misrepresented in the plaint." As a matter of fact in this case the value assigned by the plaintiff in his plaint was Rs. 1,500. That valuation made the suit one which was triable in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and that valuation also made the appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge lie to the Court of the District Judge. The law contemplates that, in many cases, it may be impossible for a plaintiff, at the inception of his suit to state correctly the value of the relief which he seeks, as for example, in cases to which section 11 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870 (Act No. VII of 1870) applies. This was particularly a case in which, until all the evidence had been taken, it was impossible for the plaintiff to put anything more than a hypothetical value on the relief claimed qua the balance in the hands of Babu Madho Das. In our opinion it would be impossible to hold that the jurisdiction of an Appellate Court should depend upon the amount of the decree of the Appellate Court. Take, for example, this case. The lower Appellate Court here being satisfied that the plaintiff under his second relief was entitled to a decree for over Rs. 7,000, gave him that decree. If the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to give that decree, what would have been the result ? According to the argument for the defendant-appellant the lower Appellate Court could have done nothing except return the memorandum of appeal for presentation in the High Court. It could not, according to that contention logically worked out, have given the plaintiff in his appeal a decree for any sum whatever, even a sum less than Rs. 5,000, as if that contention was correct, its jurisdiction was determined by the finding that the plaintiff was entitled in appeal to a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000. If that contention were correct, and the lower Appellate Court returned the memorandum of appeal, and it was presented in this Court as a first appeal, it is conceivable that this Court might have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled, we shall say, to Rs. 2,000 only. Now if the defendant's contention were correct, in that event what could this Court do except again return the memorandum of appeal to be presented in the Court having jurisdiction, i.e., that of the District Judge ? That is an illustration which we think goes to show that it is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which controls the jurisdiction, not only of the first Court, but of the Appellate Court, and not the amount which may be found and decreed by the first Court or by the Appellate Court."

It has repeatedly been held by the High Courts in India that the test of the amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit is to be determined by the amount set forth in the plaint. [See Lakshman Bhatkar v. Babaji Bhatkar (4), Mahabir Singh v. Behari Lal (3), Hamidunessa Bibi v. Gopal Chandra Malakar (5) and Raj Krishna Dey v.

Bepin Behari Dey (6).] And a perusal of the material statutes leads me to the same conclusion. By the Suits Valuation Act of 1887, section 8, "the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for the purpose of jurisdiction shall be the same."

By the Court-Fees Act of 1870, section 4, court-fees are payable as indicated by the Schedule to that Act. By the Bengal Fees Amendment Act of 1922, section 5, court-fees are payable according to the amount or value appearing in the plaint [See also on this subject Court-Fees Act of 1870, sections 5 and 7, sub-sections (1) and (4), and section 17 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, section 18, Exp. I, and also sections 20 and 21 and 39 (1), (2) and (4). See also Civil Procedure Code, O. VII, r. 1 (i), r. 2 and r. 11 (b)].

In clause 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, it is provided that the High Court shall not have such Original Jurisdiction in a case falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta in which the debt, or damage, or value of the property sued for does not exceed Rs. 100. It has to be observed that the words are "sued for" and not "recoverable."

In my opinion, on a true construction of section 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, where a plaintiff institutes a suit of a character cognisable by the Small Cause Court in the High Court, and estimates the value or amount of his claim in the plaint at a sum which is within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, section 22 is applicable to the suit, and the plaintiff must be taken to have deliberately accepted the risk to which the provisions of the section expose him. On the other hand, the plaintiff's estimate of the value or amount of his suit may be so high that the suit is not cognisable by the Small Cause Court, but it is erroneous for that reason to suppose that the plaintiff is entitled, by a designed exaggeration of the claim, to oust the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The plaintiff by placing a fictitious value on his claim is not at liberty to determine the tribunal by which his suit is to be tried. [See cases cited supra, also Dayaram v. Gordhandas (7), Ashiq Ali v. Imtiaz Begam (8)].

Ample safeguards are provided to meet such a contingency. Where the relief obtained in the plaint is incorrectly valued, the Court may reject the plaint, or return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court under O. VII, rr. 10 and 11. The Court of first instance, in a proper case where it deems such a preliminary investigation to be desirable, will itself determine the amount and value of the subject-matter of the suit, if objection is taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues are first framed and recorded. [See Suits Valuation Act, section 11 and Koti Pujari v. Manjaya (9)].

Moreover, the High Court under section 35 of the Civil Procedure Code possesses an unfettered discretion of deciding all questions of costs in such a suit. It might, for example, under such circumstances, deprive the plaintiff wholly of costs, or only award him such costs as he would have recovered if he had brought his suit in the Small Cause Court.

Courts of Justice, in construing a statute, must endeavour to discover the meaning to be given to it by a consideration of its terms. Little or no assistance is to be obtained by referring to other statutes in which the words used are not the same.

The provisions of the English County Court Acts from 1867 to 1919 do not contain the safe-guards which are to be found in the Indian practice. Moreover, the provisions of these Acts differ materially from those contained in the Statute relevant to the issues raised on this application, and the decisions thereunder proceed upon different considerations, and I do not, therefore, propose to refer to them.

In my opinion, questions of practice in India are to be determined in accordance with the principles laid down in the Courts in India.

Bearing in mind the evidence adduced at the hearing of this suit, and having regard to all the circumstances, I am not disposed to vary the decree which has been passed.

Letters Patent Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the order of Mr. Justice Broadway, dated the 5th December 1922.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The date of the mortgages with which these appeals are concerned is not a matter which can be reopened in second appeal, and the sole point on which we have to come to a finding, is whether these suits to redeem are barred by Article 134 of Limitation Act.

The learned Judge in Chambers has held that the recital in the appellants' sale-deeds that their vendors' title reposed on a mortgage put them to inquiry, and they cannot be regarded as purchasers in good faith of an absolute title, such as their sale-deeds purported to convey.

Article 134 of the Limitation Act fixes a period of 12 years for a suit.

"To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration".

Now if the Article alone were regarded, and the matter were res integra it would be hard to resist the conclusion that the transferee from a trustee and the transferee from a mortgagee are placed in the same position, and as, admittedly, the trustee's transferee comes within the shelter of the Article even in the absence of good faith, the mortgagee's transferee in spite of the knowledge of the defect in his absolute title would appear to be safe from attack from the mortgagor after the lapse of 12 years.

On the question whether Article 148 and Article 134 are in conflict, there has been some divergence among the High Courts, and for the appellants chief reliance is placed on two Madras rulings reported as Muthaya Chettiv.Kanthappa Chetty (1) and Narayanasami Naicker v. Periasamy Odayar (2), but, an examination of these rulings reveals the fact that the point was dealt with obiter and in a very cursory manner, and the same is true of Bhaiva Khan v. Bhiku Sazba (3) and Yesu Ramji Kalinath v. Balkrishna Lakshman (4).

An examination of the other authorities cited at the Bar indicates that the almost universal view is that only a transferee with a bona fide belief at the time of the conveyance can claim the protection of Article 134 and that in other cases the suit to redeem against him is governed by Article 148. We bow to the weight of authority and reject the appellants' contentions.

(4) 15 B. 583 ; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 393.

Finally it is urged that the suit is barred by Article 144, but this a new point, and its decision would involve a finding of fact, viz., whether the appellants' possession was adverse to the knowledge of the respondents. It cannot be heard at this stage.

For these reasons, we dismiss the appeals with costs.

Will in favour of grandson excluding son, validity of —Creditors of son, object to save property from, legality of.

There is no law which prohibits a person from taking measures to ensure that his self-acquired property over which he has an absolute power of disposal should enure for the benefit of his minor grandsons and should not be taken by the creditors of his son. A devise of immoveable property over which the testator has an absolute power of disposal, in favour of the testator's grand-sons, to the exclusion of his son, with the object that the property should not fall into the hands of the creditors of the son, is, therefore, perfectly legal. (p. 322, col. 2).

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 15th August 1922, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Betul, dated the 27th March 1922.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a house and well and the crop in occupancy land No. 344 of Betul Bazar were not liable to attachment in execution of the decree of the defendant against their deceased father. The first Court dismissed their suit as regards the house and well but awarded the claim as regards the crop. Both parties appealed and the appeals were dismissed by the District Judge, Hoshangabad. The plaintiffs make this second appeal as regards the house.

The plaintiffs' father was one Bansidhar whose father was Chandikaparasad. Chandikaparasad's wife was the daughter of the sister of one Durgadin who was the original owner of the house. It is contended that Durgadin gave the house to Chandikaparasad who left it by his Will to his grandsons, the present appellants, to the exclusion of their father Bansidhar. The lower Appellate Court has found that the house really belonged to Chandikaparasad. The first Court has found that the will of Chandikaparasad is proved on the evidence of (P. Ws. 6 and 10), the attesting witnesses. The lower Appellate Court has not disagreed with this finding but holds that inasmuch as the Will is dated 10th July 1919 and the suit in which the decree of the defendant was obtained was filed in the previous year ; there can be no doubt that the reason the property was not left to Bansidhar the plaintiffs' father, was to defraud the defendant by raising the plea that the property belonged to Bansidhar's sons the present plaintiffs. There is no other reason, apparent or alleged for passing over the son Bansidhar in favour of the grandsons, the plaintiffs, and even (P. W. 1) has admitted that Bansidhar used to live in the house within the last two years. It is not pleaded that the debt on which the decree of the defendant is based is such as would not bind the estate of the judgment-debtor Bansidhar liable to attachment in execution of the decree of the defendant.

The finding of fact of the lower Courts taken together, therefore, are that the house was the property of Chandikaparasad and that he left it by will to his grandsons; the object was that it should not be taken by the creditors of his son. The house being the self-acquired property of Chandikaparasad, he was entitled to dispose of it as he liked.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the Will was not intended to be acted upon. I am not aware of any law which prohibits a person taking measures to ensure that his self-aquired property should enure for the benefit of his minor grandsons and not be taken by the creditors of his son. I have no doubt whatever that Chandikaparasad bequeathed the house by Will to plaintiffs in order that it might not be taken by the creditors of his son. There is nothing illegal in this, and once the Will is held proved the plaintiffs are the owners, and their father Bansidhar has no interest in the property nor is it liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of his debts. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will, therefore, be set aside and the plaintiff's claim decreed with costs throughout.

Provincial Insolvency Act, (III of 1907), s. 37—"creditor" meaning of.

Babu Narendra Coomar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Hira Lal Chakkrabarty, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

B. B. Ghose, J.—These two appeals are from orders made by the District Judge in insolvency proceedings arising out of applications made for adjudication as insolvents by two persons who are brothers. The appellants were the creditors of the two insolvents by two separate mortgage-bonds. The mortgage-bonds are dated 1893 and 1907 respectively. The mortgagors were the two insolvents and also two other brothers of those insolvents. It appears that one of the mortgage-bonds was sued on and a decree was obtained for Rs. 630. The amount alleged to have been due on the other bond from the mortgagors was Rs. 1,300 odd. Taken together, about Rs. 2,000 was due for those debts in May 1917. Then all the four brothers executed a deed of conveyance with regard to some of the mortgaged properties which included a house in Sonamukhi and some jote lands. The deed of sale is dated the 23rd May 1917 and the properties were sold for Rs. 2,000 to the appellant's father. Thereafter, two of the mortgagors presented petitions to the District Judge for being adjudged insolvents in July 1917 and an adjudication order was made and a Receiver was appointed of the properties of the insolvents. Then, the Receiver applied to the District Judge for avoiding the sale to the extent of the shares of the two insolvents in the properties included in the deed of sale dated the 23rd May 1917, and an order was made setting aside the sale with regard to those shares. That order, however, was set aside by this Court on appeal by the purchasers in December 1919 and both the cases were sent back for retrial. The cases were heard again and, on the 12th June 1920, the District Judge has made an order in each case avoiding the sale of the interests of the two insolvents. These appeals are preferred by the purchasers against those orders.

In these cases, the only evidence adduced was adduced by the purchasers. The sale was sought to be avoided under section 37 of Act III of 1907, which governs these cases, as having been in favour of creditors. The question in these cases is whether the sale was to a "creditor with a view of giving that creditor a preference over the other creditors." It is contended on behalf of the appellants that there is no evidence that this was so. The answer to the question depends upon whether section 37 applies to these cases. The purchasers were secured creditors and they were entitled to be paid to the full extent of their debts so secured in preference over other creditors,

There is distinction in the Act between a creditor and a secured creditor and the purchasers in this case do not come within the expression "creditor" as contemplated in section 37. In my judgment section 37 does not apply to these purchasers. The learned Judge has, however, found that the properties were worth Rs. 4,000 and it was not necessary to sell them for Rs. 2,000 and he observes: "Such being the case, I declare that the sale set up was not a bona fide but a fraudulent one intended to defeat or delay creditors." He, therefore, annuled the sales to the extent of the insolvents' share. There is no direct evidence as to the value of the properties, and it should be borne in mind that these two properties along with others were subject to the mortgages which were satisfied by the sale, and the other properties were released. The brothers of the insolvents, who had no object in making a fraudulent conveyance, joined in the sale by which they also lost their title to the properties. Then, the evidence shows that the purchasers were not aware at the time of the sale that the insolvents were heavily indebted, and there was nothing to show they were not acting bona fide. The sale, therefore, cannot be said to be fraudulent. The learned Judge further holds that the bari was not sold and was not intended to be sold. As a matter of fact, the bari was included in the deed of sale for which there was consideration, and the title of all the vendors passed to the purchasers in both the properties by the transaction. Whether the purchasers allowed any of the vendors to live in the house after the sale seems to me immaterial. No question has been raised as to the genuineness of the mortgage transactions. It is difficult to see how this sale can be impeached on the ground that it was either colourable or without consideration because this bari itself was the subject of the mortgages in satisfaction of which it was sold. I am, therefore, of opinion that the sale cannot be impeached as a mere colourable transaction. On these grounds, the judgment and orders of the learned Judge avoiding the sale to the extent of the interests of the two insolvents in the properties should be set aside. The appellants are entitled to recover their costs in these appeals from the estate of the insolvents. In appeal No. 305, the hearing fee is assessed at four gold mohurs and, in Appeal No. 306, no hearing fee is allowed but the appellants will be entitled to recover the other costs incurred.

Appeal from the order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, dated the 5th December 1918.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is the outcome of a suit brought under section 92

ZULFIKAR ALI v. NABI BAKHSH

Code of Civil Procedure, by Nabi Bakhsh and others against Ghulam Mustafa Shah and Fateh Ali Shah, sons of Hamid Shah.

The suit was instituted on the 15th April 1915, and the subject was a building in Multan City consisting of four shops with a mosque on the top of it. The plaint stated the defendants to be mutwallis of the mosque, and it prayed for their dismissal and the appointment of new mutwallis and a scheme of management, and for an order to the defendants to furnish accounts of the income and expenditure of the alleged wakf property.

The defendants denied mismanagement and liablity to render accounts, and stated that their father Hamid Shah had constructed the shops and the mosque which was originally a mere masalla or prayer platform, and had arranged that a part of the income from the shops should be devoted to the upkeep of the masalla, and the remainder enjoyed by himself and his descendants. In an oral statement Ghulam Mustafa Shah defendant expressly said that the shops were not endowed property, but were the property of the defendants.

The suit was at first dismissed by the Trial Court and was then remanded for redecision by the District Judge. It is unnecessary to say more than this about the earlier proceedings. The issues upon which the Trial Court has adjudicated after the remand are as follows :—

(1) Did the defendants' father build the mosque and shops ?

(2) Did he make it wakf alal aulad ? Is it valid under Muhammadan Law ?

(3) Are the defendants proprietors of the mosque and shops, and are they in possession as such and not as mutwallis ?

(4) Can defendants get any rights in the property or its income by their own previous acts or conduct ?

(5) Do not the defendants make a proper arrangement for the repairs etc., of the mosque ?

(6) Are the defendants, under any circumstances, liable to removal ?

(7) How much is due from defendants out of the rent of shops ?

Ghulam Mustafa Shah died before the 17th October 1917, and for him were substituted, as defendants, Zulfikar Ali Shah, his son, and Mst. Sardar Bibi, his widow. Fateh Ali Shah died before the 28th November 1918, and his representative was taken to be Zulfikar Ali Shah.

On the 5th December 1918, the lower Court decided the above issues. It held that Hamid Shah, father of the original defendants, had built the mosque and shops, but was not the founder of the mosque as there had been a mosque at the place before. Secondly, it held that the defendants were not the owners of the property, but had been in possession merely as Mutwallis of the mosque, and that they had no rights as owners of the property. It held further that no decision of the 5th and 6th issues was necessary since the original defendants had died and Zulfikar Ali Shah, not being a descendant of the founder of the mosque, had no claim on the post of mutwalli. On the 7th issue a preliminary decree was passed ordering the defendants to submit accounts.

On the 3rd January the Court fixed the 15th January for a final decree. It proceeded to pass a final decree on the 13th January by which the defendants were ordered to pay Rs. 5,000 from the property of the original defendants, and a committee of 5 managers, including Nabi Bakhsh, one of the plaintiffs, was appointed. On the 15th January, the date fixed, the defendants submitted an appplication praying that a final decree should not be passed till the decision of their appeal from the preliminary decree. This was endorsed by a note that a final decree had been passed already on the 13th January. There is no explanation of the very unusual procedure of the lower Court in fixing the 15th January, and then disposing of the case two days earlier, and for this reason alone the final decree would have to be set aside.

The defendants have appealed against both decrees. The finding of the learned Sub-Judge on the 1st issue is based upon documents which have not been proved, and upon evidence recorded by his predecessor which does not appear to us to have been understood properly. There is no tangible proof of the existence of any previous mosque, and we must hold that Hamid Shah was the original founder of this religious institution. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents does not dispute this conclusion.

The finding of the lower Court that the defendants were not owners of the shops is not challenged by the present appellants, and it is admitted that the whole premises are wakf property.

The question of mismanagement was not decided by the lower Court, but after examining the evidence we have no hesitation in holding that no mismanagement has been established. One of the plaintiffs' own witnesses, Din Mahomed, has admitted that the mosque is and has been properly equipped with everything necessary. A criminal complaint made by Gulam Mustafa Shah on the 24th February 1915 against Nabi Bakhsh and others has been put in by the plaintiffs and relied on by them. This complaint alleged that Nabi Bakhsh and others had interfered with repairs which were being carried out by the complainant at the mosque in question, and had declared that he would not allow the complainant to repair the place. If, therefore, there has been any neglect to carry out repairs the plaintiffs, or some of them, are responsible themselves.

Zulfikar Ali Shah is, we hold, the descendant of the founder, and he has first claim to be appointed manager. There is nothing to show that he is unfit. The two original defendants, admittedly, were mutwallis. There is no evidence that they were appointed by outside persons, and it is clear that they succeeded Hamid Shah, and that the mutwalli ship has gone by descent. Zulfikar Ali Shah has now succeeded as mutwalli and we see no reason why he should be removed.

There remains the question whether the plaintiffs have any right to call for accounts. As already stated, we hold that there has been no mismanagement, and it has been made clear in the evidence that Hamid Shah's disposition was that the income of the shops should be applied, in the first instance to the upkeep of the mosque, and that the residue, if any, should be the remuneration of the mutwalli. There is nothing contrary to law in a trust of this nature. As pointed out in Ismail Ali Khan v. Hamedi Begum (1) the situation would have been entirely different had the dedication allowed the mutwallis to appropriate, in the first instance, whatever amount they pleased and obliged them only to apply the remainder, if any, for the purposes of the mosque. In the present case, there is evidence that the late defendants have paid the Imam and have kept the mosque up on shop rents, which originally were not more than a few annas per mensem. There is also evidence, and it is a part of the plaintiffs case, that the plaintiffs or their predecessors, some years ago, sunk a well for the use of worshippers at this mosque, either paying the costs themselves, or collecting subscriptions for it. Had there been a surplus from the rents of the shops to which the mosque was entitled, there is no doubt that the cost or part of the cost of the well would have been claimed from the original defendants, and it is clear that this was done. No good cause has been established for the defendants being ordered to furnish accounts.

We accept both appeals, and order that the plaintiffs' suit be dismissed. In view of the defendants' original pleadings we order parties to bear their own costs in the 1st Court. The appellants will have their costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure primarily involves the question of the interpretation of some additional words added to section 119 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). It is enacted there that subject to the Provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, as applied by this Act, an appeal shall lie from original or appellate decree of a Collector, in a suit of a description mentioned in clause (2) of section 108, to the District Judge if the value of the suit does not exceed by Rs. 5,000. In the present case a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent was instituted in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the second class in the District of Bara Banki. A certain amount was claimed by the proprietor and the defence was that the amount of the rent was a sum entered in the village record. The proprietor replicated by an exhibition of fraudulent concealment of rent to avoid enhancement of revenue and alleged that what he claimed was the actual rent agreed between the parties, though a lower rent was entered in the village record with the connivance of the patwari. The Assistant Collector accepted the facts to be as put forward by the proprietor and entered a finding that the amount of the rent was the amount entered in the plaint. He passed a decree against the defendant in accordance with this finding. The tenant took the matter in appeal to the Collector of the District, under section 116 (a), who upheld the finding of fact of the Assistant Collector. The tenant next appealed to the learned District Judge of Lucknow under section 119 as such an appeal from an appellate decree of the Collector is allowed under the provisions of that section. The learned Judge was of opinion, that his powers of interference in an appeal from an appellate decree of the Collector were the same as his powers in the case of an appeal from an original decree of the Collector. Having taken that view he examined the evidence on the record and came to the conclusion that the finding of fact of the two Courts subordinate to his was incorrect. He held the rent to be the amount entered in the village record. In revision before this Court it is pleaded on behalf of the proprietor that the learned District Judge over-stepped the limit of his jurisdiction, because his interference in appeal from an appellate decree of a Collector was restricted to the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, similar to those for which a second appeal may lie to the High Court.

JAGANNATH PERSHAD v. BECHU

A preliminary objection was taken by the learned Counsel for the respondent that this Court has no authority under the Oudh Rent Act to exaimne tho procedure of the learned District Judge under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This matter, however, is concluded by authority in favour of tho jurisdiction of this Court. In Chauharja Bakhsh v. Kalka Pande (1) the question was considered by a Bench of this Court and a preliminary objection, such as is raised here, was rejected. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act, are made applicable to all suits and other proceedings under that Act by section 135. There is no special provision in the Act in bar of the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court over any of the Courts in Oudh subordinate to it in the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure. It must, therefore, follow that the provisions of section 115 will have effect even where the District Judge has acted as a Rent Court.

In my opinion, the view taken by the learned Judge of the provisions of section 119 is incorrect. He has not appreciated the force of the opening words of the section. "Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as applied by this Act." An appeal from an appellate decree will attract the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and will be limited to only certain grounds on which a second appeal is admissible. It is true that this is not specifically stated in this particular section or anywhere else, but the provisions of other sections and the trend of the Act imply such a restriction. By section 119 (A) the rules for the time being in force in regard to the manner in which appeals from the decrees of Civil Courts are heard and determined are made applicable in respect to appeals under the Act both to the District Judge and to the Judicial Commissioner. I think the provisions of section 116 or, if I may be permitted to say so, the explicit and implied provisions of that section throw a considerable light on the method of codification and the manner in which the Act should be interpreted. That section allows an appeal from a decree made by a Collector to the Commissioner and also from a decree made by an Assistant Collector of the first class. If the Collector happens to pass an original decree there is a proviso that the appeal, in cases where one lies to the Commissioner and not to the Civil Court, shall not lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Even the first decision of a Collector on facts is held to be final in matters to which an appeal is allowed to the Commissioner. At the same time there is no such explicit proviso as regards a finding of fact by a Collector recorded in appeal from a decree made by an Assistant Collector of the second class. The framers of the Act obviously thought that this would be implied because section 116 also opens with the words similar to section 119 "subject to the provisions...of the Code of Civil Procedure." This method of codifying may be lacking in merit, but I think there ought to be no doubt as to the meaning. It appears that the word "appellate" was added to section 119 by Act No. IV of 1921 in order to remove second appeals in Rent and cognate suits from the cognizance of the Commissioner under section 116 and to give jurisdiction over them to the District Judge and not with a view to make the District Judge a Judge 'of facts in second appeal, contrary to well recognised principles of legislation in India. If the latter intention had been entertained by the local Legislature, a first appeal to the Collector would have been considered superfluous and discontinued by an amendment of Section 116. (a).

The one question now remains whether the decree of the lower Appellate Court is open to interference by this Court under section 115. The learned Counsel for the respondent ingeniously argued that the point decided by the lower Appellate Court was one of law as depending on inferences to be derived from certain facts. Unfortunately for this argument, the learned Judge makes it clear that he has not proceeded on an examination of the facts of the case from that point of view. He has deliberately stated that he re-opened the question of fact because he was entitled to do so under the law. In doing so it is clear, in accordance with the interpretation placed by me on the wording of section 119, that he has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. The learned Counsel for the applicant referred to a ruling of the Privy Council which completely covers this point Nafar Chandar Pal v. Shukur Sheikh (2). Their Lordships observed at page 195 of the report. "Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle. The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law, so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other; but the question whether the fact has been proved, when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact.

"Their Lordships have carefully considered the Judgment of the High Court with these matters present to their minds, but they are unable to find that the decision of the District Judge stood in any shadowy borderland between fact and law."

Here also the finding of the Collector after weighing the evidence on the record is clear and distinct as to the amount of rent payable by the tenant to the proprietor and does not stand "in any shadowy borderland between fact and law." The learned Judge has given excellent reasons in support of his finding of fact but he had no jurisdiction to interfere with the finding of fact recorded by the Collector.

In the result, this application and the other similar applications are allowed. The decree of the learned District Judge is set aside and the decree of the Collector restored. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case I direct that parties shall bear their own costs subsequent to the decree of the Collector.

A finding as to the ancestral nature of certain property based on mere conjectures and presumptions is liable to be set aside in second appeal. (p. 330, col. 1).

Bhagwan Das v. Shamsher Singh, 44 Ind. Cas. 433; 33 P. L. R. 1918 ; 55 P. W. R. 1918, followed.

The mere fact that the ancestor of the plaintiffs and of the last male holder of the property, who were brothers, were at one time in possession of lands in the patti in which the land in dispute is situate, is not sufficient on which to base a finding that their father was in possession of the land in dispute. (p. 330, col. 2).

Mr. M. L. Puri, for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondents sued for a declaration that the gift of certain land, dated the 22nd July 1918, by Musammat Sobhi, widow of Kaula, to her daughter Musammat Bishni should not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiff. There were two points for decision : (1) whether the plaintiffs were reversioners of Kaula ; and (2) whether the land was their ancestral property. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiffs had not proved that they were Kaula's reversioners, but it did not decide the question whether the land was ancestral or not. The learned District Judge decided both points in plaintiffs' favour and decreed their claim.

In second appeal by the defendants it is urged that the finding of the District Judge that the land is the plaintiffs' ancestral property is based upon no evidence. A finding of fact by lower Appellate Court if based upon evidence is no doubt binding upon this Court, but if it is not based upon any evidence it is not binding. The only evidence referred to by the learned District Judge in support of his finding is in the kaiffiyat deh of 1888 when the proprietors of Patti Sudh Singh where the land in suit is situated, stated that Kuman, Sukhia and Dhuman were their ancestors, and that Dhuman's branch held one plough and Kuman and Sukhia half a plough each. Kaula is the descendant of Sukhia and the plaintiffs are the descendants of Kuman and Dhuman. These three, it has been held by the learned District Judge, are the sons of Shamira, and he appears to have considered that because these three brothers held the land in the Patti in the shares above stated, it must have descended to them from their father. The kaiffiyat deh shows that Phanu was another proprietor in this Patti and that his share in the land was proportionate to two and a half ploughs. We do not see how it is legitimate from these facts to draw the inference that the father of Kuman, Sukhia and Dhuman must have held the land. In the case reported as Jiwan Singh v. Har Kaur (1), the learned Judges said that the express mention of the common ancestor in the pedigree-table was presumptive proof that the land had descended from him. But Shamira's name does not appear in the pedigree table of the village and, therefore, even this amount of proof that the land descended from him is wanting. We have been referred to the case reported as Bhagwan Das v. Shamsher Singh (2), where it was held that a judgment based upon mere conjectures and presumptions was liable to be set aside even in second appeal. In that case on the death of an occupancy-tenant his collaterals claimed to succeed to his tenancy, and it was held that the onus lay on them to establish affirmatively that their common ancestor occupied the land. Here also it lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that their common ancestor Shamira occupied the land. Bahadur Singh, the father of Kaula, is shown in the Settlement Record of 1852 as owning some land at that time, but no attempt has been made to show that he was in possession of the land now in suit. If this had been shown it would have been a piece of evidence in favour of the plaintiff's case. We hold that the mere fact that the ancestors of the plaintiffs and of Kaula were formerly in possession of the lands in this Patti is not sufficient on which to base a finding that their father was in possession of the land in suit.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore the order of the first Court, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 11th April, 1923.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—According to the arguments of the learned Counsel himself who appears on behalf of Must. Chandar Kuar this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the custody of the child, the son of Must. Chandar Kuar and Chotay Lal. It was pointed out by the learned Counsel that under section 19 of the Guardian and Wards Act the District Judge had no authority to appoint Chotay Lal guardian of his son. This contention is correct as laid down by this Court in Mushaf Husain v. Muhammad Jawad (1), following the Privy Counsel ruling reported in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2). There is, therefore, no guardian appointed of the child. The father is the natural guardian and has at present the custody of the child. I do not see how the applicant without being appointed guardian by the District Judge can obtain custody of the child. If she wants custody of the child the proper procedure for her would be to apply to the Court of the District Judge for certificate of guardianship. If she does obtain a certificate she will then be entitled to claim the custody under section 25. At present as the proceedings stand neither the District Judge nor this Court has any authority to remove the minor from the custody of his natural guardian even if that natural guardian is unfit. As I observed the fitness or unfitness of the respondent to be guardian does not arise in the proceedings. There is no other guardian to take charge of the boy and no one has taken proceedings to be appointed guardian by reason of the unfitness of the father, the natural guardian of the child, to hold that post of responsibility. This is, therefore, not the occasion to inquire into the character and the capacity of the respondent whether he is fit to be guardian of the child or not. It may be noted that the lower Court passed an order under section 25 in favour of the respondent father on the basis of an illegal order appointing the father guardian of his minor son. If there had been no such order a father, the natural guardian of his son, would not have been able to apply under section 25 for the custody of his son Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (3). The remedy of the father lies through a regular suit. The District Judge passed both orders; one of appointment of the father as guardian and the other under section 25, without jurisdiction. Now that the boy is in the custody of his father the natural guardian, other considerations will arise. I saw the child in Court and it looked happy, so no urgent necessity arises to remove the child from the father's custody and start proceedings of my own motion for the appointment of another guardian and give that guardian temporary custody of the child under section 12. The order of the District Judge appointing the respondent Chotay Lal guardian of his son is not appealed against, so it is not possible for this Court to cancel the order. But the attention of District Judge is drawn to the rulings quoted above. He had no authority to appoint Chotay Lal guardian of his infant son under the Guardian and Wards Act.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Custom—Alienation—Widow, mortgage by—Necessity—Marriage of daughter—Amount of expenditure.

It is a well recognized custom that a daughter should be given some jewellery on the occasion of her marriage, and it is also necessary that the guests who come to the bride's house on that occasion should be properly feasted and entertained. (p 333, col. 1).

A mortgage of her husband's estate, therefore, made by a widow to raise money for these purposes is justified on the ground of necessity. (p. 333, col. 1).

What would be reasonable expenditure for the marriage of a daughter if the father were alive, would be reasonable on the part of his widow after his death if the circumstances of the estate remain the same. (p 333, col. 1).

JUDGMENT.— On the 25th of November 1921 Mussammat Partapi, widow of one Bhola, mortgaged 30 kanals, 5 marlas of land in village Sus in the Tahsil and District Hoshiarpur to one Munshi for a sum of Rs. 1,700. The plaintiffs, who are the collaterals of Mussammat Partapi's husband, thereupon brought this suit for a declaration that the alienation was without consideration and legal necessity and that it would not affect their reversionary interest. The consideration for the mortgage as recited in the deed was made up of the following items :—

(1) Due to prior mortgagees...	510	0	0
(2) Expenses for registration,...	30	0	0
(3) Left in deposit with the mortgagee for defraying the marriage expenses of Mussammat Kisri, the daughter of the mortgagor.	1,160	0	0

The Trial Court dismissed the suit holding that consideration and necessity had been fully established. An appeal was preferred against the decision to the District Judge who was of opinion that a sum of Rs. 1,160 was not a reasonable amount of expenditure to incur on the marriage of a daughter and that half of that sum would have been quite sufficient for that purpose. No objection was raised by the plaintiffs with regard to the other items mentioned in the mortgage-deed, and it was consequently held that they had been raised for a necessary purpose. The appeal was accordingly accepted and a decree awarded to the plaintiffs for the declaration prayed for subject to their paying a sum of Rs. 1,120 to the defendant-mortgagee when succession opened out. The defendant-mortgagee has now come up in second appeal to this Court through Mr. Fakir Chand, and I have heard Dr. Nand Lal on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents.

After hearing the learned Counsel on both sides I am of opinion, that the learned District Judge was not justified in reducing the marriage expenses to one-half, and that the plaintiffs' suit ought to have been dismissed in its entirety. That the marriage of Mussammat Partapi's daughter did in fact take place shortly after the mortgage-deed in question was executed cannot for a moment be doubted. It is also clear from the evidence that the whole of the sum of Rs. 1,160 was actually expended over the marriage of the girl and that the expenditure was personally supervised by the mortgagee with whom the money had been left in deposit. There is also evidence on the record to show that the prices of foodstuffs were very high at the time when the marriage was celebrated, and that an expenditure of Rs. 1,500 to Rs. 2,000 over the marriage of a daughter was not regarded as unreasonable for a person of Mussammat Partapi's position and status in life. It has been argued that the fact that the money was applied to a necessary purpose was not sufficient to justify the loan, and that it ought to have been proved that there was not sufficient income available to meet legitimate expenses without charging the estate. In my opinion, there is more than ample evidence on the record to show that the income of the land was wholly insufficient to meet even the ordinary expenses of Mussammat Partapi's husband when he was alive. The husband owned 123 kanals of land altogether in this village, out of which he mortgaged 14 kanals during his lifetime and which the widow subsequently redeemed by paying off a sum of Rs. 530 to the mortgagees. It is hardly likely that Bhola would have mortgaged this land if the income was sufficient to meet his legitimate expenses. The patwari was produced in evidence, and he has stated that the major portion of the land is barani and that, though it could be let at the rate of Rs. 4 or Rs. 5 per kanal, yet the income actually realized by the widow was not more than Rs. 100 or Rs. 120 a year. It is in evidence that the widow served a notice upon the plaintiffs that they should make arrangements for the marriage of her girl and that she would be compelled to alienate the property if they declined to come to her aid. The plaintiffs admittedly did not pay any attention to this notice, and the widow was consequently obliged to raise money and to make such arrangements as she thought best under the circumstances. The learned District Judge is of opinion that it was absolutely unnecessary for the widow to give any jewellery to her daughter or to expend any money in entertaining the guests who must have come to her house on the occasion of the marriage, and that the expenditure incurred was wholly unreasonable. This view is obviously incorrect. It is a well recognized custom that a daughter should be given some jewellery on the occasion of her marriage, and it is also necessary that the guests who come to the bride's house on that occasion should be properly feasted and entertained. As to what would be a reasonable expenditure by a widow the general rule laid down in Gurdit Singh v. Mehr Singh (1), is that what would be reasonable for a marriage if the husband were living would be reasonable on the part of the widow after death if the circumstances of the estate remained the same. Having regard to the amount of land possessed by the husband and to his social position in life, I do not think that an expenditure of Rs. 1,160 over the marriage of his only daughter was unreasonable.

(1) 67 P. R. 1884.

The result is that I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 40 OF 1922.

Musammat NAND RANI KUAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 10, 14, 15, 22—Second summary settlement of 1858, effect—Lord Canning's Proclamation of 1858, effect of—Settlement of property after confiscation—Exclusive ownership—Trust created in favour of another, whether binding—Transfer or recognition of antecedent rights—Transfer in favour of immediate successor, effect of—Hindu law—Joint family—Separation—Unambiguous intention.

A Talukdar possessed of the legal estates in the Talukdari property may bind himself by equitable obligations to allow beneficial interests in the same property in favour of a designated individual or in favour of a Joint Hindu family of which he himself may be a member and that he does so in the exercise of his powers of alienation inter vivos or by making a testamentary disposition. (p. 344, col. 2).

Case-law discussed.

Notwithstanding the strong language of Oudh Estates Act, and in particular the enactment in section 10 that the Courts are to accept the lists framed under the Act as conclusive that the persons included in them are Talukdars or grantees, and, those of section 11; the Courts may nevertheless go behind the Act to the extent at least of recognising the trusts, and may give effect to beneficial titles distinct from the statutory title under the Act.

Section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act as well as section 14 deal with cases of transfers before the passing of the Act as also with cases after the passing of that Act. (p. 347, col. 1).

In the case of a transfer by a Talukdar, it is the date of the transfer which counts in determining whether the transferee occupies or not the particular status assigned to him by the provisions of sections 14 and 15 of the Oudh Estates Act.

Malka Jahan Sahiba v. Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow 6 I. A. 63 ; 3 Sar P C. J. 244 ; Bald. 194, relied on.

An unambiguous and defined intention on the part of one member of a Hindu joint family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty has the effect of creating a division of his interest which till then he held in jointness. (p. 348, col. 1).

A proprietor in Oudh died in 1849 and was succeeded by his two sons B. and G. After consfication of the property under Lord Canning's proclamation, the Second Summary Settlement of the estate was made with B. In 1860 he got the name of G. also entered in the Khewat in the column of Zamindar as having equal share with himself and subsequently in the same year, when enquiry was made from him by the Government as to the family custom of inheritance he declared that he and his brother were successors to the heritage in equal shares and that in future the descendants of them both would succeed according to religious ordinance and family usage. In 1867 G applied for partition but under a compromise agreed to accept an annuity. On the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, the name of B was entered in list I and list III prepared under section 8 of the act. B died in 1871 and G succeeded to the Taluka. On the latter's death in 1919 a dispute arose between his widow and the daughter of B as to the right to succeed to the estate :—

Held (1) that at the time of the Second Summary Settlement, after confiscation of the estate under Lord Canning's proclamation, B acquired exclusive title to the property.

(2) that, however, B by recognising the title of G. as to one half of the interest in the estate imposed a trust upon himself in favour of the latter to that extent.

(3) that this trust was discharged by the compromise under which G accepted an annuity and relinquished his right to partition.

(4) that the compromise could not be considered as a retransfer by G. in favour of B. It was a recognition of antecedent rights and not a transfer by one brother to the other.

(5) that, therefore, on the date of the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, B was a Talukdar within the meaning of that Act without any equitable obligations attached to the estate and on his death G was his lawful successor under section 22 of the Act and on the death of the latter, his widow was entitled to succeed.

(6) that even if there was a transfer in favour of G. the result would be the same as it would be a transfer in favour of the immediate successor which would not take the estate out of the operation of the Oudh Estates Act under section 15 of the Act.

Per Dalal, J. C.:—Section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act does not apply to an estate not under transfer at the time of the passing of the said Act. Whatever transfers may have been made before the passing of the Act, if at the passing of the Act the property was in possession of the Talukdar unburdened by any trust or vested interests, the provisions of section 15 would not apply.

JUDGMENT.

Dalal, J. C.—My learned colleague will write the main judgment, I desire to summarise briefly my view of the facts of the case and the conclusions to be drawn therefrom according to law. The facts are not intricate but the resultant deductions give rise to controversy. The property in list C is of small value, so it need not be separately considered. All the property in suit may be considered as one. It was the self-acquired property of one Bahadur Singh, who died in 1849 leaving him surviving two sons Bhagwant Singh the father of the plaintiff and Girdhari Singh the husband of the principal defendant Musammat Indar Kuar who alone among defendants counts in this litigation. This is the short pedigree :—

Bahadur Singh

Bhagwant Singh =Musammat Mahrani wife died 1913	Girdhari Singh =Musammat Indar Kuar (Principal deft.)
Musammat Nand Rani Plaintiff	Daughters (Other defendants)

On the 13th February 1856, Oudh was annexed and confiscation of all property was proclaimed in March 1858. The Second Summary Settlement was made with Bhagwant

Singh alone in 1858 (Ex. A22, p. 85, Part III) and a vernacular Sanad was granted to him on 27th October 1860 (Ex. A73, p. 23 Part III). During the preparation of the Khewa he got the name of his brother Girdhari Singh also entered in the Khewat in the column of name of zemindar, the entry being "Bhagwant Singh and Girdhari Singh in equal shares." (Ex. 10, page 87, Part III). In 1860 when inquiry was made from Bhagwant Singh as to the family custom of inheritance he declared that he and his younger brother Girdhari Singh were successors to the heritage in equal shares and that in future the descendants of them both shall be the heirs and successors according to religious ordinance and family usage (Ex. 115, p. 132). It is a disputed matter whether on 1st November 1861, a primogeniture Sanad was given to Bhagwant Singh or an ordinary one (Ex. 150, p. 26, Part III). Finding will be recorded in its proper place. On 15th July 1867 Girdhari Singh applied for partition of his half share (Ex. 51, p. 213, Part III) and subsequently on 9th August he protested at the application being sent to the British Indian Association (Ex. 52, p. 219) while the matter was pending before that association a compromise was effected between the brothers on 8th September (Ex. 53, p 221) by which Girdhari Singh accepted a money payment of Rs. 1,200 a year until the debt on the property was discharged and subsequently Rs. 2,600 a year. There was a condition that if the amount remained unpaid villages yielding net profits to that amount will be set apart from the Taluka. This compromise was approved and Girdhari Singh's suit dismissed by the Association on 12th September (Ex. A1, p. 223, Part III) and the order confirmed by the Financial Commissioner on 7th July 1869, (Ex. A 47, p. 225, Part III). On 12th January 1869 the Oudh Estates Act was passed and Bhagwant Singh's name appeared in List I and List III prepared under section 8 of the Act, that, he was one of the persons considered as Talukdars to whom Sanads had been or may be given by the British Government declaring that the succession to the estate comprised in such Sanads or grants shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture. The Lists are printed in Part I of the file at pages 151 and 152 and Bhagwant Singh's name appears in the two lists.

Bhagwant Singh died on 9th December 1871, and for the purposes of this litigation it will not be necessary to examine the two agreements subsuquently arrived at between his widow and Musammat Mahrani and his brother Girdhari Singh. If Bhagwant Singh owned the property at his death as a separated Hindu his daughter's present claim will be within limitation because Bhagwant Singh's widow a life-holder died in 1913, within 12 years of the institution of the present suit. If succession to the property was governed by section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, Girdhari Singh was a successor to the Taluka on Bhagwant Singh's death and the plaintiff would have no title to the property whatever the negotiations and agreement between the plaintiff's mother and Girdhari Singh may have been.

The plaintiff's case as argued by her learned counsel Mr. Wasim may be shortly put. Bhagwant Singh and his brother Girdhari Singh succeeded to their father's self-acquired property as joint tenants, that Bagwant Singh obtained the Summary Settlement as head and representative of the joint family made up of himself and his brother, that he remained throughout in possession of the property as manager of the joint family, that in 1867 there was separation in the family and Bhagwant Singh became sole owner of the family property as a separated Hindu and that on his death the plaintiff's mother for her life and the plaintiff after her mother's death became entitled to the property in suit. Even granting that prior to the confiscation the two brothers were joint tenants of the property, though it was self-acquired property of their father, the confiscation put an end to all previous rights Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (1) and there is no reason to suppose that Bhagwant Singh obtained the Summary Settlement as representing or as manager of a joint Hindu family. The settlement was made with him alone. Thus in my opinion the plaintiff's case based on the claim that Bhagwant Singh obtained settlement not in his personal capacity but in his representative capacity cannot stand.

INDAR KUAR v. NAND RANI KUAR

This position being a weak one the learned counsel put forward an alternative case under two heads (1) that after the Summary Settlement Bhagwant Singh transferred the property to the joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his brother or (2) that Bhagwant Singh held the property in trust for the joint family. If the case was one of trust the trust discharged itself in 1867, so there is no reason why the property in suit should not be governed by the Oudh Estates Act which was passed in 1869 at a time when no trust existed and Bhagwant Singh was full legal owner of the property unburdened by any trust. To save vested interests at the time of the passing of Act I of 1869, their Lordships of the Privy Council have in repeated cases taken the view of the actual holder being a trustee for the beneficiaries who had acquired vested interest in the property prior to the passing of the Act. Those are the series of cases of Hardeo Bakhsh's property reported in Thakoor Hardeo Bux v. Thakoor Jawahir Singh (2), Thakoor Hardeo Bux v. Thakoor Jawahir Singh (3), Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (4) and in Thukrain Sookraj Koowar v. Government, Baboo Ajeet Singh (Bhinga case) (5) the same view of a trust was taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dayal (Maurawan case) (6) their Lordships took the view of transfer, but that was with respect of the self-acquired property of the Talukdar which he treated as joint family property (see discussions of the principles of this case, last 12 lines Thakoor Hardeo Bux v. Thakoor Jawahir Singh (2) The better view, therefore, appears to be that Bhagwant Singh held the property as legal owner with a trust in favour of the joint Hindu family made up of himself and his brother. When the trust was wiped out in 1867 Bhagwant Singh's legal title remained and the property came within the purview of the Oudh Estates Act and Girdhari Singh succeeded to it under section 22 (6) of the Act.

In the case of a transfer, the learned counsel argued that property once transferred would have succession to it governed by section 15 of Act I of 1869 that is by rule of ordinary Hindu law. Secondly, it would not be an estate under section 23 of the Act because after partition Bhagwant Singh's sons if any would have an interest in the propery and Bhagwant Singh would not be deemed by the partition to have acquired a permanent heritable and transferable right in the property. In my opinion section 15 is wrongly applied to property which is not under transfer at the time of the passing of Act I of 1869. All the Privy Council cases quoted above of trust and transfer aimed at preserving the rights which were vested at the time of the passing of the Act. In the present case, when the Act was passed, we find Bhagwant Singh a Talukdar of List holding property which was an estate as defined by section 3 and with his name entered in the third list of Talukdars who desired to be governed by the rule of primogeniture. In my opinion, whatever transfers may have been made between 1858 and 1869, that is, after the Summary Settlement and before the passing of the Act, if at the time of the passing of the Act the property is in the possession of the Talukdar unburdened by any trust of vested interest the provisions of section 15 will not apply. I take the view that section 15 was enacted to take out of the Act estates which at the time of the passing of the Act were held by persons other than Talukdars with whom Summary Settlement was made. The whole object of the Act would be frustrated, if in every case where an estate is in the possession of a Talukdar the Court is required to inquire how the property had fared since the Summary Settlement. At the time of Bhagwant Singh's death all the essentials of section 22 were satisfied. Bhagwant Singh was a Talukdar whose name was inserted in the third list mentioned in section 8 and he died intestate as to his estate. There is also another point of interest in the present case. Even if it be held that there was a transfer by Bhagwant Singh in favour of joint Hindu family, that transfer came to an end on payment of an allowance to Girdhari Singh under the compromise and there was no retransfer of the property to Bhagwant Singh. By agreement between the parties the transfer exhausted its effect so it may be correctly argued that no operative transfer was made even by Bhagwant Singh. It will be remembered that there was no partition between the brothers each taking a certain share of the property.

Another point of view has also to be considered. Even in the case of a transfer there is no positive indication of the transfer as alleged on behalf of the plaintiff to a joint Hindu family. The entries in the Khewat and Bhagwant Singh's conduct and declarations may equally amount to a transfer of half the property in favour of his brother who would have succeeded to him according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if he had died without having made the transfer and intestate. As already pointed out there was no retransfer by Girdhari Singh to Bhagwant Singh and succession, therefore, will be governed by the provisions of section 14 and not section 15 of the Act.

There is also considerable validity in the argument of the defendant-appellant's learned Counsel that Bhagwant Singh could not make any transfer prior to the letter of grace and restoration of 19th October 1859. A Talukdar was not invested with proprietary title until that letter was issued and there could be no transfer of title prior to that date by a person with whom the Summary Settlement was made. According to that view the proceedings during the preparation of the Khewat cannot amount to a transfer, but should be taken as a trust.

The last question is of the Sanad. On behalf of the plaintiff it was argued that no Sanad with a primogeniture clause was granted because the copy of it at present existing in the office of the Board of Revenue does not contain such a clause (Copy Ex. 150, p. 26.) It is, however, possible that to obtain a receipt of the grantee old printed forms may have been used and the primogeniture clause may not have been entered therein. The entry of Bhagwant Singh's name in List III raises the presumption that a primogeniture Sanad was granted to him and the several lists of Talukdars for the different offices show that such a Sanad was granted to Bhagwant Singh (Ex. A73, p. 23, Part III). It was admitted by the learned Counsel of the plaintiff-respondent that so far as the operation of the Act was concerned the entries in Lists I and III were conclusive evidence under section 10 and that if the Act applied the succession would be governed by the rule of primogeniture. The Sanad becomes material only in case it is found that the Act did not apply and succession was governed by the primogeniture clause entered in the Sanad. The original Sanad has not been produced by either party and each party alleges that the other ought to be in possession. The question of possession is not easy to decide because the plaintiff was related to the grantee by blood while the defendant's husband was the successor to the properties. Either party may very well possess by both parties I have come to the conclusion that the primogeniture Sanad was granted to Bhagwant Singh on 1st November 1861. In that case, even if the Act did not apply succession to Bhagwant Singh's property will be governed by the rule of primogeniture.

In every view of the case, therefore, Girdhari Singh was the successor-in-interest of Bhagwant Singh and the plaintiff has no right of succession. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—This is an appeal by Rani Indar Kuar, defendant No. I from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated the 27th May 1922. The only plaintiff to the suit out of which this appeal arises, was Musammat Nand Rani Kuar and she is the chief respondent in the case. Defendants Nos. 2 to 8 are the daughters of Kuar Girdhari Singh, the deceased husband of Musammat Indar Kuar, the appellant.

Kunwar Bahadur Singh was the owner of the properties mentioned in Lists A and B attached to the plaint situate in the district of Lucknow and Bara Banki. He died in or about 1849 and was succeeded by his two sons, Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Kunwar Girdhari Singh. The province of Oudh was annexed by the British Government on the 13th February 1856. Then came the Mutiny of 1857. After the restoration of peace and order Lord Canning, Governor-General of India, issued his famous Proclamation of the 15th March 1858, the effect of which was "to divest all the landed property from the proprietors in Oudh and to transfer it to and vest it in the British Government." Nawab Malka Jahan Sahiba v. Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow (7). This was followed by the work of restoration known as the Second Summary Settlement, which was begun on the 1st April 1858 and completed on the 10th October 1859—Vide section 3 of Act I of 1869. It is common ground that the Second Summary Settlement of the properties mentioned above was made with Kunwar Bhagwant Singh. By his letter of the 10th October 1859 the Governor-General in Council was pleased "to declare that every Talukdar with whom the Summary Settlement has been made since the occupation of province has thereby acquired a permanent hereditary and transferable proprietary right, viz., in the Taluka for which he has engaged including the perpetual privilege of engaging with the Government for the revenue of the Taluka." Kunwar Bhagwant Singh thus became the proprietor of the properties in suit. We may mention here parenthetically that the properties mentioned in List C were not dealt with separately by either of the parties at the hearing of the appeal before us. Subsequently his name was entered in Lists I and III of the Lists prepared under section 8 of the Act I of 1869. He died on the 9th December 1871. His younger brother, Kunwar Girdhari Singh, succeeded to his estate under clause (6) of section 22 of Act I of 1869. Kunwar Girdhari Singh died on the 6th August 1919 and his widow, Rani Indar Kuar, defendant No. 1 succeeded him under clause (7) of the same section and is in possession of the properties in suit. Kunwar Bhagwant Singh's widow Musammat Maharani, died on the 5th December 1913. The plaintiff-respondent is the daughter of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Musammat Maharani. She sued for possession of the properties in suit and her claim has succeeded in the Court below. Her case is as follows:—Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Kunwar Girdhari Singh formed a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law and possessed of the properties in suit. At the date of the Second Summary Settlement Kunwar Girdhari Singh was a minor about 10 years of age. Bhagwant Singh obtained the Second Summary Settlement in his name in the capacity of the head of the joint Hindu family and the trustee of the properties belonging to that family. The first regular settlement of 1864 was also made with him in the same character. Kunwar Bhagwant Singh constituted himself by his words and acts a trustee of the joint Hindu family in respect of the properties belonging to it. In the alternative the plaintiff said that the same verbal declarations and acts of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh, which constituted him a trustee of the joint family in respect of the properties in suit, amounted to a transfer by him in favour of the same family. This state of things continued till 1867 when a division of the joint properties took place between the two brothers with the result that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh acquired the properties in suit as his share in the division and Kunwar Girdhari Singh got a cash annuity fixed for him. It is further alleged that the effect of the separation of 1867 was the transfer of Kunwar Girdhari Singh's half share in the joint family properties in favour of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh in lieu of the annuity allotted to the former. According to the plaintiff the final effect of all these events has been that the properties in suit either in whole or at least to the extent of one half are governed in respect of succession by the rules of the Mitakshara and that consequently on Kunwar Bhagwant Singh's death his widow, Musammat Maharani succeeded her husband as a Hindu widow and on her death on the 5th December 1913 their daughter, the plaintiff-respondent, became entitled to the possession of the properties in suit under the same law. In defence to this claim Kunwar Bhagwant Singh's position as a trustee for or any transfer by him in favour of the joint family was denied, so is the alleged separation of 1867. The title of Kunwar Girdhari Singh under section 22 of Act I of 1869 as well as under the terms of the primogeniture Sanad granted to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was set up.

The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has found that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh constituted himself a trustee in favour of the joint family consisting of himself and his brother, Kunwar Girdhari Singh; that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh transferred the properties in suit to the said joint family ; that a separation took place in the year 1867 ; that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh got the properties in suit as his share in the division of the joint family properties and Kunwar Girdhari Singh transferred his half share in the family properties to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh. He, therefore, held the succession to the properties in suit was governed by the ordinary Hindu Law and not by the provisions of Act I of 1869 and consequently on the death of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh in 1871 his widow, Musammat Maharani, was entitled to the estate of her husband and on her death the inheritance devolved upon the plaintiff, as the daughter of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh. As regards the primogeniture Sanad his finding is that no such Sanad was granted to or received by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and that the entry of his name in List III was made under a mistake.

The following points were urged in support of the appeal before us :—(1) That there was neither a trust nor a transfer in favour of the joint family ; (2) That if there was any trust or transfer it was in respect of a defined half share in favour of Kunwar Girdhari Singh ; (3) That in the event of there having been a trust or a transfer in favour of the joint family that family continued as such right up to the death of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Kunwar Girdhari Singh succeeded to the properties in suit by right of survivorship, in other words, there was no division in 1867 as is alleged by the plaintiff; (4) That the trust, if any, came to an end in 1867 with the result that the legal title which had remained vested in Kunwar Bhagwant Singh all along, prevails ; (5) That at all events Kunwar Bhagwant Singh died possessed of the properties in suit which is an "estate" and that he was a Talukdar within the meaning of Act I of 1869 and succession to him and to the estate must be governed by section 22 of that Act ; (6) That a primogeniture Sanad was as a matter of fact received by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh, that the entry of his name in List III is conclusive evidence of the fact that he did receive such a Sanad and that consequently succession is governed by the terms of that Sanad.

(Here the Hon'ble A. J. C. gave a summary of the events bearing on the case from the time of the Second Summary Settlement of 1858 and then proceeded) :—

It would be obvious from the above narrative of the events relating to this Taluka that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh acquired a fresh and exclusive title to it under the Second Summary Settlement of 1858 by virtue of the Governor-General's letter of the 10th October 1869. This title was affirmed by the grant of the Talukdari Sanad of the 27th October 1869. It was further affirmed by section 3 of Act I of 1869. Kunwar Bhagwant Singh's name was entered in Lists I and III of the Lists maintained under the provisions of section 8 of that Act. He was, therefore, a Talukdar within the meaning of the Act and possessed of an estate as defined in section 2 of that Act. Ex facie the provisions of section 10 of the Act apply to him. It is common ground that at the date of his death Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was possessed of the Taluk in suit. It is also common ground that he died intestate. It follows that on his death the estate should descend according to the provisions of section 22 of Act I of 1869. His rightful heir and successor was his young brother Girdhari Singh under clause 6 of that section. Girdhari Singh at his death satisfied the definition of an heir as given in section 2 of Act I of 1869 and if he died intestate, as we must assume for the purpose of this case that he did, to him again section 22 in the matter of succession would seem to apply. His rightful successor under clause 7 of that section is his widow the defendant-appellant who is admittedly in possession of the estate. On this statement of the case the plaintiff seems to have no locus standi. Her case, however, is that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh's title to the estate in suit was made subject to a trust created by him in favour of the joint family consisting of himself and his younger brother, Girdhari Singh. Her further case is that it was also subject to a valid transfer inter vivos which he had made in favour of the same family and in either event the property ceased to be an estate and became ordinary joint family property subject to the rule of partition and on partition to the rule of inheritance governing separated property under the Mitakshara.

The first question, therefore, for decision in the appeal is : Did Kunwar Bhagwant Singh create any such trust ? There is a catena of decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council on the question of trust fastened upon the legal estate which a Talukdar acquired under the letter of the Governor-General of the 10th October 1869, under the Sanad and under the provisions of Act I of 1869.

The earliest of these decisions is that of Thukrain Sookraj Koowar v. Government, Baboo Ajeet Singh (Bhinga case) (5). This was given before the passing of Act I of 1869. Dealing with the effect of the Second Summary Settlement and the Governor-General's letter in relation thereto Lord Justice James in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, made the following observation :—" In English language, it gave the registered Talukdar the absolute legal title as against the State and against adverse claimants to the Talukdari; but it did not relieve the Talukdar from any equitable rights to which he might have subjected himself with a view to the completion of the settlement by his own valid agreement. In this case the appellant was the acknowledged cestui que trust of the registered Talukdar, who had bound himself expressly in writing that he would respect her rights if she permitted him to be alone so registered."

The next case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council was that of Widow of Shunker Sahai v. Rajah Kashi Pershad. (8) This case related to the Taluka Sessendee which was one of the five Talukas exempted from the general confiscation effected by Lord Canning's Proclamation of the 15th March 1858. Their Lordships observed :—" Colonel Barrow, however, appears to have held that the admission of the Rajah at the time of the Summary Settlement, and on other occasions (the former being in the nature of an admission on record) were equivalent to such a deed; and that accordingly the relation of trustee and cestui que trust having, so to speak, been established between them, she (the appellant) was entitled to a one-third share of the profits of these villages when the annual accounts were made up. In this part of the Financial Commissioner's order their Lordships entirely concur."

The next case is that of Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dayal (Maurawan case) (6). This case again related to an estate which was exempted from the general confiscation of March 1858. By the 8th paragraph of Lord Canning's Proclamation of the 15th March 1858 it was declared that Chandan Lal, the zamindar of Maurawan, who had died in 1854, was thenceforward the sole hereditary proprietor of the lands which he held when Oudh came under the British rule. Subsequently the first as well as the Second Summary Settlement of those lands were made with Gauri Shankar one of the sons of Chundan Lal. Gauri Shankar also received a Talukdari Sanad in respect of those properties. In the second schedule annexed to Act I of 1869 the name of Chundan Lal was entered. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that in consequence of the provisions of section 4 of Act I of 1869 Gauri Shankar must be deemed to have acquired in the properties a permanent heritable and transferabe right and had power by will or alienation inter vivos to transfer the same. Claims for partition amongst the descendants of Chundan Lal and his brother were decreed on the grounds (1) that the Summary Settlement, and the Sanad were granted by the Government to one member of the family and were not intended to enure to the sole benefit of Gauri Shankar and did not affect the rights of the other members of the joint family. As regards the properties which were granted to Gauri Shankar for loyal services rendered during the Mutiny their Lordships held that such services were presumably rendered with the use of the family funds and consequently those properties also could not be self-acquired property of Gauri Shankar within the meaning of the Hindu Law; and (2) assuming any portion of such properties to have been the self-acquired property of Gauri Shankar, he became permanent owner thereof with power to transfer the same by will or alienation inter vivos. On the evidence in that case their Lordships held that Gauri Shankar had in his life-time transferred those properties in 1860 to the family to be held as joint family property. Two observations fall to be made with regard to this decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council upon which greatest reliance is placed by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent in support of his case. I. That portions of the estate of Maurawan which belonged to the family at the time when Oudh came under the British rule continued to retain its old character of joint family property for the reason that by the 10th paragraph of the Proclamation of Lord Canning the estates mentioned in the 8th paragrapth of that proclamation were exempted from the general confiscation. The result of this exemption obviously was that the proprietary right in that property did not vest in the British Government as it did in other cases but the old title was maintained and this title was subsequently recognised in the proceedings of the settlements and in the Sanad granted by the British Government to Gauri Shankar. There was thus a nucleus of the ancestral joint family property with the aid of which subsequent acquisitions were made by the head of the family. Both classes of the property, therefore, were joint family property. And secondly, it was established in that case that Gauri Shankar transferred the property by alienation inter vivos to the family. We may at once say that in the case before us the first characteristic just now mentioned as existing in the Maurawan case does not exist in respect of the property now in suit. Assuming but not deciding that previous to the general confiscation of the 15th March 1858 the property in suit was held by the two brothers, Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Girdhari Singh, as joint family property that family ceased to hold it under any title owing to the confiscation of the 15th March 1858 under which it admittedly fell. On the last mentioned date the title to this property came to be vested in the British Government. As regards the second point adverted to, that is a question to be decided on the evidence in the present case to which we will address ourselves hereafter.

The next case is that of Thakoor Hardeo Bux v. Thakoor Jawahir Singh (2). The estate involved in this case was one which fell under the ban of the general confiscation of March 1858. It was subsequently settled with Jawahir Singh. He also obtained the Sanad in respect thereof and his name was entered in Lists I and III of the lists prepared under the provisions of section 8 of Act I of 1869. Jawahir Singh had, therefore, all the apparent indicia of a perfect proprietary title in the estate under section 3 of the Act. Hardeo Bax, one of the members of the family, brought a claim for a declaration of his right in the estate against Jawahir Singh. In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Sir Barnes Peacock framed the following questions for decision :—" Is the plaintiff entitled to any and what share or beneficial interest in the estate, or is his claim barred by Act I of 1869 ? His Lordship then referred to the decision of Lord Justice James in the case of Musammat Thukrain Sookraj Koowar v. Government, Baboo Ajeet Singh Bhinga case (5) already mentioned and then referred to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of the Widow of Shunker Sahai v. Rajah Kashi Pershad (8) also noticed above. With regard to this case his Lordship said : " This case is, therefore, an authority for the proposition that a person who has been registered as a Talukdar under Act I of 1869 and has thereby acquired a Talukdari right in the whole property, may, nevertheless, have made himself a trustee of a portion of the beneficial interest in lands comprised within the Taluka for another, and be liable to account accordingly." Finally the following issue was remitted for trial to the Settlement Court in India,—"Whether the respondent (Jawahir Singh) has in any and what manner agreed or become bound to hold the villages comprised in the Summary Settlement, and sanad, or any and what part thereof, or the rents and profits thereof or any and what part thereof, in trust for the appellant and Purbut Singh, or either and which of them." The case was finally disposed of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1879 and the judgment of the Judicial Committee was again delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock vide Thakoor Hurdeo Bux v. Thakoor Jowahir Singh (3). His Lordship held that the facts found coupled with the declarations of the defendant " afford sufficient grounds to justify their Lordships in presuming that up to the time of the quarrel in 1865 it was the intention of the defendant that the villages included in the Summary Settlement and Sanad 'should be held'by him in trust for the joint family and as a joint family estate subject to the law of the Mitakshara." The suit was commenced long before the passing of Act I of 1869 but was not decided by the Court of first instance until after the passing of that Act. His Lordship, therefore, considered it necessary, " to determine whether Act I of 1869 operated so as to change the relative conditions of the parties, and to put an end to the trust upon which the defendant had previously held the estate," and held that " their Lordships are of opinion that it did not." As regards the villages comprised in the Summary Settlement and the villages granted in reward for services rendered during the Mutiny his Lordship held that they as well as the defendant fell within the category of section 3 of the Act. It was pointed out that that section " does not state that the Talukdar shall be deemed have but that he shall be deemed to have acquired by the Summary Settlement and Sanad a permanent heritable and transferable right in the estate. The right so acquired was subject to the provisions of sections 11 and 15 the Act." His Lordship then observed.—"If, therefore, the defendant had before the passing of Act I of 1869, and at any time after the date of the Summary Settlement and Sanad, and after he had thereby acquired the right which, according to the provisions of the third section he must be deemed to have acquired thereby expressly declared that he held and would hold the estate in trust for the joint family as joint family estate governed by the rules of Mitakshara, there can be no doubt that the estate would heve been subject to the trust so declared, and that it would not have been converted by Act No. I of 1869 into an estate held by the defendant for his own sole use and benefit discharged from the trust." Reference was then made to sections 13 and 14 of the Act and to the decisions in the case of Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dayal Maurrawan case (6). As regards the villages acquired from the profits of the estate his Lordship held, that there were no grounds for making any distinction as regards the rights of the parties between those villages and the other two classes of the property. Finally a declaration was granted to Hardeo Bakhsh " that the defendant holds the villages in suit in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate governed by the rules of the Mitakshara." We desire to make most respectfully one observation with respect to this decision. The reference to sections 11, 13, 14 and 15 of Act I of 1869 clearly indicates to our mind that the finding as to the existence of a trust in favour of the joint family was founded on the ground that the defendant had made an alienation inter vivos of the estate by way of a trust in favour of the joint family and thus falls in line with the decisions in cases of Mussumat Thukrain Sookraj Koowar v. Government Baboo Ajeet Singh Bhinga case (5) and the Widow of Shunker Sahai v. Rajah Kashi Pershad (8) already referred to, all the three cases, therefore resting on the ground that the holder of the legal estate may subject himself to alienations by way of creating beneficial interests in others. Seth Jaidal v. Seth Sita Ram (9). All that was held in this case was that the registered Talukdar had subjected the estate to a family settlement amongst the members of the family and the interest which was declared to be vested in a member of the family under that settlement was not defeated by the subsequent enactment of Act I of 1869.

Thakurain Ramanund Koer v. Raghunath Koer (10). The estate of Sihipur in dispute in this case was owned by Nihal Singh. He died in the year 1832 leaving him surviving 5 widows. The first widow succeeded her husband in the possession of the estate. The second widow having predeceased the first widow, the third widow on the death of the first widow succeeded to the estate in pursuance of a will of Nihal Singh and was the first defendant in the suit. The plaintiff was the fourth widow. The Second Summary Settlement was made with Raghunath Kuar, the first defendant, and a Talukdari Sanad was granted to her in respect of the same. Her name was also entered in the 1st and 3rd of the Lists prepared under section 8 of Act I of 1869. The plaintiff's claim was based on the provisions of her husband's will. In defence, absolute title arising out of the Summary Settlement, the Sanad, and the Oudh Estates Act was set up. In repelling the defence Sir Robert P. Collier, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, referred to the previous decisions of the same tribunal in support of the doctrine that notwithstanding the confiscation of the land in Oudh by the Proclamation of Lord Canning, its restoration by his circular letter of the 10th October, 1859, affirming the absolute title of the grantees of Summary Settlements and the granting Sanad with the full of power of alienation, confirmed by the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 the legal owner may, either by express agreement or by his conduct, constitute himself in equity a trustee for others as to the whole or part of the beneficial interest. On the evidence in that case their Lordships held that the widow Raghunath Koer had by her acts and declarations treated her husband's will as "directions obligatory in conscience if not in law." It was consequently held that she was bound to carry out the trust so created by her.

Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (4). It was merely a continuation of the former case which had been twice before the Privy Council vide Hardeo Bux Thakoor v. Jawahir Singh (2), and Thakoor Hardeo Bux v. Thakoor Jowahir Singh (3). In the case now before their Lordships the contention of Jawahir Singh was that the estate being a Talukdari estate was impartible and being entered in List V was subject to the rule of primogeniture, the plaintiff being entitled to a share of the profits. Their Lordships, after referring to their previous decision, held that Jawahir Singh was bound to carry out the trust by allowing the partition to be made.

Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo Baksh (11). In this case at the very outset of the judgment their Lordships observed :—Their Lordships have not to deal with the difficult question which has been agitated in so many cases here, whether to use rather a popular than a legal term, equities shall prevail against the form of the Sanad. The Counsel for the appellant before their Lordships of the Privy Council admitted that as regards the beneficial interests in the profits there must be participation between the members of the family. He, however, maintained that under the family arrangements the family was still to have a sole head of it and that he would take the title of Talukdar, and have the management of the property and though he would be accountable to his brothers, the younger branches, for certain shares of the profits, yet the property was still to be held in one hand as an entire estate and that they could not displace the head of the family from that position. With reference to this argument Lord Hobhouse said : It is extremely difficult to understand what sort of an estate that would represent. It would be a kind of trusteeship, managership or headship, which could never be displaced or disturbed by the persons having the beneficial possession. Such an estate is entirely foreign to the common Hindu law of Oudh. Nor is any such thing apparently contemplated by the Oudh Estates Act. Their Lordships do not pronounce an opinion here whether it could legally exist, but assuming that it could, there must be some very clear arrangements between the parties to prove its existence. The ordinary rule is that if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate they may have a partition. The rest of the judgment is devoted to the consideration of the question as to what the arrangements between the parties proved. It was held that the arrangements extending over the period before as well as after the passing of Act I of 1869 in spite of the issue of primogeniture Sanad proved that the estate was held as an estate of co-sharership by the several members of the family. It was pointed out that the villages Piprawan and Saraian held under the primogeniture Sanad were conveyed for consideration to his brothers by Anant Singh who had a title under that Sanad to those villages. Anant Singh took a larger share in the whole estate by allowing shares to his brothers in the two villages. The title under the Sanad and the Sanad and the Act is, therefore, subject to the interests of the other members of the family which they had acquired under the family settlement. The case stands on the same footing as that of Seth Jaidial v. Seth Sita Ram (9) and Haidar Ali Khan v. Nawab Ali Khan (12). The judgment in this case, which was delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock as in the majority of the cases mentioned above is a short one but the report of the arguments discloses that all the leading cases on the subject were cited at the hearing of the appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council. Sir Barnes Peacock said as follows :—"There is nothing in this case to show that the defendant, by any agreement or by any arrangment or other means, became clothed with any trust as regards the lands included in the Sanad. The case, therefore, does not fall within the decisions of Musmmat Thukrain Sookraj Koowar v. Government, Baboo Ajeet Singh (Bhinga Case) (5) or the case of Hurdeo Bux (3). The defendant is, therefore, entitled as proprietor to the lands included in the Sanad.

The doctrine of trust was again affirmed in the case of Hasan Jafar and others v. Muhammad Asakri (13). The cestui que trust in that case was Sadik Husain whose interest as a sharer in the estate was admitted by the Talukdar Karam Ali at the Summary Settlement. The Sanad relating to the estate was granted to Karam Ali alone. At the time of the Summaay Settlement Sadik Husain was absent but Karam Ali gave an undertaking to admit him as a co-sharer if he appeared. The Chief Commissioner authorised the settlement with Karam Ali in reliance on his assurances and representations. "If Karam Ali became a trustee for Sadik Husain on his return the fact that the Sanad was granted to Karam Ali alone would not deprive Sadik Husain of his rights. It is not necessary to refer to authority for the purposes of establishing the proposition that the grantee under a Sanad of this description takes subject to trusts which have been validly created." said Lord Macnaghten.

The last case in which the point was adverted to is that of Lal Sheo Pertab Bahadur v. Singh Allahabad Bank, Limited (14). In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in that case Sir Arthur Wilson made the following observations :—"In a series of cases it has been held that, notwithstanding the strong language of the Act, and in particular the enactment in section 10 that the Courts are to accept the lists framed under the Act as conclusive that the persons included in them are Talukdars or grantees, and those of section 11, the Courts may nevertheless go behind the Act to the extent at least of recognising the trusts, and may give effect to beneficial titles distinct from the statutory title under the Act.

In the following cases their Lordships of the Privy Council held that no trust was established and the legal title prevailed in its entirety.

1. Babu Ram Cingh v. The Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki (15).

2. Muhammad Imam Ali Khan v. Husain Khan (16).

3. Balbhaddar Singh v. Sheo Narain Singh (17).

The above cases establish the proposition that a Talukdar possessed of the legal estates in the Talukdari property may bind himself by equitable obligations to allow beneficial interest in the same property in favour of designated individual or in favour of a joint Hindu family of which he himself may be a member and that he does so in the exercise of his powers of alienation inter vivos or by making a testamentary disposition.

The next question which we should answer is—What does the evidence produced in this case establish ? It has already been pointed out by us in a previous part of this judgment that the effect of Lord Canning's Proclamation was to divest the joint family consisting of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and his brother Girdhari Singh, of their title as members of that family in the joint family property, if any. The further effect of this confiscation was that the title in that property came to be vested in the Crown. The Crown in the exercise of its prerogative granted the property in its entirety and exclusively to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh by the act of making the Second Summary Settlement with him as declared by the letter of the Governor-General of the 10th October 1859. There is nothing on this record to justify the inference contended for by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that the engagement with Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was made by the Government in his capacity of a representative of the joint family consisting of himself and his brother Girdhari Singh. Exhibit A19 is the Qabuliat executed by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh in relation to the Second Summary Settlement and Exhibit A 22 is the Deputy Commissioner's order conveying the sanction of the Government in respect of the settlement with him. The sanction must have been given sometime before the date of this order, that is, the 7th September 1858. As between the Government and Kunwar Bhagwant Singh the settlement must be deemed to have closed with the sanction given to it by the Government. This was settled by the case of Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh (18). The preparationof the Khewats of the villages comprised within the Taluka was a sequel to the order sanctioning the settlement. Exhibit 10 is the Khewat of Mauza Aseni, by which name the Taluka in the district of Lucknow is called. In this Khewat Bhagwant Singh and Girdhari Singh are recorded as Zemindars in equal shares and it is signed by Bhagwant Singh. This exhibit, therefore, proves that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh admitted Girdhari Singh's right to the extent of one half in the 'Taluka of Aseni. The plaintiff's contention is that the entry in the Khewat evidences a transfer by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh of the entire estate, legal as well as beneficial in the Taluka of Aseni to the joint family consisting of himself and Girdhari Singh. We are unable to hold this contention. The entry distinctly says that each is a Zemindar in equal shares. There are no words in it connoting undefined interests which members of a joint family would possess in the family property. On the other hand, in our opinion the share of each of the brothers must be taken to have been defined as consisting of equal moieties. In our judgment this entry proves a recognition on the part of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh of Girdhari Singh's interest to the extent of one half in the Talukdari property.

Subsequent events tend in the same direction. In Exhibit 114, which was a letter in answer to the inquiry relating to the rule of Gaddinashini, Kunwar Bhagwant Singh stated that he and his younger brother were in possession and that after their death the descendants of both the brothers shall succeed to the possession of the Taluka. This statement of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh is consistent with the view that in future the estate was to descend on the descendants of each as heirs to the separate estate of the propositus, and is opposed to the idea of survivorship. All doubt on this point is removed when we look to the second application of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh dated the 17th May 1860 (Ex. 115). In this application he unequivocally stated that Girdhari Singh and he "are successors to the heritage in equal shares" and with regard to the future descent of the estate he said that "the descendants of us both shall according to our religious ordinance and family usage be our heirs and successors." At the regular settlement Kunwar Bhagwant Singh again recognised the title of his brother Girdhari Singh, as one of his co-sharers and this fact was recorded in the decree in respect of village Sikandarpur (Ex. 28). To the same effect are Exhibits 17 and 29. The same result is borne out by the applications of Girdhari Singh for partition of the estate which he presented to the Financial Commissioner in tha year 1867 (Exhibits 51 and 52). Our conclusion, therefore, is that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh never parted with the legal estates in the whole of the Taluka in favour of anybody but constituted himself a trustee for Girdhari Singh to the extent of one half of the beneficial interest therein. The legal as well as the beneficial interest in the other half remained all along with Kunwar Bhagwant Singh.

It was argued on behalf of the defendant-appellant that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh had no proprietary title in the Taluka prior to the Governor-General's letter of the 10th October 1859 and that consequently he was incompetent to deal with the estate by making a transfer of the beneficial interest in favour of Girdhari Singh. We are unable to accept this argument. It is certainly true that the proprietary title in the estate was declared to exist in Kunwar Bhagwant Singh by the letter of the 10th October 1859, and the Second Summary Settlement was founded on the basis of possession only and was originally contemplated to last for a period of three years. Kunwar Bhagwant Singh, however, acquired possessory title in the estate in virtue of the settlement and it was good for all purposes against the whole world except the Crown. Besides, Kunwar Bhagwant Singh could not be permitted to derogate from his own grant. We think that the doctrine of feeding the grant by estoppel would also apply. As between himself and Girdhari Singh Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was bound in equity to fulfil the obligations which he undertook by recognising the right of his brother, Girdhari Singh, inthe one half of the beneficial interests in the estate.

The trust thus created in the year 1858 and maintained during the enquiry relating to the rule of Gaddinashini and the regular settlement was, however, redeemed in 1867. By the execution of the trust which Kunwar Bhagwant Singh had imposed upon himself in favour of his brother, Girdhari Singh, the trust must be held to have exhausted itself and thereby to have come to an end. This result was attained by an amicable settlement between the two brothers in that year. By his application of the 15th July 1867 (Ex. 51) and by the application of the 9th August 1867 (Ex. 52) Girdhari Singh, the cestui que trust, asked for the separation of his moiety share from the rest of the estate. There can be no manner of doubt that if the desired separation had taken place the trust would have stood discharged. In our opinion the result would be the same if in settlement of his claim in respect of half of the estate Girdhari Singh accepted by a compromise anything less than that. On the 8th September 1867 the dispute initiated by Girdhari Singh was settled by a deed of compromise executed by both the brothers (Ex. 53). Under this settlement Girdhari Singh accepts a progressive annuity and relinquishes all claim as regards the partition of the Taluka. The legal estate, which continued all along according to our judgment in Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was thus freed of the fetters of the trust which he had created in respect of a part of the estate in favour of his younger brother. On the date of the passing of Act I of 1869 Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was thus a Talukdar within the meaning of that Act and possessed of an estate within the meaning of the same Act without any equitable obligations attached to that estate and on his death Girdhari Singh was his lawful successor under section 22 of that Act.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent contended that the effect of the compromise of 8th September 1867 was a retransfer of a one-half share in the estate by Girdhari Singh in favour of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh, which share the former had acquired by a transfer from the latter during the Second Summary Settlement. This contention has partly been negatived by us already, our view being that there was no transfer of the full estate either in favour of the joint family or to the extent of one half in favour of Girdhari Singh. What was transferred to Girdhari Singh was merely a beneficial interest to that extent while the legal estate in the whole of the Taluka remained with Kunwar Bhagwant Singh all through.

The settlement of a dispute between two brothers circumstanced as Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Girdhari Singh were, cannot be treated as an act of mutual transfer of property between them. Apart from the trust Kunwar Bhagwant Singh had a complete and an exclusive title to the whole of the Taluka in the year 1867. On the other hand, Girdhari Singh based his rights in the controversy of 1867 more on the admissions and conduct of his elder brother, Kunwar Bhagwant Singh, than on anything else as his applications (Exhibits 51 and 52) show. The natural and proper view of the compromise of the 8th September 1867 (Exhibit 53) is that whatever each got under it was in recognition of his antecedent right and not by way of transfer by one to the other. This is the view which has repeatedly commended itself to their Lordships of the Privy Council in respect of family settlements. In this connection we may refer to two decisions of that tribunal in the cases of Rani Mewa Kunwar v. Rani Hulas Kunwar (19) and Lala Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (20). As a matter of fact the British Indian Association in upholding the compromise expressed the view that "in this taluqa no custom of partition has been in vogue" (Ex. A-1) and the final decision of the Chief Commissioner is based on the fact that Girdhari Singh was entitled to maintenance only. Our finding so far recorded is sufficient to dispose of the plaintiff's case but as the matter is in all probablity to be carried in appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council we think we should not part with the case without expressing our own views on other points arising in the appeal.

We will now assume that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh transferred the whole of the estate to the joint family consisting of himself and his brother, Girdhari Singh. In this aspect of the case we must further assume that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was competent to do so. The question is—Was this a transfer of the nature contemplated by section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869)? In deciding this question we must not lose sight of the fact that on the date of the alleged transfer the joint family consisted of the Talukdar and his younger brother only. It is also clear beyond any doubt that if the Talukdar had died without having made the transfer and intestate the person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to his estate was Girdhari Singh. It was argued that a joint Hindu family has a corporate existence. This may be so but for the purposes of section 15 we must take the individuals who constitute the joint family on the date of the transfer as persons in whose favour the transfer is made otherwise, if we must take into account also the potentialities of the expansion of the family by subsequent births of male members, it would be wholly impossible to determine whether the transferee is or is not "such person" as "would have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act." It need hardly be pointed out that section 15 as well as section 14 deals with cases of transfers made before the passing of the Act as also with cases after the passing of that Act. In the case of Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Sing (21), Lord Macnaghten in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "They (their Lordships) think that the expresssion 'would have succeeded' must be confined to persons in the special line of succession that would have been applicable to the particular case if the transferor or testator had died intestate and the death had occurred at the date of the transfer, or in the case of a gift by Will, at the time when the succession opened." This pronouncement is, therefore a direct authority for the opinion that it is the date of the transfer which counts in determining whether the transferee occupies or not the particular status assigned to him by the provisions of sections 14 and 15 of Act I of 1869. In fact the argument of the learned counsel involves in itself the absurd position that Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was both a transferor and a transferee in so far as his interest as a member of the joint family was concerned. This absurdity is not removed by the fact that that interest was an undefined one. We are, therefore, of opinion that the alleged transfer, if true, did not put the estate or the succession relating thereto outside the purview of the provisions of Act I of 1869. None of the Privy Council cases cited above has decided the precise point which arises for decision in this case. What is the rule of succession applicable to that estate or portion of the estate which is left in the hands of the registered Talukdar either after satisfying the trust in favour of any particular individual or on the disruption of the joint family when there was a trust or transfer in favour of such a family? We have already said that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (6) (Maurawan Case) was much relied upon by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent in support of his argument that the transfer to the joint family placed the estate and the rule of succession relating thereto out of the purview of Act I of 1869 altogether. This would be so if the transfer in that case fell within section 15 of that Act. That it did fall within that section is clear from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council. The basis of the transfer in that case was the will of Gauri Shankar. This will was acted upon in his life-time. That was held to amount to an alienation inter vivos and the alienation was held to be valid in view of the provisions of section 15 of the Act. By his will of the 7th February 1860 Gauri Shankar had directed that the ancient custom existing in his family shall be observed in relation to his estates, that custom being "that the eldest member of the family continues to be the head while others remain obedient to him, but every one possesses a share in the Taluka. Under the custom of the family the other brothers are at liberty to have their share separated, should they wish it. The head has no power, under the old custom, to alienate the estate without consulting every sharer". Now this was clearly a devise not in favour of any designated person but in favour of the entire joint family as a corporate unit. The report of the case shows that both on the date of this will

and on the date of Gauri Sankar's death in March 1863 the family consisted of a large number of persons being the descendants of Chundan and Ganga Pershad—see the pedigree given at page 264 of the report. We have already expressed our opinion that the case before us does not fall within section 15 of Act I of 1869.

We agree with the plaintiff that there was a disruption of the joint family, if any, in the year 1867 and this effect was brought about by the compromise of the 8th September 1867. Girdhari Singh's interests in the joint family property were defined and separated by that compromise. He was to receive a certain annuity out of the profits of the estate and in case of failure of payment of the annuity he was entitled to have villages set apart for the satisfaction of that right. It is beyond doubt that an unambiguous and defined intention on the part of one member of the family to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty has the effect of creating a division of the interest which till then he had held in jointness—Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (22) and Kasam v. Jorawar Singh (23). The result of this finding is that we reject the defendant's contention that the family continued to be joint till the death of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and Girdhari Singh succeeded to the estate by right of survivorship.

The question as to whether a primogeniture Sanad was granted to and received by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh is of very little significance in view of our findings already recorded. We think, however, that the question must be decided in favour of the defendant appellant. By section 10 of Act I of 1869 there is the presumption arising from the entry of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh's name in List III that he was a Talukdar to whom a Sanad had been granted at any time up to the date fixed by section 8 of the Act which declared that the succession to the estate comprised in such Sanad shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture. By the same section that presumption is conclusive. We must, therefore, hold that the primogeniture Sanad was granted to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh. The argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff respondent is that that presumption can only be raised for the purpose of determining the succession under the Act and the estate now in dispute has, as previously argued, gone out of the Act. We have already negatived the argument that the estate for the purpose of succession has passed out of the provisions of Act I of 1869. On the evidence also we have come to the conclusion that the primogeniture Sanad was received by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh. This conclusion is supported by Exhibits 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 7 3|2 and A 52. Exhibits 15 and 150 do not contain the primogeniture clause but this omission is explained by the fact that they appear to be copies of the duplicates of the vernacular Sanad retained in the office of the Board of Revenue and the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow respectively and at the time of making the endorsements of the 1st November 1861 as showing the date on which the Sanad was given to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh the primogeniture clause was either inadvertently or deliberately omitted from being inserted in the duplicates kept in those offices. The date of the endorsement, however, clearly points to the fact that it must have been the primogeniture Sanad which was given to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh on that date. The date of Exhibit 194 which is the receipt executed by Kunwar Bhagwant Singh in respect of the English Sanad is the same. Exhibits 15 and 150 both bear the signature of Mr. Yule, Officiating Chief Commissioner of Oudh. It is a matter of history that Mr. Yule officiated for Sir Charles Wingfield as Chief Commissionerof Oudh in 1861 and almost every Sanad, if not all Sanads, issued under the signature of Mr. Yule, was the primogeniture Sanad. See the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (24). The date of the revised English Sanad containing the primogeniture clause is given in column 7 of Exhibit A 56|1 in the following words:—"Secy. C. C.'s No. 3420 dated 16th October 1861." Now this number and date as shown before takes us back to Exhibit 146. The result of reading these two exhibits together is that the English Sanad which Kunwar Bhagwant Singh received on the 1st November 1861 was the primogeniture Sanad.

Lastly, we think that there is a great force in the appellant's contention that in the event of its being held that on the death of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh succession to the estate was not governed by section 22 of Act I of 1869. It was governed by the rule of inheritance laid down in the primogeniture Sanad. If the contention of the plaintiff respondent is correct that the provisions of the Act ceased to regulate the succession to the estate of Kunwar Bhagwant Singh it would seem to follow that it would fall into the lap of the ordinary law to which Kunwar Bhagwant Singh was subject. This ordinary law must be found in the Sanad granting the estate to Kunwar Bhagwant Singh and that law was the rule of primogeniture. This conclusion is supported by the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Badri Narain Singh v. Harnam Kunwar (25). According to the same tribunal in the case of Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Musammet Amatul Fatima (26), the terms of the Sanad would not apply to the inheritance of a person who has received the estate either by gift or by bequest from the Sanad-holder and is not an heir to the estate within the rule laid down in the Sanad. In the present case, however, we are concerned with the rule of descent applicable to the Sanad-holder himself. In fact the whole claim of the plaintiff-respondent consists in her alleged right to succeed to the estate of her father, Knuwar Bhagwant Singh after the determination of the intervening estate of the widow.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts.

By Court.—The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in both the Courts.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 6 OF 1922.

March 3, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C., and Mr. Kotval, A. J. C.

Pandit KANTICHAND AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

Thakur UDAYABHANSHA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) s. 129—Guarantee, continuing, what is—Amount payable by instalments—Hindu Law—Joint family—Pious obligation of sons to pay father's debts, extent of—Liability of father under contract of suretyship—Sons, whether bound to discharge liability.

A guarantee in order to be continuing must refer to a series of transactions of which, when the guarantee is given, some are unknown and indefinite or not certain to come into existence. The fact that the amount guaranteed is payable by instalments does not make the guarantee a continuing one within the meaning of section 129 of the Contract Act. (p. 352, col. 1.)

The sons of a deceased Hindu who formed a joint family with him and come into his share of the joint estate as survivors and not as heirs, are not liable on any contract that he may have made personally. (p. 352, col. 1.)

The liability of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts arises from his religious duty of discharging the father from the sin of his debts. Therefore if there is no debt actually due from the father at his death there is no sin from which there is a duty cast on the son to discharge him. (p. 352, col. 2.)

Where a Hindu dies before his liability under a contract of suretyship arises, his sons are not bound to discharge his obligation arising under the contract after his death. (p. 352, col. 2.)

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chhindwara, in Civil Suit No. 10 of 1921.

Messrs. M. Gupta and J. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Defendant No. 1 Nandkishor had taken a theka of the harra crop of the Partabgarh-Pagara Jagir from the Court of

KANTICHAND v. UDAYABHANSHA

Wards acting on behalf of the plaintiff Udebhanshaf or two years commencing from the 1st of July 1919 for Rs.18,000.This sum was to be paid in eight instalments of Rs. 2,225 each, on the 15th of the first four months of each of the years 1920 and 1921. Rs. 4,500 were paid in advance and were to be taken in payment of the last two instalments if the first six were duly paid. Kashiram the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who died on the 15th of September 1920 stood surety for the payment of the balance of Rs. 13.500. None of the insalments having been paid the plaintiff claims Rs. 13,500 and interest there on at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of default of each instalment.

The surety bond was executed on the 17th October 1919. It is marked Exhibit P. 3. The theka agreement in favour of the plaintiff, Exhibit P. 2, was executed on the 18th November 1919. The pleas on behalf of defendants 2 and 3 now material are the following:—

(1) There having been a substantial variation of the terms of the original agreement after the date of the contract of guarantee without the surety's consent the surety was discharged.

(2) The guarantee was a continuing guarantee and Kashiram having died on the 15th September 1920 it was revoked in respect of the instalment payable after that date.

(3) Under the Hindu Law the liability of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 came to an end with their father's death.

The trial Court having found against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on these pleas decreed the plaintiff's claim. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appeal and urge the same pleas.

If successful the first plea will discharge the defendants in respect of the whole claim, the second and third only in respect of the instalments due in the year 1921.

The argument with reference to the first plea is based upon a comparison of the terms of the surety bond Exhibit P. 3 and the theka agreement Exhibit P. 2. It is, therefore, necessary to refer to the two documents in detail. Exhibit P. 3 is translated as follows:—

"As Nandkishor son of Gulabchand Bania Thekedar, resident of Bankhedi, district Hoshangabad, has taken a contract of Harra of the Pagara Jagir under the Court of Wards, for the years 1919-20 and 1920-21i. e. from 1st July 1919 to 30th June 1921, for Rs. 18,000 out of which Rs. 4,500 have already been paid in advance, he being ordered to pay the rest by paying the instalment of Rs. 2,225 on 15th January 1920, of Rs. 2,225 on 15th February 1920, of Rs. 2,225 on 15th March 1920, of Rs. 2,225 on 15th April 1920, of Rs. 2,225 on 15th January 1921 and of Rs. 2,225 on 15th February 1921, and as a security for Rs. 13500 has been demanded from the said Nandkishor, I, Kashiram son of Radhakishen Tiwari of Sohagpur, district Hushangabad stand surety for the said Nandkishor, and agree and lay it down in writing that if he fails to pay any instalment or any portion of an instalment to the Court of Wards Harrai Pagara at the fixed time, I, the surety, will pay up the same out of my own pocket, and will be liable also for the loss the Court of Wards Harrai Pagara may suffer on account of the said Nandkishor's failure to pay up the money in time. I also agree that if the Court of Wards Harrai Pagara is put to any loss in consequence of the said Nandkishor's acting against the terms, I will remain liable therefor. I have, therefore, executed this surety bond which is genuine. Dated 17th October 1919, by the pen of Master Umraosinha of Sohagpur.

Kashiram Tiwari of Sohagpur."

The part now material of Exhibit P. 2 is translated as follows:—

"I am Seth Nandkishor son of Gulabdas, caste Bania, residing at Bankhedi Kalan, tahsil Sohagpur, district Hoshangabad. As I have taken a theka of the harrra crop of the Partabgrah-Pagara Jagir, district Chhindwara, for 2 years, i.e., from 1st July 1919 to 30th June 1921 for Rs. 18,000, eighteen thousand, British currency, i.e., at Rs. 9,000 a year, at a public auction, I execute this agreement, that the terms of the theka may be duly observed. The terms are given below. the money for the theka for two years, one fourth, i.e., 4,500 four thousand five hundred, was paid as an advance to-day into the office of the Court of Wards, Chhindwara, after the close of the auction sale; and the balance of Rs. 13,500 thirteen thousand five hundred is agreed to be paid as under and will be paid as agreed.

Details of instalments.

2,250 on 15-1-1920	2,250 on 15-1-1921.
2,250 on 15-2-1920	2,250 on 15-2 1921.
2,250 on 15-3-1920	2,250 on 15-3-1921.
2,250 on 15-4-1920	2,250 on 15-4-1921.

18,000.

On default of payment of two consecutive instalments according to the terms of the agreement mentioned, the Deputy Commissioner, Chhindwara, the Court of Wards, Jagir Pagara, district Chlindwara, shall have a right to re-auction the harra contract and to recover from the amount of my moveable and immoveable property whatever deficit there may be in the amount of theka. If the amount of instalments be regularly paid on the fixed dates above, the amount of advance shall be credited towards the last two instalments .... I have, therefore, executed this agreement, so that the same may stand as evidence and be of use when necessary. Dated 18th November 1919, by the pen of Seth Nandkishor himself.

Seth-Nandkishor, contractor of Harra, himself."

What is said to be the variation is the term giving the Court of Wards the right to re-auction the theka in default of payment of two consecutive insalments. It is not disputed that this term if it is a subsequent addition without Kashiram's consent to the original contract between the Court of wards and Nandkishor in respect of which Kashiram stood surety would substantially affect the surety's rights and discharge him.

It is said here that the surety bond contains the original terms of the contract. Nandkishor was examined by defendants No. 2 and 3 as a witness on their behalf but he was asked no question as to the alleged variation though he was the thekedar and also himself wrote the surety bond.

In the pleadings taken on the 9th September 1921 the defendants' pleader stated :—

"My position is that on 4th September 1919, the terms of contract between the Deputy Commissioner and Nandkishor were settled whereby it was finally decided that Nandkishor was to deposit Rs. 4,500 and give a solvent surety for Rs. 13,500. This Nandkishor agreed to those terms. On this day there was no agreement between the Deputy Commissioner and Nandkishor that the Deputy Commissioner shall have the right of re-sale in default of any instalment. This term was added for the first time when the deed of Ikrarnama was executed on 18th November, 1919; that is on 19th October 1919 when Kashiram stood surety for Nandkishor the term regarding re-sale was not at all in existence and therefore there is a variation between the original contract between Nandkishor and the D. C. on which Kashiram stood surety and the Ikrarnama dated 18th November, 1919".

The plaintiff's case is that the condition of re-sale is a condition usually inserted in agreements taken by the Court of Wards and was an implied term of the contract between the plaintiff and Nandkishor.

The condition as to re-sale is apparently one of a standard set of conditions of agreements to be taken from Thekedars of harra, lac and other produce sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner in 1911: vide Exhibits P. 16 and P. 17. Exhibits P. 18 to P. 22 are agreements similar to the one in suit executed by Nandkishor. It may be presumed that the agreement to be actually executed by Nandkishor after sanction subject to certain conditions was given to it by the Deputy Commissioner on 4th September, 1919 (vide Exhibit P. 15) was an agreement in the standard form. That the condition regarding re-sale must have been known to the surety to form part of the standard form is apparent from the fact that though it was threatened to be enforced by the notice given to him on the 25th May 1920, (Ex. P. 5) he never suggested that no such condition existed or could be enforced but on the contrary asked for time to pay up the arrears.

We uphold the finding of the lower Court that there was no variation from the original contract in the theka agreement dated the 18th November 1919. The surety bond did not purport to contain the whole of the original agreement as the argument on behalf of the appellants assumes.

KANTICHAND v. UDAYABHANSHA

The contention that the guarantee is a continuing guarantee is untenable. The guarantee was given in respect of a single existing transaction, namely the payment of Rs. 13,500. It seems to us that the guarantee to be a continuing guarantee must refer to a series of transactions of which, when the guarantee is given, some are unknown and indefinite or not certain to come into existence. The fact that the amount was payable by instalments does not make it a continuing guarantee as defined in section 129 of the Indian contract Act. Even if it could be held that the guarantee is a continuing guarantee, the circumstances of the case show that the parties to the contract did not contemplate that the surety should be able to revoke it at any time.

But the guarantee undoubtedly came to an end on the death of Kashiram for another reason, so that the question of its being a continuing guarantee or not does not really arise. Kashiram's sons are certainly liable to pay his debts. But as they were members of a joint Hindu family with him and came into his share of the joint estate as survivors and not as heirs, they are not liable under any contract that he may have made personally, and it is not even suggested that he made the contract of suretyship on behalf of the joint family as its Manager. A Hindu son's liability to pay his father's debts arises from his religious duty of discharging the father from the sin of his debts. Therefore if there is no debt actually due from the father at his death there is no sin from which there is a duty cast on the son to discharge him. The father's liability in the present case to pay the first four intalments had come into existence before his death, that is he had incurred the debt in repect of them and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as the sons are bound to discharge it, but as regards the two instalments which accrued due after his death no debt can be said to have been left owing by the father when he died and no sin incurred from which the son had to release him. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are therefore not liable for the amount of the two instalments payable on the 15th March 1921 and the 15th April 1921.

The decree of the lower Court will be modified by substituting the words "limited to Rs. 9,000" for the words "limited to Rs. 13,500" and the figures "690-1-0" for the figures "1,035-2-0" in the order as to costs. The appellants will pay two-thirds of the total costs of this appeal and the respondent the remaining one third.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) Sch. II, Art. 41—Suit for contribution—Property not held jointly—Suit, whether cognisable by Small Cause Court—Appeal, second.

Plaintiff and defendants divided their properties though they continued to be held under the same patta. Defendants failed to pay up the Kist in respect of their property, and the plaintiff, in order to save his own property from sale, had to pay up the arrears of the Kist. He sued the defendants for contribution ;

Held, that the suit did not fall within the purview of Article 41 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, in as much as the property was no longer joint, and the suit was, therefore, cognisable by a Small Cause Court and a second appeal was not competent. (p. 351, col. 2).

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and A. Satyanarayana, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Respondents raise the preliminary contention that the suits are of a Small Cause nature and, therefore, no second appeal lies. The plaintiff's case was that he and defendants had divided their properties, though the property still remained under the same patta and that his property was attached for arrears under this patta which were due to defendants Nos. 1 to 6 not having paid up the kist on their property under the same patta, that plaintiff to save his own property, therefore, had to pay up the arrears, and he sued for contribution.

I think it is clear that the suit is not of the nature contemplated by Article 41 of the 2nd Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Here there was no joint property, since plaintiffs and defendants, on plaintiff's own showing were divided. The mere fact that the patta is still joint and, therefore, the liability under it is joint, will not affect the manner in which the property is held. The ruling in Srinivasa v. Sivakolundu (1) is directly in point.

I hold that the suits were of a Small Cause nature and, therefore, no Second Appeals lie. The Second Appeals are dismissed with costs. In S. A. No. 691 of 1921 the memorandum of objections is not pressed and is dismissed with costs.

A Court executing a decree, purporting to be a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, can entertain a claim to the property by a third person, where the property attached is not a tenure or holding. Section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to such a case. (p 353, col. 2).

Rule against the order of the Munsif, Second Court, Howrah, dated the 15th March 1922.

JOTINDRA MOHAN PAL v. BHOLA NATH BHAKAT

Dr. Sarat Chandra Baksh (with Babu Hemendra Nath Chatterjee), for the Petitioner.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This rule was obtained by the decree-holder against the order of the Munsif of Howrah, dated the 15th March 1922, allowing the claim made by the Opposite Party under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code to the property attached by the decree-holder in execution of a decree for rent which he had obtained against one Abdul Latif for the property in question.

The ground upon which the judgment of the learned Munsif is attacked is that it was beyond his jurisdiction to entertain the claim having regard to section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the decree he had obtained was for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The claimant alleged that this property was not a tenure or holding and that the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable with reference to a suit for rent brought for the land. The learned Munsif went into evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether the land was of such a character as to make the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable. His finding is to the effect that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act do not apply to the land in question.

It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that the decree being on the face of it a decree for rent, as it is so described, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act would be applicable ; and it is not open to the Court executing the decree to make any enquiry as to the nature of the land and to decide whether the Bengal Tenancy Act would apply with regard to the decree or not. Reliance is placed upon the Full Bench case of Amrita Lal Bose v. Nemai Chand Mukhopadhaya (1) in support of the contention of the petitioner. In that case, however, the question referred to the Full Bench was whether section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars the claim to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon in all cases, or whether the operation is confined to claims to the tenure or holding and does not extend to claims based on the ground that the property claimed does not form part of the tenure or holding attached. The majority of the Court held that the section bars a claim in all cases where the tenure or holding is attached in execution of a decree. It was not decided, nor could it be decided, having regard to the reference, whether any claim can be entertained where the property attached is not a tenure or holding although the decree is in form a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. On the other hand, it has been held in the case of Sarba Sundari Dasi v. Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury (2) that when the jurisdiction of a Court is sought to be excluded on the ground that the property attached is of a particular description, it is open to the Court to ascertain the true nature of the property. Reference may also be made to the case of Bipra Das Dey v. Raja Ram Bandopadhaya (3) for the purpose of showing that the Court executing the decree can go into the question whether the decree was a decree under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act so as to bring into play the operation of section 170 of the Act and prevent a claim being preferred to the property attached. In that case also the decree was in form a decree for rent which was obtained for two holdings and it was held that a claim might be entertained with regard to the property attached in execution of the decree It, therefore, appears to us that the learned Munsif did not act without jurisdiction in entertaining the claim.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs, hearing-fee, five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—The only point argued in this appeal is the question of limitation viz., whether defendants letter Ex. D1 is an acknowledgment saving the bar. It seems to me quite clear from the terms of that letter that the work as per the agreement to be done by defendant had not then been completed and that the accounts had therefore not been finally settled. This is supported by the finding of the District Munsif that the work was not finished till August 1915. This was a case then where the final liability could not be fixed by final accounts until August 1916. Plaintiff's suit was within 3 years of that date.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), Sch. II, Art. I, applicability of—Suit for possession—Dispossession by landlord, whether necessary—Amendment of plaint, when allowed.

Article 1 of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 applies to dispossession of a tenant by any person whether the landlord or not. (p. 357, col. 1)

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of a holding alleging that he was an occupancy tenant of the holding and was dispossesed by the defendant in July 1920. The defendant contended that the plaintiff had been out of possession since 1918 and had surrendered his tenancy and that the defendant had been placed in possession by the Malguzar. In the course of the pleadings the plaintiff stated through his pleader that he had been out of possession since the end of 1918 and that the defendant has not actually dispossessed him but that the suit was filed against defendant as he was in wrongful possession. In reply it was pleaded that the plaintiff not having been in possession of the land within 2 years from the date of the suit, his claim was barred by limitation under Article I of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920. On the date fixed for hearing arguments on the point of limitation the plaintiff applied to amend his pleadings on the ground that he had inadvertently stated that he was dispossessed in 1918 whereas he was dispossessed of 2 fields out of 3 in 1919 and of one field in 1920, and applied to put in copies of jamabandis in support of this.

RAGHUNATH SINGH v. GABDOO

Held that as the plaintiff did not in his plaint rely on the jamabandis he could not be allowed to amend his pleadings in order to get out of the effect of his own admission; (p. 356, col. 2)

(2) that under Article 1 of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920, the dispossession need not necessarily be by the landlord and that the plaintiff's suit was clearly barred under that Article. (p. 357, col. 1)

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Saugor, in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1923 dated the 3rd July 1923.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Saugor, setting aside the decree of the Munsiff, Saugor, dismissing the plaintiff's suit as barred by limitation, and remanding the suit for trial on the other issues. The facts are simple. The plaintiff sued the defendant alleging that he was an occupancy tenant of certain holdings and was dispossessed by the defendant in July 1922. The defendant contended that the plaintiff had been out of possession since 1918 (Sambat 1975) ,and had surrendered his tenancy, and that the defendant had been placed in possession by the Malguzar.

In the course of the pleadings the plaintiff stated through his pleader that he had paid rent for the holding in suit till the end of the Sambat year 1974, that he had been out of possession of the land since the end of Sambat 1975 and that the defendant had not actually dispossessed the plaintiff but the suit was filed against him as he is in wrongful possession. The defendant, in reply pleaded that the plaintiff not being in possession of the land in suit within two years from the date of the suit, his claim was barred by limitation under the provisions of the new Tenancy Act. The suit was then fixed for argument on the question of limitation for the 31st of January 1923, on which date the plaintiff applied to amend his pleadings, stating that he inadvertently stated that he was dispossessed in 1975 (1918 A. D.), whereas he was dispossessed of 2 fields out of 3 fields in Sambat 1976-77 (1919) and of one field in 1978 and applied to put in copies of jamabandis in support of this.

The Trying Judge then passed an order on 12th February 1923, in which for the reasons given he refused to allow the plaintiff to amend his pleadings, holding that the statement in the pleadings was not made inadvertently and that in the plaint the plaintiff did not rely on the jamabandis which he now seeks to produce. He, therefore, disallowed the amendment as unfair to the defendant and the suit was dismissed on 22nd February 1923 as barred by limitation.

On appeal the Additional District Judge, Saugor, reversed this finding and remanded the suit for a trial on the merits, holding that Article 1, Schedule II of the new Tenancy Act, did not apply to it. The defendant makes this second appeal.

It is argued that the Additional District Judge has misconstrued the pleadings. On reading the judgment of the learned Judge I am of opinion that this is so. Article 1 of the Second Schedule, Tenancy Act of 1920, prescribes the period of 2 years' limitation from the date of dispossession or exclusion by any person. The defence was based on the provisions of this article and not on the provisions of section 35 of the old Tenancy Act, as the Additional District Judge supposes. The plaintiff's pleading that he had been in possession of the land in suit since 1918 is perfectly clear. He did not in his plaint rely on the jamabandis which he now seeks to produce, and I agree with the first Court in holding that he should not be allowed to amend his pleadings in order to get out of the effect of his own admissions. The learned Additional District Judge remarks that the plaintiff says that one Ramlal was in possession and that there are no pleadings on either side as to on whose behalf Ramlal came on the land. The plaintiff has clearly stated in the pleadings that Ramlal was in possession on his behalf ; so he could not take advantage of the possession of Ramlal. The discussion in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as to the respective rights of Kedarnath Malguzar and Raghubarprasad as mortgagee and as to the dispossession by a person other than the landlord is entirely beside the remark. Article 1 of the Second Schedule of the new Tenancy Act is perfectly clear, as it refers to dispossession by any person, whether the landlord or not.

It is not the law that dispossession must be by a landlord. There is plaintiff's own admission that he was excluded from the entire possession of his holding from the beginning of Sambat year 1972, and no evidence being necessary he was asked to explain this by the lower Appellate Court. He is unable to explain it and wants to amend his plaint. The lower Appellate Court is in error in supposing that the defendant did not take shelter under Article 1, Schedule II of the Tenancy Act. He distinctly says so on 6th November 1922, the day on which the plaintiff admitted his dispossession. In these circumstances when the plaintiff has distinctly admitted that he had no possession of the land within two years previous to the suit and that he never relied before on the jamabandis, the first Court was quite right in refusing to allow the amendment which would have the effect of seriously predjudicing to the defendant. The learned Additional District Judge does not seem to have read the pleadings carefully and his view that the exclusion must be by a person who is recognised by the landlord is obviously wrong in view of the provisions of the new Tenancy Act.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court. The plaintiff's suit must be dismissed and he must bear the costs of the defendant throughout.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 31st May 1921.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.

Babu Brojolal Chakraburty (with him Babu Promode Kumar Ghosh,) for the Respondents.

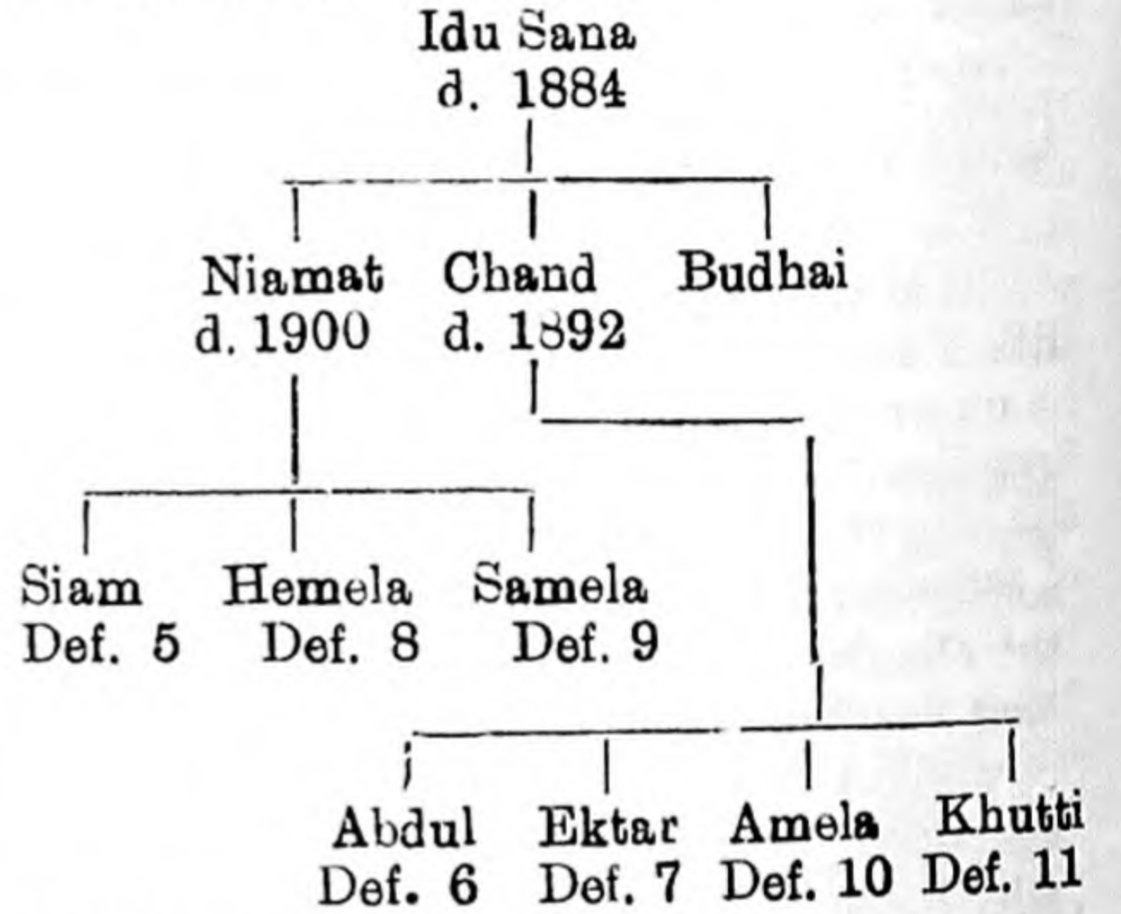
JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter in the litigation, which has culminated in this appeal, is a tenure created on the 25th February 1881, by the proprietor of Chuck Ula Kalijuga appertaining to Tauzi No. 57 of the Collectorate of Khulna. The proprietary interest, which, at that time was vested in Suryyakanta Bai Chaudhuri, has since been transferred to Jogendra Chandra Ghosh and others. The case for the plaintiff is that the tenure was granted to one Idu Sana ; while the case for the defendants is that the grant was made in favour of his son Bhudai Sana. The relationship of the parties will appear from the annexed genealogical table :



Idu Sana left three sons, Niamat Chand and Budhai who inherited the properties left by him in equal shares. Niamat left a son (defendant No. 5) and two daughters (defendants Nos. 8 and 10). Chand left two sons (defendants Nos. 6 and 7) and two daughters (defendants Nos. 10 and 11). The daughters are alleged to have relinquished their interest in favour of their respective brothers, and it may be taken for the purposes of this litigation that whatever estate was left by Idu Sana passed to his grandsons alone. On the 14th November, 1906, Budhai sold the entire tenure to the firstdefendant for a sum of Rs. 1600, on the assumption that his nephews had no interest therein. On the 26th January, 1917, the fifth, sixth and seventh defendants conveyed a two-thirds share of the tenure to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 3,000, on the assumption that it was the joint property of their respective fathers and of their uncle. On the 6th November, 1918 the plaintiff instituted the present suit for recovery of joint possession on declaration of title by purchase, for partition, and for incidental reliefs. The plaintiff joined with the prayer for possession, an alternative prayer for recovery of the purchase-money from his vendors, should the Court ultimately hold against him on the question of title. The brothers and sisters of the first defendant were brought on the record as defendants (defendants Nos. 2—4 and 12—15 in order that they might have an opportunity to oppose the claim and might be bound by any decree in favour of the plaintiff. The claim was, however, contested by the first defendant alone, who disputed the title and possession of the plaintiff as well as of his vendors. The principal issues framed on the pleadings were as follows :—

(1) Did Idu Sana or his son Budhai Sana take settlement of the land in suit ?

(2) Is the claim barred by limitation ?

(3) Is the conveyance of the plaintiff a bona fide document for consideration ?

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit and has disallowed the claim for possession as well as the alternative claim for refund of the consideration-money. On the present appeal, the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge have been assailed upon every point.

We have to consider in the first place the fundamental question in the suit, namely, whether the settlement of the disputed land was taken by Idu Sana or by his son Budhai Sana. The oral testimony of the persons said to have been present at the time of the actual settlement has been accurately analysed by the Subordinate Judge, and he has held that the evidence given by the principal witnesses for the plaintiff, Abdul Sana and Esen Sardar, to establish that the settlement was made with Idu Sana is wholly unreliable. The oral evidence is full of contradictions, and we are not prepared to dissent from the estimate of its value formed by the Trial Judge. The unsatisfactory evidence brought forward by the plaintiff does not gain in strength by the fact that the defendant has not been able to produce unimpeachable evidence in support of his affirmative case that Idu Sana had died long before 1881 when the settlement took place. The plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title and is not assisted by any weakness, real or apparent, in the case for the defendant. We may add that some of the witnesses appear to have very hazy notions of time which make it difficult for the Court to place implicit reliance on them ; but we feel bound to add that the Subordinate Judge should not have relied upon the statements of ages of witnesses at the head of depositions, which, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee, do not furnish evidence on the subject. Maqbulan v. Ahmad Hussain (1). In this state of the oral evidence the plaintiff is driven to rely upon documentary evidence. In this category, we have the plaintiff in a suit for arrears of rent instituted on the 13th April, 1904, by the landlord Suryyakanta Raichaudhury against Budhai Saha. The second paragraph of the plaint recites that Idu Sana obtained the settlement on the 25th February, 1881, when an Amalnama was granted to him. The terms of the Kabuliat which was executed by the tenant after he had received the Amalnama are then set out in detail, and the area is stated to have been 299 bighas by guess. The Kabuliat has not been produced, but the Amalnama has been received in evidence, subject to objection. This Amalnama, it must be mentioned here, purports to be in favour of Budhai Sana and not Idu Sana. In these circumstances, it is not surprising, that there has been some discussion at the Bar as to admissibility of the Amalnama and of the plaint.

As regards the Amalnama we are of opinion that it was neither a lease nor an agreement to lease within the meaning of section 3 of the Indian Registration Act and that it was consequently admissible in evidence without registration, as explained in Dwarkanath v. Ledu Sikdar (2), which distinguished the decision of the Full Bench in Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amzad Ali (3). The document in essence authorised the grantee to take possession, and was intended to be followed by a formal Kabuliat; it does not consequently fall within the scope of such decisions as Chuni v. Chundi (4), Meherunnessa v. Abdul (5) Maharaja Lachmiswar v. Dakho (6), Lall Jha v. Negroo (7), Champaklatika v. Nafar (8) and Elahi v. Hukum (9). We must further remember that apart from section 17 (2) (v) of the Indian Registration Act, the document, even if deemed compulsorily registrable, is inadmissible only for the limited purpose mentioned in section 49 (c) namely, as evidence of a transaction "affecting" immoveable property comprised therein. Here the transaction itself is admitted by both sides, the only dispute is, whether it was between A and B or A and C. We need not pause to consider whether the use of the document as an aid for the solution of this question may or may not be called "use for a collateral purpose" within the meaning of such cases as Ulfatun v. Hossain (10), Bai Golapbai v. Datagarji (11), Hope Mills v. Readymoney (12) and Vyravan v. Subramanian (13). If the document be admitted in evidence, there can be no doubt that it militates against the theory put forward by the plaintiff. Consequently a strenuous endeavour has been made to cast doubt upon its genuineness. We are not impressed by this argument. The original was produced in a previous litigation; the certified copy now on the record was taken from it on the 18th February, 1914. The original cannot now be traced, but its custody is satisfactorily proved according to the test formulated in Gadadhar v. Bhairab (14) and Troilakhya v. Swarna (15). In such circumstances secondary evidence was plainly admissible; Ehtishan Ali v. Jamna Prasad (16) and a presumption of genuineness may be made. There is no substance in the suggestion that the terms of the Amalnama are not in all respects identical with the contents recited in the plaint dated 13th April, 1904. The variations afford no ground for suspicion, as all the terms could not be expected to be enumerated in an Amalnama when a more formal document in the shape of a kabulait was intended to be drawn up.

As regards the plaint in the suit for arrears of rent, it was plainly admissible in proof of the fact that the landlord did sue on the allegation that the settlement had been made with Idu Sana; but the plaint is not admissible to prove the statement itself, as the conditions prescribed by section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act do not exist in this case. The landlord was alive, and no effective attempt was made to secure his attendance as a witness or to examine him on commission. The distinction between the admissibility of a document as evidence of a transaction and the admissibility of a document in proof of a statement contained therein is of a refined but of a fundamental character and is yet frequently overlooked; see Kashinath v. Jagatkishore (17), Ramperkash v. Ananda Das (18), Seethapati v. Venkanna (19), Baidya Nath v. Alef Jan (20), Sarada v. Umakanta (21). In our opinion, the plaint cannot properly be used to prove the statement made by the superior landlord, and the same remark applies to the plaint dated the 18th April 1911, filed by the Ghoses (the present landlords) in a suit for ejectment instituted by them. In this plaint, the Ghoses asserted that the settlement had been made with Budhai Sana. Between the dates of these two plaints, Suryya Kanta Raichaudhuri, the former landlord, granted a lease on the 14th December 1905, to Dwarkanath Mondal and Dasarath Mandal, after he himself had purchased the tenure at the sale which followed the decree dated 13th September, 1904 in the suit for arrears of rent. This lease, which subsequently became infructuous by reason of reversal of the rent sale, recites that the original settlement had been made with Budhai Sana. The position, consequently, is that in 1904, the landlord came into Court on the allegation that the settlement had been made with Idu Sana, in 1905 the same landlord granted a lease on the assertion that the settlement had been made with Budhai Sana and in 1911 the new landlords maintained that the settlement had been made with Budhai Sana. The Subordinate Judge has correctly held that these conflicting assertions, even if they were regularly admitted in evidence, could not advance the case of the plaintiff. We cannot further overlook that in 1908, when Suryyakanta Rai Chowdhuri sued Budhai Sana and others for arrears of rent, the present first defendant, who was then the second defendant, promptly repudiated the allegation of the landlord and maintained that Budhai Sana and not his father Idu Sana took the settlement. We must hold that the documentary evidence, like the oral evidence, does not prove the case for the plaintiff. This view is materially confirmed when we examine the evidence of possession. The Subordinate Judge, on a detailed analysis of the oral evidence, has pronounced against the contention of the plaintiff that Idu Sana took the settlement, raised the embankments, reclaimed the jungles, brought the lands under cultivation, and that, after his death, his three sons Niamat, Chand and Budhai were in joint possession till the death of Chand. We have closely examined the evidence, and notwithstanding the forcible criticisms of Counsel for the plaintiff, we have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the Trial Judge is correct. Consequently, in so far as possession may be deemed evidence of title, the case for the plaintiff has completely broken down and we accept the view that since the settlement of 1881, Budhai Sana was in sole possession up to the time of the sale to the first defendant in 1906. There is, in our opinion, no escape from the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to establish his alleged title. We may add that no solid foundation has been laid in the evidence for a possible theory that the settlement was taken in the name of Budhai for the benefit of the entire family, either during the life-time of Idu or after his death. Such a case would contradict and effectively destroy the theory that the settlement was taken by Idu as the head of the family. But, apart from this, the hypothesis would have no chance of acceptance in view of the decision in Sukur Mahomed v. Asmot Mandal (22), which, notwithstanding the dicta in Assamathem v. Lachmipat (23) and Muttyjan v. Ahmed Ali (24), followed Abdul v. Krishnamachariar (25), and affirmed the doctrine that in Mahomedan Law there is no representation of the family as under the Hindu Law.

In view of our decision upon the question of title, we need not investigate the interesting point of limitation raised in course of argument namely, whether having regard to the character of the lands, which, for many years, formed in the main an unculturable waste, the principles recognised by the Judicial Committee in Agency Co. v. Shortt (26), Radhagobind v. Inglis (27), Rajkumar v. Govinda Chandra (28), Secretary of State v. Krishnamani, (29) and Basanta Kumar v. Secretary of State, (30) and other cases which will be found elaborately reviewed by Chatterjee, J. in Rakhal v. Durgadas (31) should not be applied. In our opinion, the claim for recovery of possession has been rightly dismissed, as the plaintiff has failed to establish his alleged title.

We have finally to consider the alternative claim made by the plaintiff for recovery of the purchase-money from his vendors, who, as we have seen, had no title to the disputed property. The Subordinate Judge has directed that the matter be determined in a separate suit, if occasion should arise. He has held that the plaintiff is a speculative purchaser, who took the conveyance with full knowledge that his vendors were not in possession. He has further held that the evidence does not afford convincing proof of the precise amount, if any, paid by the plaintiff to his vendors. It is plain that though the alternative claim was put forward in the seventeenth paragraph of the plaint, no issue was raised on the point, and the evidence was not directed to the elucidation of the question, whether there is a covenant for title under section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act and whether in the events that have happened the plaintiff can claim restitution. According to the opinion expressed by Wilson, J. in Hanuman v. Hanuman, (32) which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee on a different ground, Hanuman v. Hanuman (33) section 43 of the Code of 1882, now superseded by O. 2, r. 2, of the Code of 1908, would not bar a separate suit; in any event, the claim can, with the leave of the Court, be reserved for investigation in another suit. In view of the course the trial took in the Court below and the state of the evidence on the record, the Subordinate Judge has, we think, properly reserved liberty to the plaintiff to institute a separate suit for restitution against his vendors; and we see no reason to vary that order.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed whth costs in favour of the first defendant.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REFERENCE NO. 41-B OF 1923.

November 3, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Baker, J. C.

Messrs. ARJUN KHEMJI AND CO.—APPLICANTS.

Income-Tax Act VII of 1918), ss. 12, 17, 18—Income-Tax Act (XI of 1922) applicability of Act to proceedings started under Act of 1918—Unregistered firm—Loss incurred by partner, whether to be deducted from total taxable income.

A notice under section 17 (2) of the Income-Tax Act of 1918 was issued to an assessee on 10th June 1921 in respect of the income of the year ending on 15th June 1921. Returns were received on 22nd August 1921 and 23rd March 1922 but were not accepted, and it was recorded on 31st March 1922, the last day on which the Act of 1918 was in force, that notice under section 18 (2) of the Act would issue at some future time. A definite order for the issue of this notice was made on 21st April 1922 and from that day onwards proceedings were conducted under the Income-Tax Act of 1922;

Held, that the Income-Tax Act of 1918 and not that of 1922 was applicable to the proceedings.

Under the Income Tax Act of 1918, if an unregistered firm in which an assessee is a partner incurs a loss, his share of that loss must be deducted from his other income in ascertaining his total taxable income. (p. 363, col. 1.)

Reference dated the 17th February 1923 by the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Central Provinces, against the firm of Messrs. Arjun Khemji and Co., Khamgaon.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—In our previous order dated the 18th of June 1923 in this case we omitted by mistake to answer one of the two questions referred to us by the Commissioner of Income-Tax. The circumstances are some-what peculiar. Two questions referred were: (1) Is this case governed by Act VII of 1918 or by Act XI of 1922? (2) Under the Act by which it is governed, if an unregistered firm in which the assessee is a partner incurs a loss, is his share of that loss to be deducted from his other income in ascertaining his total taxable income? It may be mentioned that the Act of 1918 makes no distinction between registered and unregistered firms, and it is not easy to reconcile the contention that under that Act losses in all firms must be excluded from consideration with the admission made in another reference at the same time that the new Act expressly lays down that losses in registered firms must be taken into consideration.

The assessment proceedings began on 10th June 1921 with the issue of a notice under section 17 (2) of the Act of 1918; and were concerned with the income of the year ending on 15th June 1921. The returns were received on 22nd August 1921 and 23rd March 1922. They were not accepted, and it was recorded on 31st March 1922, the last day on which the Act of 1918 was in force, that notice under section 18 (2) of that Act would issue at some future time. A definite order for the issue of this notice was made on 21st April 1922 and from that date onwards the Act of 1922 was applied in every particular, even in the appeal to the Commissioner of Income Tax and in the subsequent application to him to make the reference to this Court with which we are now dealing.

In the reference it is stated that the Commissioner is of opinion, as advised after the passing of his appellate order that the case should have been decided under Act VII of 1918 and not under Act XI of 1922 as it was, but he does " not now wish to press this legal point " and leaves it for decision to this Court. We lost sight of this matter and wrongly assuming that the case was admitted to be governed by Act XI of 1922, an assumption partly caused if not justified by the invariable reference to the firm in question as an unregistered firm, we stated an opinion that under that Act the losses as well as the profits must undoubtedly be taken into consideration.

But in another reference heard along with this, and very much confused with it thereby, we stated an opinion that under Act VII of 1918 the losses of such a firm could not be taken into consideration because, as we mistakenly thought, the profits were not. The Commissioner of Income Tax thereupon asked us for an expression of opinion on the question which we had omitted to answer. We have only to say in direct answer to that question that the case is undoubtedly and admittedly governed by Act VII of 1918.

That, however, is not the end of the matter. It has been strenuously urged on behalf of the Commissioner, both in this case and in the application for a review of the opinion expressed in the other case heard with it, that under Act VII of 1918 no deduction can be made from total taxable income of an assessee for losses incurred by him as a member of a firm other than his main business. The position is entirely untenable, as is now pointed out in our order of this date in the other case (Seth Balkishan Nathari v. Commissioner of Income Tax (1), and we feel bound to express surprise at an attempt being made even to take it up, and much more at the strenuous efforts made to maintain it. Our answer to the question referred to us is that the case is governed by Act VII of 1918.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 194 OF 1921.

September 13, 1923.

V. A. SUBBA ROW—PLAINTIFF —APPELLANT

versus

PONNAMMAI NADATHI alias PAKKIAMMAI NADATHI (DEAD) AND OTHERS— —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 83—Mortgage—Redemption—Deposit in Court—Sub-mortgagee, position of—Mortgagee whether includes assigns—Deposit to account of mortgagee and Sub-mortgagee, validity of.

The word mortgagee in section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act includes the legal representatives and assigns of the mortgagee. (p. 364, col. 1.)

A sub-mortgage is an assignment of the mortgage and having regard to the remedies of the sub-mortgagee, a deposit by the mortgagor of the mortgage money in Court does not contravene the provisions of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act merely by reason of the fact that the mortgagor recites the sub-mortgage in his petition and the Court directs notice to issue to the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee and the money, owing to disputes between the mortgagee and sub-mortgagee, is not paid out. (p. 365, col. 1 and 2.)

The fact that the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee have disputes inter se either as to the validity of the sub-mortgage or as to the amount due thereunder will not affect the mortgagor. (p. 365, col. 1.)

A sub-mortgagee is a necessary party to a suit for redemption.

Narayana Mudali v. Raghavammal, 18 M. L. J. 462.

A claim by a sub-mortgagee against the original mortgagor cannot be met by a plea of want of privity as the sub-mortgage is only an assignment of the original mortgagee's rights. Where the sub-mortgage is for an amount equal to or in excess of the original mortgage debt, it will operate as a complete assignment, and if for any lesser sum, as an assignment pro tanto. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly in A. S. No. 163 of 1920 (A. S. No. 429 of 1919 on the file of the District Court, Tinnevelly) preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevelly, in O. S. No. 515 of 1917.

Mr. S. Ramaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This Second Appeal arises out of a suit by appellant to redeem a mortgage executed by him in favour of the husband of the 1st defendant who died leaving the 1st defendant, his widow, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 his minor daughters. The first defendant in 1909 and after her husband's death sub-mortgaged the property and the 4th defendant claims to be entitled to the amount due on the sub-mortgage. The contention of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 is that the sub-mortgage originally created by the 1st defendant was a nominal transaction. The District Munsif found that the sub-mortgage was a genuine transaction supported by consideration but the Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed the decree on this point. In 1917 the appellant filed O. P. No. 33 of 1917 and deposited in Court the amount due on the mortgage. It is not disputed that the amount deposited was the amount legally payable on the mortgage. He seems to have stated that there was a sub-mortgage and that the 4th defendant claimed under it. Notice was issued to defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and to the 4th defendant that the sub-mortgage was nominal and that the 4th defendant was not entitled to any portion of the money deposited in Court, the money was not paid to anybody but remained in Court. It was after decree in the suit (O. S. No. 515 of 1917) ordered to be paid out by the District Munsif to the 4th defendant who drew this sum.

The first question is whether the deposit made under the provisions of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act in O. P. No. 33 of 1917 was a proper one. Section 83 of the Act enacts that a mortgagor may, at any time before a suit for redemption is barred, deposit in a Court having jurisdiction to the account of the mortgagee the amount remaining due on the mortgage. There can be little doubt that the word mortgagee includes the legal representatives and assigns of the mortgagee. It is argued that a sub-mortgagee is not an assign and that a deposit of the money as payable both to the legal representatives and the sub-mortgagee is not a proper deposit.

We are unable to uphold this contention. Fisher in his Law of Mortgage observes "Mortgages are frequently transferred by way of sub-mortgage. In that case the sub-mortgage is a compound mortgage consisting of a mortgage of a chose in action, (viz., the original mortgage debt) and of the property which is security for the original mortgage debt." In cases of suits where there is a sub-mortgage the decree has to direct an account of what is due on the original mortgage and of what is due on the sub-mortgage and payment of what is due on the sub-mortgage not exceeding the sum due on the original mortgage and the residue, if any, to the original mortgagee. Form No. 9, Appendix D to the Civil Procedure Code refers to suits by a sub-mortgagee against the original mortgagor and mortgagee and shows that an account has to be taken on the above footing. Ghose in his work on the law of mortgage in India observes "Debts secured by mortgage are also frequently assigned by way of security. Such transactions are known as sub-mortgages and may be evidenced merely by a deposit of title deeds. The sub-mortgagee by virtue of the assignment is not only entitled to the usual remedies against his own mortgagor but also against the original mortgagor." It is clear that a claim by a sub-mortgagee against the original mortgagor cannot be met by a plea of want of privity as the sub-mortgage is only an assignment of the original mortgagee's rights. Where the sub-mortgage is for an amount equal to or in excess of the original mortgage-debt it will operate as a complete assignment, and if for any lesser sum, as an assignment pro tanto.

We have not been referred to any case where a deposit in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act has been held to be bad owing to the assignee of the mortgage being stated as the person entitled to the money. Where a person having notice of an assignment pays the money into the Court and names only the original mortgagee who has parted with his rights as the person entitled to receive the sum deposited we do not see how he can if the money is taken away resist a suit by the assignee of the mortgage before such deposit (See Narayana Mudali v. Raghavammal (1). A sub-mortgagee will be a necessary party to a suit for redemption and we think that a deposit will not be bad merely because the petition states the persons entitled on the original and sub-mortgages and the Court issues notices to them. The case will of course be different if the mortgagor alleges claims of persons not the legal representatives or assings of the mortgagee for the purpose of seeing that the money is not drawn out or of supporting the case of persons with no title.

We do not think that Madhavi Amma v. Kunhi Puthamma (2) and Debendra Mohan Roy v. Sona Kunwar (3) referred to by the respondent apply to the case of sub-mortgages. They were cases where strangers having no right in the mortgage were mentioned as persons entitled to the money deposited.

The fact that the mortgagee and sub-mortgagee have disputes inter se either as to the validity of the sub-mortgage or the amount due thereunder will not affect the mortgagor. Where the fact of a sub-mortgage is 'not disputed it is no part of the business of the mortgagor to decide whether the sub-mortgage is real or nominal. In the case of legal representatives it has been held in Nagathal v. Arumugam Pillai (4) that any dispute that may arise between the heirs as to their shares will not affect the mortgagor making the deposit and we can see no reason why a similar rule should not apply where disputes arise as to the right to the money between the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee from him. A person executing a sub-mortgage and giving an apparent title should not cast on the mortgagor a stranger the duty of deciding who is entitled. To hold otherwise would in effect deprive the mortgagor of the rights given to him by section 83 where a mortgagee disputes the effect of his own act in executing a document which on the face of it creates rights in another to the mortgage money.

We are of opinion that a sub-mortgage is an assignment of the mortgage and that having regard to the remedies of the sub-mortgagee a deposit in Court does not contravene the provisions of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act merely by reason of the fact that the mortgagor recites the sub-mortgage in his petition and the Court directs notice to issue and the money is owing to disputes between the mortgagee and his sub-mortgagee, not paid out.

The next question is as to the liability of the defendants for mesne profits. The 2nd and 3rd defendants are minor daughters and they cannot be liable for mesne profits owing to any wrongful act of their mother; so far as the 1st and 4th defendants are concerned it is immaterial to the plaintiff whether the 1st defendant continued in possession or parted with it to somebody else. 1st defendant died pending Second Appeal and her Legal representatives are brought on record. If she created a sub-mortgage it was her duty to get back possession and hand it over to the mortgagor. The 1st defendant is found by the Subordinate Judge to be in possession. So far as the rate of mesne profits is concerned there is no dispute. We think that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as legal representatives of the 1st defendant and out of her assets and 4 are jointly liable to pay the amount decreed for the mesne profits.

As regards the amount deposited in Court in O. P. No. 33 of 1917 which has been drawn by 4th defendant we think that on the findings of the Subordinate Judge the 4th defendant is liable to pay the sum to the 1st defendant. As we hold that the deposit was valid there is no reason why the plaintiff should pay the sum over again. There will be a decree in favour of the 1st defendant against the 4th defendant for recovery of the amount drawn by him.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge will be modified as decided above. As the appellant has succeeded in all the grounds urged respondents No. 1 and 4 will pay his costs of the appeal and in the Courts below.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FULL BENCH.

MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION
NO. 412 OF 1923.

April 2, 1924.

Present :—Sir Shadi Lal, Kt., Chief Justice,
Mr. Justice Broadway and
Mr. Justice Harrison.

Rai Bahadur Lala SULTAN SINGH
versus
MURLI DHAR AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109 (a)—'Final order,' what is—Order remanding case for trial on remaining issues, whether 'final order.'

In determining the question whether an order is a 'final order' within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code, regard must be had to the immediate effect on the suit sought to be appealed against and not to the effect which a decision in favour of the applicant would have, if the proposed appeal to the Privy Council were successful.

An order is a 'final order' within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code only if it decides, or has the effect of deciding a cardinal issue in the suit, that is an issue going to the foundation of the suit, and thus disposes of the rights of the parties in the litigation, it being permissible for this purpose to examine not only the order but also the circumstances of the case with a view to ascertaining the effect of the order on the suit. (p. 373, col. 2.)

An order made by the High Court reversing the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit on a preliminary point, and remanding the case for trial on the remaining issues, is not a 'final order' within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. (p. 374, col. 1.)

Case-law discussed.

Application under O. XLV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in case reported in 73 Ind. Cas. 302.

Mr. Shamair Chand and Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Kanwar Dalip Singh and Mr. Ram Lal, for the Respondents.

ORDER.

Broadway, J.— Three days before his death, which occurred on the 21st January 1907, one Balkishen Das, B.A., executed a Will of which he appointed Baldeo Pershad and Rai Bahadur Sultan Singh the executors.

Under the terms of this Will the creation of trusts was contemplated.

The plaintiffs, certain Khatris of Delhi, having obtained the sanction required by section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, instituted a suit against the said executors, charging them with having failed to carry out the trusts and having misapplied the trust funds, asking for their removal and preparation of a scheme of management etc., and claiming rendition of accounts.

The defendants contested the suit on various grounds and one of the issues settled was "Have the plaintiffs an interest in the trust"? The learned District Judge, without going into the merits of the case, decided this issue against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court and a Division Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Harrison and myself, held that the plaintiffs had an interest entitling them to sue, accepted the appeal and remanded the suit to the Trial Court for disposal on the merits. The defendants then applied to this Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this order of remand. Objection was taken to the grant of the necessary certificate on the ground that the order sought to be appealed against was not a 'final order' within the meaning of that expression in section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

For the applicants-defendants it was contended that an order was a 'final order' and therefore appealable, whenever the decision of the, Trial Court, if upheld by the Judicial Committee would finally dispose of the main issue in a suit--a contention that appeared to be supported by the decision in Khagendra Nandan Asram v. Sahayram Chakravarty (1). On the other hand it was argued that an appeal was competent only when the order sought to be appealed against finally decided the rights of the parties in the suit—a view supported, inter alia, by Mohammad Karim Khan v. Sadiq Hussain (2). Owing to this apparent conflict of authorities Mr. Justice Harrison and I referred the matter to a Full Bench for decision as to which of those two views should be adopted by this Court, and whether the order in the present case was a 'final order' carrying with it the privilage of an appeal.

(1) 62 Ind Cas. 776; 25 C. W. N. 896.
(2) 71 Ind.Cas. 339 ; 10 O. L. J. 289 ; (1924) A.I. R. (O.) 81.

These questions have been argued before this Bench, by Mr. Shamair Chand for the applicants—defendants and Mr. Dalip Singh for the opposite party (plaintiffs).

Mr. Shamair Chand contended that the test to be applied was that enunciated by the Calcutta High Court in Khagendra Nandan Asram v. Sahayram Chakravarty (1) and urged that the order in this case was a 'final order' inasmuch as if their Lordships of the Privy Council were to restore the decision of the Trial Court on the issue in question, the suit would come to an end. In addition to Khagendra Nandan Asram v. Sahayram Chakravarty (1) he cited the following authorities as supporting his contention :—Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3), Saiyid Murzhar Hassein v. Bodha Bibi (4), Santi Lal v. Raj Narain (5), Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpat Singh (6), Hyder Mehdi v. Badshah Khanam (7), Baij Nath Goenka v. Ramashwas Singh (8), Sathappa Chetty v. Subramaniam Chetty (9), Ananda Gopal Gossain v. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury (10), Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11), Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Kishna dhan Banerji (12).

On the other hand Mr. Dalip Singh contended that orders of remand dealing with questions relating to the frame of the suit or jurisdiction or locus standi were merely interlocutory, directing procedure, and decided no issue that could be regarded as a cardinal one, and that to decide whether an order was appealable the test applicable was the one laid down in Mohammad Karim Khan v. Sadiq Hussain (2). Applying that test, he then urged that the order in the present case was not a 'final order' within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

He criticised the authorities cited by Mr. Shamair Chand, claimed that Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11) supported his own contention and referred to Sahan Singh v. Jahandad Khan (13), Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (14), Radha Kishan v. Collector of Jounpur (15), Habi bunnissa v. Munawarunissa (16), Baij Nath-Dass v. Sohan Bibi (17), Ahmad Husain v. Gobind Krishna Narain (18), Nuri Mian Ganges Sugar Works Ltd. (19), Muhammad Sajjad Ali Khan v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (20), Mujtaba Husain v. Jamal-ud-Din (21), Kausella v. Ram Sarup (22), Shankar Bharati v. Narasimha Bharati (23), Krishna Prasad Singh v. Motichand (24), Krishna Chandra Ghosh v. Ram Narain Singh (25), Raja Tussuduk Rasul Khan v. Farzand Hasain (26), Birendra Nath Roy v. Nripendra Nath Roy (27), Nayari Venkata-

Of the authorities cited at the Bar the most important are the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3), Saiyid Muzhar Hassain v. Bodha Bibi (4) and Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand, (11) and I shall refer to them at some length.

In Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3), the plaintiff in the suit alleged that the defendant was accountable to him upon several claims.

The defendant alleged that he had legal defences to every one of those claims, and that he was not accountable at all. It had been held that the legal defences set up were valid as to some of the claims, and invalid as to others' "and therefore that the defendant must account." The decree did not, in so many words, declare the liability of the defendant but it "directed accounts to be taken which he was contending ought not to be taken at all".

It was held that the form of the decree was "exactly as if it affirmed the liability of the defendant to something on each one of these claims, if only the arithmetical result of the account should be worked out against him".

Lord Hobhouse then goes on to say "Now that question of liability was the sole question in dispute at the hearing of the cause and it is the cardinal point of the suit.....The real question in issue was the liability, and that has been determined by this decree against the defendant, in such a way that in this suit it is final..... that is finally determined against him and therefore.....the decree is a final one within the meaning of section 595 of the Code" (section 109 (a) of the present Code).

(31) 60 Ind. Cas. 208 ; 23 O. C. 324.

In Saiyid Muzhar Hasein v. Bodha Bibi (4) the plaintiff rested her claim on a certain document which she alleged operated as a will and under which certain of the defendants had acquired the properties in suit which they had conveyed to her.

On the evidence led the Trial Court found that no valid will had been made and dismissed the suit. On appeal the High Court decided the validity of the will in favour of the plaintiff, and, purporting to act under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code (O. XLI, r. 23 of the present Code) remanded the cause for disposal of the remaining issues. A subsequent application for a certificate to appeal to the Privy Council was refused on the ground that the order was not a final one.

Special leave to appeal was applied for and granted. The reasons for granting leave were given by Lord Hobhouse who said ....."The next (defence) went to the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, being a denial that Ibn Ali made any valid gift to the grantors of the plaintiff.....The Subordinate Judge took the evidence and heard the case. He decided against the plaintiff on the question of Ibn Ali's will which defeated the suit, and made it necessary to give judgment on the other issues. The plaintiff appealed from this decree, and the High Court decided that Ibn Ali had made a valid gift ; and they remanded the case under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code to be disposed of on the other issues according to law." He then points out that leave to appeal had been refused by the High Court on the ground that the remand was under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code and that it was "the established practice of the Court to treat such orders of remand as not being final orders", and proceeds "Probably the practice referred to is quite correct. But there the remand contemplated by section 562 is one made in a case where the first Court has disposed of the suit on a preliminary point so as to exclude evidence of essential facts. That is not the present case. . . . To establish the will of Ibn Ali was the first step in the plaintiff's case, and on her failing to do that, her whole suit failed. But that does not make the point a preliminary point decided so as to exclude essential evidence. Nor does it appear that any such evidence was excluded."

SULTAN SINGH v. MURLI DHAR

He then holds that the remand order fell more properly under section 565 and, referred to Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3), held that "In this case the will of Ibu Ali is the cardinal point of the suit, and as after the decision of the High Court that can never be disputed again, their order is final, notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries to make."

It will be seen that in each of these cases what was looked at was the order against which an appeal was sought, and in each of them it was held that the said order was final because it decided the cardinal point in the suit what remained to be done being regarded as subordinate.

In Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11) suits for alleged breaches of certain contracts for the sale of cotton had been instituted. Each contract contained an arbitration clause, and the defendants applied for a stay of proceedings under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, with a view to the issues being referred to arbitration under the clause.

The Trial Court granted the application but on appeal the Judicial Commissioners of Sind set aside the orders of the stay. Leave to appeal was granted by the Judicial Commissioners on the ground that if the stay applied for had been granted it would have finally terminated the suits. At the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was raised as to whether the orders appealed against were 'final orders' within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. The objection was allowed by the Board, Viscount Cave saying that an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties. The orders now under appeal do not finally dispose of those rights, but leave them to be determined by the Court in the ordinary way."

Coming now to the other cases cited; in Santi Lal v. Raj Narain (5) leave to appeal was granted in the following circumstances:—

Certain persons had obtained a mortgage decree in their favour and in execution of this decree had exhausted all the property covered by the decree without having satisfied their demand. They applied to the first Court for the preparation of a decree covering the unsatisfied balance under the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment-debtors objected that the application for a decree under the aforesaid rule and order was barred by limitation. The Execution Court allowed the objection and dismissed the application. On appeal the High Court held that the application was within time and ordered that the application should be readmitted and disposed of in accordance with law, under the circumstances this order amounted to a direction that a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code should be prepared, the details being left for the execution Court to settle.

Saiyid Muzha Hossein v. Bodha Bibi (4) was referred to and it was held that the order in question disposed of one substantial objection raised by the judgment-debtors to the decree-holder's application and that even if the said order was not a final one leave to appeal should be accorded.

In Khagendra Nandan Asram v. Sahayram Chakravarty (1) the placitum probably goes beyond what was intended to be laid down in the judgment. A suit had been dismissed on the ground that the trial of the question raised in it was barred by the result of a decision in an earlier suit which had been pending when the present suit was instituted. The opposite view was taken by the High Court and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. Saiyid Muzha Hossein v. Bodha Bibi (4) and Ananda Gopal Gossain v. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury (10) were referred to and leave to appeal was granted on the ground that "the decision of the High Court was in respect of a cardinal issue in the suit and therefore was a final decree for the purpose of appeal to His Majesty in Council."

I do not think Chandra Kunwar v. Chowdhuri Narpat Singh (6) affords any assistance. The main question appears to have been whether one Raja Makand Singh, was the son of Raja Partab Singh. The first Court held that he was not as the evidence showed that he was the adopted son of Raja Kishen Singh and the suits were dismissed. This finding was reversed on appeal by the High Court who remanded the cases, under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Trial Court for a decision on the other issues. It is not clear what these other issues were, but the finding arrived at was obviously one which went to the root of the cases. An appeal was preferred to the Privy Council and the report does not show that the finality of the order was questioned.

In Hyder Mehdi v. Badshah Khanam (7) the suit was based on a bond. The defendant pleaded limitation as one of the main defences. The first Court gave effect to this plea and dismissed the suit. On appeal the suit was held to be within time and the suit remanded, under O. XLI, r. 23, for trial on the merits. Leave to appeal was granted on the ground that as the plea of limitation was the main and substantial defence the order was a final one and leave to appeal should be granted. In his concurring judgment Daniels, A. J. C., points out that limitation was "the only defence which goes to the root of the claim" Baijnath Goenka v. Ramashwar Singh (8) is a decision of the Patna High Court in which, while Miller, C. J. held that the order was final and, appealable, Chapman J. was of opinion that the order was interlocutory, merely directing procedure.

"Sir Dawson Miller considered that it was not easy and perhaps impossible to reconcile the numerous decisions that have been given with regard to the meaning of the words decree or final order and similar expressions in the different High Courts of this Country", but referred to Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3) and came to the conclusion that the decision of the High Court in execution proceedings amounted to a "decree" as defined in section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Sathappa Chetty v. Subramaniam Chetty (9) is a decision of the Madras High Court. A suit for dissolution of partnership and taking of accounts was dismissed as being barred by limitation. On appeal the High Court reversed the finding and remanded the case to the Trial Court with a direction to frame a preliminary decree and take further proceedings according to law. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council, was granted on the ground that the order was final inasmuch as it finally disposed of the rights of the parties. Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11) was followed.

Ananda Gopal Gossain v. Infar Chandra Pal Chowdhury (10) it was held that the cardinal point in the suit was whether a notice issued under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been properly served. The Trial Court had dismissed the suit holding it had not, the High Court took a different view and held it had been properly served and remanded the case to be tried out on the remaining issues. Leave to appeal was granted.

Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Krishnadhan Baneri (12) does not carry the matter any further. Leave to appeal had been granted by the High Court and a preliminary objection was taken at the hearing that the order under appeal was not final as it directed the taking of accounts without a finding as to the liability to account. The objection was disallowed without any discussion and it would appear that this case would clearly come within the purview of the discussion in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3).

In Sohan Singh v. Jahandad Khan (13) a suit had been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue. The decision was reversed on appeal by the Chief Court and the case remanded for a decision on the merits. Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was refused as it was held that the order sought to be appealed was not a final one as it did not determine the suit.

In Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (14) the High Court had held that an order by an Execution Court disallowing mesne profits for a period of more than 6 years was a final order open to appeal and this view was upheld by the Privy Council. Lord Hobhouse says in the course of his judgment "His (the Execution Court's) decision is a final one in its essence and would be so equally whether it stood alone or was combined with decisions on other points. It resembles in principle a decree for account made at the hearing of a cause, which is final against the party denying liability to account and is appealable....." An obvious reference to Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3) which was however, not specifically cited.

In Radha Kishan v. Collector of Jaunpur (15) a decree had been granted ex-parte and an application under section 108 Civil Procedure Code 1898 had been summarily dismissed. The High Court set aside the dismissal of the application to set aside the ex parte decree and remanded the case, under section 562 Civil Procedure Code, to be disposed of on the merits. Leave to appeal was granted and it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council, on an examination of the order and the judgment on which it was based that "the true intendment" of the order was that the first Court was to decide the application under section 108 Civil Procedure Code anew and in accordance with law and that, therefore, the appeal to the Board was incompetent, the order not being a 'final order.'

In Habibunnissa v. Munawarunnissa (16) the suit had been dismissed as barred by time. The High Court had reversed this decision and holding the suit to be within limitation, had remanded the case under section 562 Civil Procedure Code for decision on the merits. An application for leave to appeal was refused it being held that an order of remand under section 562 Civil Procedure Code was not appealable to His Majesty in Council though it may possibly be so if it had the effect of deciding finally the cardinal point in the suit. Saiyd Muzhar Hassein v. Bodha Bibi (4) was referred to.

In Baij Nath Dass v. Sohan Bibi (17) one Must. Sohan Bibi had brought a suit for a declaration that a transfer of certain property effected by a compromise and a decree be declared to be null and void so far as she herself was concerned, upon the death of one Must. Manki Balm, the widow of one Babu Paris Chandar.

It had been found that Must. Manki Balm had validly adopted Must. Sohan Bibi's father. Must. Manki Balm had compromised a suit against her by which compromise certain property had been transferred. A decree had been passed on this compromise. It was this compromise and decree, and the transfer effected thereby that were attacked in this suit which had been dismissed by the Trial Court on the ground that Must. Sohan Bibi was not entitled to maintain it and that it was barred by limitation. The appellate Court while affirming the adoption differed as to the right to sue and limitation and remanded the suit.

A certificate was refused on the ground that the question of adoption was not " the cardinal point " in the cases and that the order sought to be appealed had determined only a part of the case leaving other matters still to be determined. Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v. Bootha Bibi (4) was discussed at length and distinguished. The view taken appears to have been that an order of remand which decides only one of the important issues in a suit cannot be a 'final order'.

In Ahmad Hussain v. Govind Krishna Narain (18) the suit had been dismissed by the Trial Court as barred by section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (now O. II, r. 2). The High Court found that the suit was not concluded by section 43 Civil Procedure Code and remanded the case for a decision on the facts. Leave to appeal was refused after a consideration of Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v. Bodha Bibi (4) it being held that the order was an interlocutory one.

In Nuri Mian v. Ganges Sugar Work Ltd. (19) the Ganges Sugar Works Company applied under para. 17 of the second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code to file an alleged contract to submit to arbitration. The Trial Court dismissed the application on the sole ground that the agreement was invalid, not being under the seal of the Company. The High Court reversed this decision and remanded the case under O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code for trial on the other issues. An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the order of remand was made and was refused by a Full Bench of the High Court. It was recognised that the expression 'final order' was not clear and that the cases in the various High Courts where the question as to what was a 'final order' had been discussed and decided were conflicting. The application was dealt with on its own circumstances and it was held that although the decision of the High Court was upon a very important issue in the suit, it did not finally decide the dispute between the parties as there were still other defences set up which remained to be decided and the order of remand was, therefore, not a 'final order'.

In Muhammad Sajjad Ali Khan v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (20) the issue decided by the order of remand in favour of the plaintiffs was that the suit was not barred by the rule of res-judicata. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council was refused and it was held that appeals to His Majesty in Council in matters interlocutory in their nature should only be allowed to be preferred when the decision puts an end to the litigation and finally decides the rights of the parties.

In Mujtaba Husain v. Jamal-ud-Din (21), a suit for a declaration that certain property was endowed for the purposes of a mosque and for other charitable purposes was dismissed on the ground that it came within the purview of secton 539 of the Civil Procedure Code 1882, (now section 92) and the consent necessary thereunder had not been obtained. On appeal the High Court held that section 539, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, did not apply and no consent was necessary. The suit was remanded for disposal on the merits. An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was refused, it being held that no cardinal issue i.e. no issue going to the foundation of the suit, had been determined by the order in question which was, therefore, not a 'final order' giving a right to appeal.

In Kausalla v. Ram Sarup (22) two of the pleas raised were that the suit was barred by limitation and also by the rule of res-judicata. The Trial Court overruled the plea as to limitation but gave effect to the plea of res-judicata and dismissed the suit. On appeal the High Court affirmed the decision as to limitation but held the plea of res-judicata was bad and remanded the case under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code. An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was refused on the ground that the order of remand did not have the effect of determining a cardinal point in the suit. Reference was made to Raja Tussuduk Rasul Khan v. Farzand Hasain (26) where a plea of limitation was decided in favour of the defendants but reversed on appeal. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council had been refused and special leave to appeal was applied for. Their Lordships of the Privy Council refused the application holding the order was not a 'final order'.

In Shankar Bharati v. Narasimha Bharati (23) a decree had been passed on a compromise. On appeal the High Court sent down certain issues for findings, and after the findings were returned set aside the decree and remanded the suit to be proceeded within the ordinary course as if there had been no compromise. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council was refused on the ground that the order of remand was not final, as it did not put an end to the litigation between the parties or dispose so substantially of the matter in-issue between them as to leave merely subordinate or ancillary matters for decision.

In Krishna Prasad Singh v. Moti Chand (24) the question now under discussion was not before the Judicial Committee and the case affords no assistance.

In Krishna Chandra Ghosh v. Ram Narain Singh (25) an order deciding that the suit as framed was not barred by the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and remanding the suit for trial on the merits was held by the High Court not to be a 'final order'.

In Birendra Nath Roy v. Niupendra Nath Roy (27) the plaintiff had sued the defendants in their individual capacity for possession of certain property and for a declaration of his rights. The Trial Court dismissed the suit apparently on the ground that the defendants could not be sued in their individual capacity. The High Court set aside the order of dismissal and remanded the suit for a retrial directing that the defendants "should be sued personally as well as executors" and one of them "as the residuary legatee and heir of Jogendra Nath." The substance of the order was looked at and it was held that the order was neither a decree nor a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

In Nayari Venkataranga Row Garu v. Raja Keesraa Venkataram Narasimha Rao (28) orders of the High Court deciding, in one case that the pleadings held insufficient by the Trial Court were sufficient and in the other that the application of section 43 of the former Code in bar of the suit was wrong, and remanding the cases for trial on the merits, were held to be merely interlocutory and therefore not appelable.

In Dauby v. Tafazul Hussain (29) it was held that the order of the High Court setting aside a decision of the Trial Court that the trial of the suit was barred by the rule of res-judicata and remanding the case for a trial on the merits was not a final order inasmuch as it only decided one of the questions in dispute between the parties and did not conclude the case.

the suit. It will be observed that the question in each case is whether an issue, upon which the High Court has pronounced its opinion, is or is not a cardinal point in the case, and it is not always easy to answer this question. It seems to me that the determination of the matter depends not only upon the nature of the issue itself, but also upon its importance as compared with that of the other points arising in the suit. The test laid down by the Privy Council is, by no means, a certain one, and it is on account of this uncertainty that the High Courts in India have expressed divergent opinions as to whether an order of remand determining a question such as that of the limitation of a suit constitutes a final order as contemplated by the section.

There can be little doubt that a matter of procedure can never be treated as a cardinal point in the suit. Nor can an issue, which does not dispose of the rights of the parties, belong to that category. There may, however, be other issues in a case which deal with the rights of the parties, but I do not think that every one of them can be held to be a cardinal point. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule which would solve the problem in every case, and it is the duty of the Court to determine in each case whether the order sought to be appealed against comprises a decision on a crucial issue which goes to the root of the case, or whether it is a mere interlocutory order.

Now, the only matter decided by the High Court in the present case, is that the plaintiffs have established their locus standi to bring the action. No decision on the rights of the parties has yet been given, and I consider that an issue of that character, deciding purely a preliminary point and not dealing with the merits of the dispute, cannot be regarded as the principal matter in controversy between the parties within the meaning of the rule laid down by the Privy Council.

My answer to the question submitted to the Full Bench is that the order of remand in this case is not a final order, and that the test of finality is whether the order, as made, finally disposes of the rights of the parties.

Harrison, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r 17—Ex parte proceedings—Amendment of plaint—Notice to defaulting defendant—Interlocutory orders—Revision—general rule.

If a party does not appear after being duly summoned, he is not entitled to any fresh notice during the pendency of the suit and has no right to impeach an order of amendment of plaint passed ex parte against him. (p 375. col. 2).

It is not usual to interfee in revision in the case of interlocutory orders against which though no appeal may lie, their correctness can be challenged in an appeal against the final decree in the suit. (p. 376, col. 1).

Application for revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated 3rd November 1922, in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1921.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Non-applicant.

ORDER.—The case from which this application for revision arises proceeded ex parte against Banoobi the present applicant. After the case had been heard and adjourned for argument the plaintiff applied for an amendment of the plaint which has been allowed. Banoobi complains that this was done without issuing notice to her which is a fact. But it seems to me that if a party does not appear after being duly summoned he or she is not entitled to any fresh notice during the pendency of the suit, otherwise it would have to be held that the change in the aspect of any suit or the introduction of pleadings going beyond the facts mentioned in the plaint would be sufficient cause to cancel ex parte orders passed and to give a defaulting defendant another opportunity of appearing. I do not think applicant has any ground of complaint in not being noticed for the hearing in which the question of allowing or disallowing the amendment was to be argued.

As regards the merits of the case, I have to-day decided in another revision case arising from the same suit, namely Anwar Khan v. Yakab Khan (1) in which Banoob's brother Anwarkhan is the applicant that no ground for interfering with the discretion exercised by the presiding Judge in allowing the amendment exists. I need not repeat all the arguments used in that case beyond stating that it is not usual to interfere in revision in the case of interlocutory orders against which though no appeal may lie their correctness can be challenged in an appeal against the final decree in the suit. For these reasons I dismiss this application with costs. I fix pleader's fee at Rs. 15.

Section 78 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 did not create for the first time or take away any substantive right but it merely regulated the procedure applicable to appeals and applications under the Provincial Insolvency Act, so that section 78 is applicable to insolvency proceedings initiated before the Act of 1920. (p. 377, col. 1.)

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to grant leave to appeal to the High Court against the order of the District Court of Ramnad at Madura, in C. M. P. No. 63 of 1919, in I. P. No. 27 of 1913 (on the file of the Official Receiver's Court, Ramnad, in I. P. No. 15 of 1913, on the file of the District Court of Ramnad at Madura.).

FACTS.—In proceedings in insolvency after adjudication of a person as insolvent, a creditor filed a petition under sections 42 and 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act alleging that the action of the insolvent in filing the Insolvency petition was fraudulent, that he had deliberately suppressed books of accounts and had falsely stated they did not exist or were destroyed. The prayers were to annul the adjudication under section 42 and to take action under section 43 and sanction the prosecution of the insolvent.

The District Court, however, dismissed the petition holding that the petitioner was only a creditor and not a person interested within the meaning of sections 42 and 43 and had no locus standi to maintain the petition.

The order was passed in September 1920 after the new Insolvency Act V of 1920 had come into force.

An appeal was filed to the High Court Karuthan Chettiar v. Raman Chettiar (1) against the said order. No leave to appeal was, however, obtained. Two days before the appeal came in for actual hearing, in view to possible objections on the ground that there was no right of appeal without leave obtained against the order refusing to interfere under sections 35 and 69 of the new Act corresponding to sections 42 and 43 respectively of the old Act, the present petition C. M. P. No. 2042 of 1923 was filed asking for leave to appeal and for excusing the delay under section 78 of the new Provincial Insolvency Act.

SULTAN SINGH v. MURLI DHAR

In Prakash Chandra Sarkar v. Brindaban Chandra Sarkar (30) the order sought to be appealed to the Privy Council had been passed on a petition of revision, the decision of the Execution Court being affirmed. Leave to appeal was refused the principle followed being that the order was not final as it did not finally determine the rights of the parties in controversy in the suit.

In Mohammad Karim Khan v. Sadiq Hussain (2) during the pendency of a suit for pre-emption the plaintiff pre-emptor gifted the property, on the ownership of which he based his claim to pre-empt the property sold to his son. The gift included a right to continue the pending suit for pre-emption. The son applied to be added or substituted as a plaintiff but the Trial Court held that the right of pre-emption was not transferable and the donee could not continue the suit. He also held that the donor had lost his right of pre-emption by transferring the property, the ownership of which had given him that right and dismissed the suit. On appeal these findings were set aside and the case remanded to the Court below for trial on the merits. An application was made for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this order of remand but was refused on the ground that the order in question did not finally decide the rights of the parties in the litigation which did not depend mainly on the determination or the right of the donee to sue but depended largely on the determination of the other issues raised in the defence.

In Sri Krishna Dos v. Benares Hindu University (31) applying the definition given in Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11) that "an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties", it was held that an order deciding that an incorporated body is a judicial person legally competent to discharge the functions of an executor and, as such, to apply for probate, but without deciding whether it is entitled to the grant of probate, was not a final order within the meaning of section 109 (a) Civil Procedure Code.

After a careful consideration of these authorities I have arrived at the conclusion that the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3), Saiyid Muzhar Hosein v. Bodha Bibi (4), Radha Kishan v. Collector of Jaunpur (15), and Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11) make it abundantly clear that Mr. Shamair Chand's contention is untenable, and that the determining factor is not the effect on the suit a decision in favour of the applicant would have if the proposed appeal to the Privy Council were successful, but the immediate effect on the suit of the order sought to be appealed against. I also consider that it had been laid down by these pronouncements that an order is a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code only if it decides, or has the effect of deciding, the cardinal issue in the suit, (that is an issue going to the foundation of the suit) and thus disposes of the rights of the parties in the litigation, it being permissible to examine not only the order but, the circumstances of the case with a view to ascertaining the effect of the order on the suit. I take this to be the view of the majority, if not of all, of the authorities examined above, and I think the probability is that it would be possible to reconcile the different views taken by the small minority if all the facts of those cases were known. This view is also in consonance with the English authorities on the point.

In Issacs and Son v. Salbstein (32) it was laid down that the nature of the order in each case would determine whether it was final or interlocutory, and that if the order finally disposed of the rights of the parties it should be treated as a final order, but if it did not, it was an interlocutory order from which an appeal was not entertainable.—See also Salaman v. Warner (33) and Bozson v. The Altrincham Urban District Council (34) referred to by Viscount Cave in Firm of Ramchand Manjimal v. Firm of Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (11).

In Standard Discount Co. v. La Grange (35), Britt. L.J. says "No order, judgment, or other proceeding can be final which does not at once affect the status of the parties for which ever side the decision may be given; so that if it is given for the plaintiff it is conclusive against the defendant, and if it is given for the defendant it is conclusive against the plaintiff."

My answer to the first part of the reference, therefore, is that it is the nature of the order sought to be appealed against, that determines the right to appeal, and that an order is a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code only if it puts an end to the litigation between the parties or disposes so substantially of the matters in issue between them as to leave merely subordinate or ancillary matters for decision. Having regard to the above it follows that my answer to the second part of the reference is in the negative as the order sought to be appealed against does not decide the rights of the parties in the litigation.

I would, therefore, refuse the application with costs.

Shadi Lal, C.J.—This application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council arises out of an action brought by certain Khatris of the town of Delhi for the administration of a trust alleged to have been created for public purposes of a charitable nature. The plaintiffs claimed to have an interest in the trust, and after reciting that they had obtained the consent, in writing of the Collector for instituting the suit, they asked the Court to grant them the various reliefs specified in sub-section (1) of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. The suit was resisted on several grounds which need not be set out here in extenso. It is sufficient to say that the pleadings of the parties gave rise to seven issues, of which only the following two are material for the purposes of this application :—

(1) Is the sanction of the Collector defective?
(2) Have plaintiffs an interest in the trust?

Now, the Trial Court while holding that the consent of the Collector was not open to any valid objection, dismissed the suit in limine on the ground that the plaintiffs did not have such an interest in the trust as would entitle them to maintain the suit. On appeal by the plaintiffs a Division Bench of the High Court dissented from this conclusion, and decided that the plaintiffs had established such interest in the trust as was contemplated by section 92. The learned Judges, accordingly, set aside the decree dismissing the suit, and remanded the case for trial on the remaining issues. The defendants have made the present application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and the question debated, before us is whether the order of the High Court amounts to a 'final order' as contemplated by section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned Counsel, on both sides have invited our attention to a large number of decided cases in support of their respective contentions, but they admit that there is a conflict of judicial authorities in India as to the test to be applied in deciding whether a particular adjudication is or is not final order for the purposes of appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The controversy is practically confined to the determination of the question whether an order made by a High Court reversing the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit on a preliminary point, and remanding the case for decision on the remaining issues, should or should not be treated as a final order within the meaning of section 109. Now, there are two views on the subject. According to one view, which appears to have been adopted by the Calcutta High Court, the test is whether the decision of the Trial Court, if restored by the Privy Council, would put an end to the suit altogether. If this view is to prevail, almost every order of remand reversing the dismissal of a suit on a preliminary point would be appealable to the Privy Council. The other view is that no order can be treated as final unless it finally determines the rights of the parties.

I consider it unnecessary to refer to all the judgments cited at the Bar, because the principle to be deduced from the judgments of the Privy Council in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. C. A. Turner (3) and Saiyid Mazhar Hussain v. Mst. Bodha Bibi (4) and Ram Chand Mauji Mal v. Govardhan Das, Vishan Das Ratna Chand (11) is to the effect that an order comprising the decision of the High Court upon a cardinal issue in a suit that issue being one that goes to the foundation of the suit, and one that can never, while that decision stands, be disputed again, is a final order for the purposes of appeal to His Majesty in Council, notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries yet to be made in disposing the suit. It will be observed that the question in each case is whether an issue, upon which the High Court has pronounced its opinion, is or is not a cardinal point in the case, and it is not always easy to answer this question. It seems to me that the determination of the matter depends not only upon the nature of the issue itself, but also upon its importance as compared with that of the other points arising in the suit. The test laid down by the Privy Council is, by no means, a certain one, and it is on account of this uncertainty that the High Courts in India have expressed divergent opinions as to whether an order of remand determining a question such as that of the limitation of a suit constitutes a final order as contemplated by the section.

There can be little doubt that a matter of procedure can never be treated as a cardinal point in the suit. Nor can an issue, which does not dispose of the rights of the parties, belong to that category. There may, however, be other issues in a case which deal with the rights of the parties, but I do not think that every one of them can be held to be a cardinal point. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule which would solve the problem in every case, and it is the duty of the Court to determine in each case whether the order sought to be appealed against comprises a decision on a crucial issue which goes to the root of the case, or whether it is a mere interlocutory order.

Now, the only matter decided by the High Court, in the present case, is that the plaintiffs have established their locus standi to bring the action. No decision on the rights of the parties has yet been given, and I consider that an issue of that character, deciding purely a preliminary point and not dealing with the merits of the dispute, can not be regarded as the principal matter in controversy between the parties within the meaning of the rule laid down by the Privy Council.

My answer to the question submitted to the Full Bench is that the order of remand in this case is not a final order, and that the test of finality is whether the order, as made, finally disposes of the rights of the parties.

FACTS.— Karuthan Chetty v. Raman Chetty (C. M. P. No. 2042 of 1923 : 45 M. L. J. 844) is connected with Karuthan Chetty v. Raman Chetty (C. M. A. No. 69 of 1921 : 45 M. L. J. 804) sent in December, 1923.

In proceedings in insolvency after adjudication of a person as insolvent, a creditor filed a petition under sections 42 and 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act alleging that the action of the insolvent in filing the Insolvency petition was fraudulent, that he had deliberately suppressed books of accounts and had falsely stated they did not exist or were destroyed. The prayers were to annul the adjudication under section 42 and to take action under section 43 and sanction the prosecution of the insolvent.

The District Court, however, dismissed the petition holding that the petitioner was only a creditor and not a person interested within the meaning of sections 42 and 43 and had no locus standi to maintain the petition.

The order was passed in September 1920 after the new Insolvency Act V of 1920 had come into force.

An appeal was filed to the High Court Karuthan Chettiar v. Raman Chettiar (1) against the said order. No leave to appeal was, however, obtained. Two days before the appeal came in for actual hearing, in view to possible objections on the ground that there was no right of appeal without leave obtained against the order refusing to interfere under sections 35 and 69 of the new Act corresponding to sections 42 and 43 respectively of the old Act, the present petition C. M. P. 2042 of 1923 was filed asking for leave to appeal and for excusing the delay under section 78 of the new Provincial Insolvency Act.

JUGAL KISHORE NARAYAN SINGH v. BHATU MODI

ORDER.—The application has been made nearly 3 years after the order sought to be appealed against was passed.

It is contended that section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act cannot be applied, because section 78 of Act V of 1920 conferred a new right after the inception of these insolvency proceedings. We consider that this section did not create for the first time or take away any substantive right, but that it merely regulated the procedure applicable to appeals and applications under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

We have, therefore, power to excuse delay, and the fact that leave to appeal was not necessary under the old Act (III of 1907) is a sufficient reason for doing so.

Leave to appeal is granted under section 75 (3) of Act V of 1920.

BHATU MODI AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and Tenant—Decrees for rent against tenant—Sale in execution of first decree subject to liability for the second—Execution of second decree, whether can proceed.

After a holding has been once sold in execution of a rent decree and has passed out of the possession of the tenant it cannot ordinarily be again sold in execution of any other decree for rent due by the same tenant, except in cases when the execution Court, allows the holding to be sold subject to a liability to satisfy another outstanding decree. (p. 378, col. 1)

Haradhan Chatteraj v. Kartik Chandra, 6 C. W. N. 877, referred to.

The landlord obtained a rent decree against the tenant for a certain number of years; subsequently he obtained another decree for another period of years. In execution of the first decree he brought the holding to sale and it was sold subject to a liability to satisfy the other decree. He then instituted another execution case for the realisation of the second decree and asked for the attachment of other property of the tenant:

Held, that the judgment-debtor should have objected at the outset to the irregular sale and not having done so, the decree-holder could not be estopped from proceeding with the execution. (p. 378, col. 2.)

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 29th August 1922, confirming an order of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 20th December 1921.

Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—This case illustrates the difficulties which arise when in execution of a decree for arrears of rent the Court sells the holding subject to a liability for the arrears of years other than those in suit. The matter was considered in this Court in Saiyid Muhammad Jawad Hussain v. Maharaja Kumar Gopal Narain Singh (1), and it would seem that here the irregularity has resulted in a loss against which the judgment-debtor can get no relief.

The facts are that on the 30th July 1910 the landlord obtained a rent decree, against the tenant for the years 1314, 1315 and 1316 F. S. for a sum of Rs. 641-11-0. He brought a second suit for the years 1317 to 1320 which was decreed on the 29th August 1914 for a sum of Rs. 935-13-0. In execution of the first decree he then brought the holding to sale in May 1915 and it must now be taken as established that it was sold subject to a liability to satisfy the second decree. The landlord then instituted execution case No. 23 of 1921 for the realisation of the second decree and asked for the attachment of properties other than the holding but the Subordinate Judge by his order dated the 20th December 1921 held that as the decree-holder was himself the auction-purchaser and had bought the holding subject to the liability to satisfy the second decree the debt was satisfied and the execution could not proceed.

In appeal the learned District Judge held on the 29th August 1922 that there was an equitable estoppel in the case and that the proper course was for the deree-holder to sell the holding first and then if the decree remained unsatisfied to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtor.

The present second appeal is filed against the District Judge's order.

Now it is settled that after a holding has been once sold in execution of a rent decree and has passed out of the possession of the tenant it can not ordinarily be again sold in execution of any other decree for rent due by the same tenant. An exception, however, has been made in cases where the execution Court, though irregularly, allows the holding to be sold subject to a liability to satisfy another outstanding decree; in such cases the auction-purchaser is concluded by res-judicata and the landlord is competent to proceed in the first instance against the holding and to call upon the auction-purchaser to discharge the liability which he has undertaken. That was the principle of the decision in Haradhan Chatteraj v. Kartik Chandra (2), on which the respondent now relies; but that case has no application at all where the decree-holder is himself the purchaser. I take it that the judgment-debtor could not have resisted the attachment of other properties if after the sale the decree-holder had changed his mind and declined to proceed against the auction-purchaser. The law gives the decree-holder an option and I cannot see how any estoppel arises. But it is contended that there was some representation by the decree-holder by reason of which the tenant was induced to change his position. Now the representation must be a statement of fact and not of a proposition of law, and it is clear that the decree-holder has said nothing which he now desires to repudiate. If the representation was that there was a second decree outstanding then there was nothing incorrect in that statement and no question of a change of position by reason of such a representation can arise. If the representation was that the property was in law liable to be again sold in execution of the second decree that was a statement of a proposition of law and cannot raise an estoppel, and even if the decree-holder had gone so far as to represent that he would not execute the second decree at all except by the sale of the holding (which is not found in this case) the decree-holder would not be estopped by the mere expression of such an intention. It is said that the judgment-debtor might, if he had been aware that the decree-holder would exercise his option as against the other properties, have applied to get the sale set aside under O. XXI, r. 89 Civil Procedure Code. The reply is that the decree-holder has no responsibilty in the matter. It may be that the judgment-debtor has been beguiled into a sense of security, but after all that is his own fault. He should have objected at the outset to the irregular sale and not having done so he must suffer the consequences.

The result is that the appeal will be decreed with costs in this Court and the Courts below.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. Swaminatha Iyer and K. G. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit for dissolution of partnership, for the taking of accounts and for recovery of money due to him as profits. It would appear that the plaintiff, the 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants and the 1st defendant's father had a partnership in bamboo trade from 1912 to 1913. The 1st defendant's father died in that year and that of course in law amounted to a dissolution of the partnership. Nevertheless the same bamboo trade was carried on by the 2nd and 3rd defendants along with 1st defendant who was the son of the deceased man and plaintiff was also added as a partner. It is a question in this case whether the plaintiff came in as a partner or only as a sub-partner of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 alone. The Subordinate Judge has found that in taking the plaintiff into the firm of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 who alone entered into the contract with the plaintiff under Ex. A really acted on behalf of the firm including the 2nd defendant and I think I must accept that finding as a finding of fact and hold that the plaintiff became not a sub-partner but a partner in the second partnership which continued till 1917. The plaintiff is now suing for the accounts to be taken not only of the trade from 1913 to 1917 but also of the trade in 1912-1913. It is contended before me that the claim to take accounts of 1912-1913 partnership is barred by limitation and those accounts should be excluded from the decree. No doubt when a partner dies, the partnership comes to an end under the Contract Act. But nevertheless as was held in the case in Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Sahib (1) if the remaining partners continue the business, for the purpose of ascertaining what shares those remaining partners brought into the new partnership an account may have to be taken of the old partnership and there will be no question of limitation at all in such a case as that, for the account of the old partnership is taken not for the purpose of enforcing the claim to the money due as profits in that partnership but for the purpose of ascertaining what the capital supplied by the continuing partners was to the new partnership. In that view there will be no question of limitation preventing the accounts of the old partnership being taken. I think that principle applies to this case. No doubt here one of the partners, 1st defendant in the second partnership, is a newly added partner. Nevertheless he was the son of his father who was the previous partner, and apparently the father's share was treated as the son's in the new partnership The father's other heirs if any are now barred from claiming any share in the profits of 1912-1913 trade and the 4th defendant also who went out from the partnership in 1913 will also be barred from claiming a share in the trade but as between the various persons who are now members of the new partnership, there will be no bar of limitation for the purpose of taking accounts of 1912-1913 partnership. As regards the share itself of the plaintiff, the agreement under Ex. A was that he should be given a two annas share in the rupee of the profits. It is contended by the learned Advocate for the appellants that it means a two annas share only in the profits of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and as they are getting only an eight annas share, it means only one anna share in the whole of the profits. I do not think that that contention is right, more especially as I find that the plaintiff became really a partner of the firm including the 2nd defendant and as it is clear that what was intended was that out of the total share of the profits the plaintiff should have a two annas fraction, and when accounts are taken and the profits are ascertained the plaintiff will be given that share as decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

It is also contended that there is no finding that the accounts of the previous partnership of 1912-1913 were not taken and settled and therefore I should call for a finding on that point before I decide that the case in Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader (1) quoted above applies. I do not think that that is correct, for the Subordinate Judge says expressly in paragraph

(1) 25 M. 26.

3 of his judgment that the plaintiff alleges in his plaint a continuance of the same business and that he and his witnesses prove that plaintiff's accounts of such business were not settled. All the points taken in Second Appeal failing, the Second Appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Bareilly, dated the 26th of July 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows :—

In 1913 the plaintiffs were recorded as co-sharers of 1 biswa, 3 biswansis odd. Jagan Nath and others, the pro forma defendants, were recorded as co-sharers of 18 biswansis odd. Partition proceedings were instituted in 1913 at the instance of another co-sharer, but the plaintiffs and Jagan Nath both applied to have their shares made into separate pattis. It is not now disputed that in drawing up the partition proceeding a mistake was made and that the share of the plaintiff was wrongly diminished by six biswansis which were added to the share of Jagan Nath. The partition was confirmed in 1914, and a new Khewat prepared in accordance with it. The pro froma defendants have since sold their share to the defendants appellants, including the six biswansis wrongly added to it. The present suit was brought by the plaintiffs in 1921, after the defendants appellants had obtained mutation, on the allegation that owing to a fraud committed by the patwari and Jagan Nath and others, the fard taqsim had been wrongly drawn up. The plaintiffs had not discovered the mistake till the mutation proceedings were begun.

Both the Courts have found that there was no fraud. The partition proceeding in which the mistake occurred, was signed by all the co-sharers including the present plaintiffs.

The main defence set up was that the suit was barred by section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act. This was repelled by both the Courts below, who found that this section had no application.

In appeal the same plea is taken and the learned Counsel for the appellant relies on several rulings of this Court and in particular Roghubir Singh v. Tulshi Ram, (1) in which it was held that a suit for correction of mistakes made in a partition khewat was barred by the principle of res judicata, as the plaintiff ought to have raised this question in the partition proceeding. One of the main grounds on which the decision was based was that the appellant had had ample opportunity for putting forward any objections, but did not do so.

Section 233 (K) of the Land Revenue Act provides that no person shall institute any suit in the Civil Courts with respect to partition or union of Mahals, except as provided in sections 111 and 112, that is, unless he has already made an objection before the Collector, who has directed him to proceed to the Civil Court, or unless the Collector has decided on such objection himself. It is contended that in the present case the partition proceeding must under section 114 of the Land Revenue Act have been submitted to the Collector for confirmation and that before it was finally confirmed the plaintiffs had the opportunity of discovering the mistake and applying for its correction.

The learned advocate for the respondents contends that the plaintiffs had no reason to suppose that any mistake had been made. Their own application and that of Jagan Nath each contained a correct description of the respective shares. He further relies on two Full Bench rulings of this Court: Shambhu Singh v. Daljit Singh, (2) Kalka Prasad v. Mon Mohan Lal. (3) In both of these the facts were similar but one important detail, which distinguishes the case of Shambhu Singh v. Daljit Singh (2) from the present case, is that it was found that no notice had been given of the partition to the rightful owner of the land. Both these cases were considered later by a Full Bench of this Court in Bijai Misir v. Kali Prasad, (4) In this latter case it was held by a majority of the judges that, where the appellants were parties to a partition and the property in dispute was the subject matter of that very proceeding, the case was a very clear instance to which section 233, Clause K applied and that the suit was barred by reason of the prohibition contained in that section.

It seems to me that the present suit is an attempt to set aside the partition and is barred by section 233 (K). The plaintiffs were evidently guilty of extreme carelessness at the time of partition and the error, which has occurred in the partition proceeding, is due to their lack of attention at the proper time. As has been pointed out by the Board of Revenue in Shibia v. Umrao Singh (5), the partition record is analogous to a decree defining the rights of parties given inter parties. The plaintiffs' case is a hard one, but they have no one but themselves to thank for the position in which they find themselves.

The appeal is allowed with costs in all Courts including in this Court costs on the higher scale.

H. BHIKAJI & CO.—RESPONDENT.

Vendor and purchaser—Contract for purchase of goods—Goods to bear specified numbers—Numbers not descriptive of quality—Vendor forwarding goods of required quality bearing different numbers—Purchaser, whether can refuse acceptance

The defendants contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs some bales of longcloth of their manufacture of a particular quality and bearing certain specified numbers. The plaintiffs forwarded cloth of the required quality and description but bearing different numbers and explained that there was a clerical error in the contract and that the numbers entered in the contract should have been those marked on the goods. The defendants, however, refused acceptance of the bales and terminated the contract. Thereupon the plaintiffs sold the goods at a loss and sued them for recovery of the balance of the amount. It was found that the numbers on the cloth had nothing to do with its quality nor was the cloth sold in the market by its numbers. The fact was that the purchaser of the cloth from the manufacturers could get any numbers put upon it that he pleased, and they indicated to him the width of the pieces in each bale but when the bales passed out of his hands they became merely reference numbers :—

Held that as the numbers put on the goods did not give any warrant or indication of their quality or description, the defendants were not entitled to refuse goods bearing different numbers and were bound to make good to the plaintiffs loss caused by their breach of the contract.

Facts would appear from the following judgment appealed against the Bombay High Court :

Macleod, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Kajiji, J., dismissing the plaintiffs' suit which was filed to recover damages for breach of contract.

On August 1st, 1918, the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiffs' for the purchase of ninety-two bales of the Hinganghat Rekhchand Mills under manufacture.

RAMJIVAN NEVATIA v. BHIKAJI AND CO.

The description of the goods as entered in the contract Exh. A is as follows :—

Bales 15 Pieces No. 732 lbs. 5-14.
Bales 29 Pieces No 736 lbs. 6-11.
Bales 10 Pieces No. 139 lbs. 7-4.
Bales 38 Pieces No. 141 lbs. 7 10.

It was stated in the contract as follows :—

"Delivery thereof is to be taken from August to October 1918 as the same may arrive manufactured. These goods are sold to you on the terms of the contract of the merchant from whom we have purchased. No objection shall be taken if these goods arrive late or early by a month. Rate thereof per lb. is Rs 2-3-0. Shahi (allowed) is at Rs. 1-0-0 per bale."

The broker who negotiated the contract was Ratansey.

From time to time the plaintiffs sent delivery orders under the contract for eleven bales No. 732, twenty-nine bales No. 736 and one bale numbered 741 and the defendant took delivery of these bales and paid for them. On November 9, plaintiffs sent a further delivery order for thirty-four bales but the defendants delayed to take delivery. On November 28, the plaintiffs sent another delivery order for seventeen bales being the balance of the contract goods. On November 29, the defendants wrote that out of the bales tendered for delivery only four bales bearing the No. 732 were contract goods, of the remaining bales ten bore the No. 739 and thirty-seven the No. 741 and they declined to take delivery of those bales. They also asked for a refund of the price of one bale No. 741 taken delivery of. The plaintiffs replied that there was a clerical error in the contract, the numbers 139 and 141 having been entered in mistake for 739 and 741. On December 5, the defendants wrote cancelling the contract in regard to forty-seven bales. The plaintiffs thereafter sold the bales at a loss and they claimed the difference between the contract price and the price realised Rs. 11,746-1-9.

The issues raised at the hearing were :—

(1) Whether the defendants were bound to take delivery of ten bales bearing No. 739 and thirty-seven bales No. 741 referred to in para. 8 of the plaint ?

(2) Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to any and if so what damages ?

The defendants in their written statement counter-claimed for damages owing to the plaintiffs having failed to deliver four bales No. 732, ten bales No. 739 and thirty-seven bales No. 141 and also for the price of the one bale No. 741 which they had paid for through inadvertence.

The counter-claim does not seem to have been pressed and was dismissed. The defendants have not appealed against this dismissal.

The plaintiffs alleged that when the defendants took delivery of one bale numbered 741 under the delivery order of October 22, they made inquiries regarding the number as the contract number was 141 and it was explained to them that there had been a clerical error, that the defendants were satisfied with the explanation and thereafter took delivery of the bale.

The learned Judge has disbelieved the plaintiffs' evidence on this point, but if the defendants attached much importance to numbers it is difficult to think that they would not have at once taken objection to No. 741. I shall consider this hereafter. But the learned Judge said :—

"To my mind there must be some importance attached to these numbers. They are not there merely to signify to the original purchasers from the mill Messrs. Ghya & Co. that 739 has reference only to the width of the long-cloth and that the last two digits have no (sic) reference to the width or length. None of these witnesses could say what they were there for ?...To my mind it is really too absurd if I may be allowed to say so that these numbers have no bearing in the market. They do have some bearing perhaps very little. It is after all really descriptive of the goods and to a certain extent of the quality of the goods because it is admitted that long-cloth of this very mill of the same size in width and length but bearing different numbers could be of the same quality and vice versa and it could also be of different quality. If that is so then Nos. 139 and 141 and any other number would be really descriptive of the goods."

With all due respect I should have thought that the logical conclusion from the above premises would be that the numbers were not descriptive.

It seems to me that the real question at issue is whether the defendants were entitled under the terms of their contract to have each bale and the pieces therein stamped with its particular number according to the numbers mentioned in the contract and to decline to take delivery of any bale not so numbered.

The particulars in the contract are very meagre. The words "92 bales of Hinganghat Mills" do not convey the description of the goods. But the goods are sold by the pound so it may be presumed that the goods were all of the same quality. The fact that for each number a different weight (which must have meant weight per piece) was assigned would show that the pieces in the bales varied in dimensions. To a layman these figures might not convey much information but it must be presumed that they were sufficient to those engaged in the trade to let them know what goods were being dealt in.

The contract stated: "These goods are sold to you on the terms of the contract of the merchant from whom we have purchased." The defendants, therefore, were entitled to have inspection of that contract, and if they did not take inspection, they must be considered as having constructive notice of it.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider the previous contracts relating to these goods. On July 31, the plaintiffs had purchased them from Chhaganlal Bhaidas. The contract is Exh. N. It was effected through the same broker Ratansey. The particulars are the same; only the Nos. 739 and 741 appear instead of 139 and 141. The weight of pieces in bales numbered 732 is stated to be lbs. $3\frac{3}{4}$ 2|16 but this is clearly an error for lbs $5\frac{3}{4}$ 2|16. The contract states "we have sold the said goods on the conditions contained in the statement of account of the merchant from whom we have purchased the said goods." The price was Rs. 2-2-0 per lb. Chhaganlal Bhaidas had bought these goods through the same broker from Mathuradas Dwarkadas on July 26. The contract is Exh. M. The price was Rs. $2\frac{3}{4}$ annas per lb. The goods were sold on the conditions stated in H. Bhikaji's contract.

Mathuradas Dwarkadas had bought these 92 bales together with twenty-nine more bales making in all 121 from the plaintiffs in this case on July 9, through the same broker at Rs. 1-15-3 a lb. The contract is Exh. I. The particulars are more complete. The goods are described as "New Cloth." The number of pieces in each lot of bales is mentioned and after the bale number certain figures appear which admittedly represent the width and length of each piece.

The last clause of the contract is "These goods are sold to you by our purchasing the same from Messrs. Ghya & Co. in accordance with the terms of their contract."

The plaintiffs had bought these goods from Ghya & Co. on June 26 together with forty more bales throgh the same broker at Rs. 1-13-6 per lb. under a contract Exh. H. The particulars are the same except that the goods are described as "Long cloth." Messss. Ghya & Co. had purchased 201 bales from the mills on June 22. under a contract which is Exb. L. The goods are described as "cloth of your Mills." Particulars are given of the goods, number length in yards, the breadth in inches the rate per piece, the number of pieces in each bale. the weight per piece and the rate per pound which was Rs. 1-11-0.

It may be noted in passing that in six weeks the price had been raised on the consumer by eight annas a pound which would be distributed between these various middlemen. The defendants themselves sold the ninety-two bales on August 13, to Gopaldas Virji through the same broker Ratansey and another broker Bhuramal. The error in the numbers was repeated, and it was because Gopaldas refused to take delivery of the bales numbered 739 and 741 when tendered to him in November that the defendants cancelled their contract with the plaintiffs. I do not think, however, we are concerned with Gopaldas' refusal to take delivery from the defendants.

The terms and conditions referred to in Exh.A must refer to the terms relating to rebate, brokerage, and the payment of interest which appear in Exh. N.

Now if the defendants had called for Exh.N they would have at once noticed the discrepancy in the numbers, though the particulars would have given them no further information beyond what was afforded by the particulars in their own contract. But the defendants, as far as I can gather, do not ask us to believe that the numbers 139 and 141 described the quality of the goods, and could not have done so, because it is obvious on the face of the contracts that the goods were all of the same quality whatever number might appear on the bales. Nor for the same reasons can it be suggested that the goods were sold in the bazaar by their numbers. There was evidence that these numbers had acquired a particular reputation in the bazaar so that a purchaser would ask for No. 732 or No. 139 in order to secure cloth of a particular description. As a matter of fact the numbers mentioned in all these contracts had no reputation and contained no information for purchasers in the market. The goods were long cloth, a very general description. To those engaged in the trade the weight per piece and the price would convey all the information which was required. But it was contended that the defendants having purchased bales numbered 139 and 141 if they wanted all the particulars regarding width and length and pieces per bale would have to go to the mills, and therefore the number was an essential part of the contract. But this argument can be of little weight because if they had gone to the Mills they would have ascertained that the bales tendered bearing numbers 739 and 741 contained the cloth they had contracted to buy.

The defendants, therefore, must be thrown back upon the case set up by them in their written statement that they had contracted for bales bearing particular numbers and any bales tendered bearing different numbers were not contract goods.

I will now deal with the evidence given by the witnesses with regard to the numbers placed on these bales. To begin with it is obvious that the plaintiffs' Mehta who wrote out Exh.A wrote 139 and 141 by mistake for 739 and 741. If the Mehta had been available he would have been called, but his present whereabouts could not be traced. However Ratansey was the broker in all the previous contracts and whether he negotiated for their sale by their numbers or not, it cannot be denied that the same goods were being passed from one buyer to another. The plaintiffs were selling these goods and no others, and the particulars for Exh. A must have been taken from Exh. M.

This is the broker's account of the negotiations for the contract Exh. A :

"Negotiations were going on for purchase of these goods with defendants' Munim Sabdevbhai. For these goods manufactured by Hinganghat Mills. Defendants wanted Hinganghat Mill goods of quality mentioned in the contract. I did not write out the contract...I gave insstructions to the plaintiff to send a man to get defendants' signature. Afterwards I asked if it was signed and Nathuram said it was. Defendants did not ask me for any numbers. I gave no numbers to the defendants. Defendants wanted to buy the goods when they were with Mathuradas...I did not mention the numbers to any party. I did not know the numbers by heart."

In cross-examination he said :

"If number is put it indicates same (some?) thing. If contract with one number is sold it depends upon the purchaser to take goods with other Mill number. If the quality is the same he cannot refuse to take goods bearing other number...Whilst I was negotiating for the contract I used to say long cloth of the Mills. Particular description of the goods was to be written in the written contract. If defendants' purchasers were willing to accept goods bearing 739 and 741 then only defendants were bound to accept."

That would seem to be a question of law about which the witness could not express an opinion. In re-examiaation he said :

"Rate was fixed per pound. Nothing more was said about quality except longcloth of Hinganghat Mills.

Sahdev Puranmal, who entered into the contract for the defendants, said in cross-examination :—

"I signed [the contract] without seeing Exh. M. It is not true that Exh. M. was shown to me. Broker showed me the numbers on a piece of paper. I had never purchased goods of Hinganghat Mills. I had not sufficient experience at the time when broker gave me 139. I thought it was longcloth. I did not understand it was of particular quality. Number of pieces would be written in the contract. I did not know how many pieces there would be in a bale No. 139. I was conconcerned with longcloth of Hinganghat Mills. What I was concerned with was that it must bear that number."

To the Court he said :

"When we get delivery orders from plaintiffs we make copies on our forms and send them to our purchaser. If bales are to remain in our godowns then we check."

In plaintiffs' delivery order Exh. B of 21st October 1918, for twelve bales, one bale is numbered 741. Defendants copied this into their delivery order to Gopal Exh. B. Similarly when they received the delivery orders of the 7th and 9th containing bales numbered 732 and 741 they entered the same numbers on their delivery orders.

It may be noted that in Exh C. the yards of each piece are mentioned and the number of pieces in each bale. In Exh. D. only the number of pieces is mentioned.

The evidence of Mr. Dastur, Manager of the Hinganghat Mills, proves how a number comes to be put on a particular bale manufactured for a customer by the Mills. He said

"We give the numbers mentioned in the contract according to the requirements of the merchants. The numbers do not represent any quality."

In cross-examination he said :

"We put on any number that the merchants want us to put on except the numbers which may have been given to another merchant... The lengths and breadths of the goods we manufacture are not constant but are according to the directions given by the merchants."

Makanji Bhaidas, a partner in Ghya & Co., said :

"In June 1918 we agreed to buy cloth from the Hinganghat Mills. I negotiated for the purchase...The figure 7 indicates that goods are manufactured by Rekhchand Mill. 24 in 724 shows that the width is 23, Goods of all these numbers are of the same quality"

To the Court he said :—

"Retail sale is always per piece. Purchasers ask for goods by numbers also, and the name of the Mills."

In cross-examination he said :

"These numbers indicate special quality of goods which we asked them to manufacture... These numbers do not indicate the number of pieces in each bale ..Apart from the Mill numbers there is nothing to indicate the particular quality I have ordered. I say that all goods of the same weight coupled with the numbers are of the same quality. Piece weighing lbs. 5. 14 oz. of the Mill will not be of the same quality as a piece weighing lbs. 5. 14 oz of No. 732"

This answer is unintelligible. In re-examination he said :

"Mal number shows length and width, it would show to me but not to a stranger. If a person came and asked me for longcloth, of 139, and 141 I would not understand anything by it."

Further questions were allowed to be put in cross-examination but the answers clearly show that they were questions irrelevant to the real issues which only tended to confuse the witness.

Now it is clear from the evidence of these two witnesses that the numbers put by the Mills on the bales at the request of the original purchasers would convey no meaning to an outsider. To Ghya & Co they indicated the width of the pieces in each bale. When the bales passed out of their hands they were merely reference numbers. It would have been just the same if the numbers had been 501 and 502. There was no evidence that it was recognised in the market that the last two digits in the number of a bale would indicate the width of each piece.

The defendants rely on certain answers given by the plaintiff's Mehta Hurgovan Jaivanram a boy of 22 years of age who would not know much about the questions which were put to him in cross-examination no doubt in a leading form. He certainly did say "the numbers denote the quality" but this was obviously absurd. He also said :

"If we have contracted to purchase goods of one number we would not accept goods of another number. Number is not of much importance. We attach more importance to the weight of the piece of cloth. If the weight is more the length and width is more. If the weight is the same still it can be of different quality."

In fairness he might have been asked whether if the price was the same per pound the quality would be different.

The evidence of Purshottam Damji. a salesman in the Morarji Gokuldas Mills, is of no assistance. His answers clearly show the confusion which was created throughout the case by the failure to distinguish between numbers which have obtained a reputation in the market and numbers which are placed on goods for reference purposes. The evidence of Bhogilal Devchand is in favour of the plaintiffs.

Narrondas Purshottam, a piece-goods merchant doing a large business, said in answer to Mr. Coltman:

"If I had agreed to purchase long-cloth No. 732 and if 842 were offered to me I would not accept. Number is part of quality of goods coupled with weight. Number is given to indicate quality, to show quality number is given. I know No. 5009, it indicates current quality of goods."

In re-examination he said:

"Quality is ascertained from weight. No. 732 is not current quality of goods."

The same confusion is apparent. Of course if number indicates quality then goods bearing No. 732 cannot be of the same quality as those bearing No. 842 Again if No. 5009 represents certain goods well known by that number they can be bought by that number and goods bearing another number will not be the same. But this answer is significant: "If only number is given I would understand nothing in country goods." That is clear because the mills put any numbers on the goods which the purchaser from them asks them to put on. It is only occasionally that goods with particular number acquire a reputation and thus come to be known by that number.

The only witness called by the defendants was Gopal Virji and no questions were put to him with regard to the numbers.

Now it seems obvious to me that what the defendants thought they were buying when they signed the contract, whether the brokers mentioned the numbers or not, was so many bales of long cloth of the Hinganghat Mills, in four lots the weight per piece in the bales of the respective lots varying, and as the price was uniform that would indicate that in each lot the dimensions of the pieces varied. They would know that bales of country goods always had some sort of number and it may also be conceded that they may have known that in some cases numbers are of importance. But in this particular contract they must have known that the numbers would mean nothing. If they had really wished for further information as to the contents of the bales they would have got it at once from the purchasers. But evidently having bought to sell again they did not trouble to obtain that information. It was only after the panic in the market in October 1918 when Gopal raised the objection about the numbers and refused to take delivery that they were forced to raise the same objection against the plaintiffs.

The defendants then can only succeed on the case set up by them in their written statement that they had contracted to buy bales with a particular number on them and that a tender of bales bearing a different number would not be a good tender under the contract. If the number is an essential part of the contract then it does not matter what it indicates. If A agrees to buy from B a bale of certain goods stipulating it must have a particular number on it then he is entitled to refuse a bale bearing a different number. It is no answer for B to say, in all other respects, the bale is according to the contract. It may be difficult to ascertain the dividing line in the case of contracts like the one in suit. In the contract different numbers are assigned to each lot; at any rate that indicates that the contents of the bales in each lot differ in some respects, though how they differ is not indicated. Ghva & Co. alone held the key to that. If the Mills had put different numbers on the bales to those ordered they might have raised objections. But these considerations would not apply when the goods passed out of their hands.

On the best consideration I can give to the evidence I have come to the conclusion that the defendants attached no importance to the numbers mentioned in the contract. At the most they were entitled to point out to the plaintiffs that the numbers in the delivery order did not correspond with the numbers in the contract which might well indicate that the goods tendered were not contract goods. The onus would thus lie on the plaintiffs to show that the goods tendered were contract goods. This is exactly what the plaintiffs say did happen when the defendants first discovered a wrong number in the delivery order of October 22. The learned Judge says:

"Now it seems to be absolutely inconceivable how the defendants' munim who in his turn had sold these very goods to Gopal Virji and when the contract between the defendants and Gopal Virji had again the same numbers 139 and 141 could agree to accept bales which were still to be manufactured and delivered with Nos. 739 and 741 without consulting Gopal, for it must be remembered that the objections taken by the defendants' munim as regards the one bale bearing No. 741 were taken at the instance of Gopal who was not willing to accept that bale."

That is not borne out by the evidence at all. The plaintiffs' case is that the defendants noticed in the delivery order of October 22 that one bale was numbered 741. Gopal raised no objection to that bale until November 29 when he wrote through his solicitors to the defendants :—

"Our clients have just ascertained on examination that one of the bales of which your clients have given delivery comprises pieces bearing No. 741."

On the same day defendants wrote to the plaintiffs complaining about the numbers for the first time and asking for a refund of the price of the one bale No. 741 contained in the delivery order of October 22. The plaintiffs replied on the 30th setting up the case they sought to prove in Court that the defendants had satisfied themselves about the mistake on October 22. There is nothing inconceivable therefore in the defendants making inquiries and being satisfied on October 22 on reference to the plaintiffs that there was a clerical error in the contract and that they really had got the goods they had contracted to purchase. By the end of November it is common knowledge that prices had fallen by a very large amount and it was quite impossible for Gopal to realise except at a considerable sacrifice. It was not unnatural that he should take advantage of the mistake in the numbers to repudiate his contract with the defendants and defendants were forced to adopt the same course with regard to their contract with the plaintiffs. But we are not concerned in this case with the contract which the defendants entered into for the sale of these ninety-two bales and any consequences which resulted from the defendants continuing the error in that contract would be too remote as between the plaintiffs and the defendants. I do not think the plaintiffs' liability could be extended beyond the obligation to assist the defendants if it were necessary in showing that the goods delivered were the goods contracted for in spite of the difference in the numbers, which was the extent of their liability in the suit contract.

I think, therefore, it was not an essential part of the contract in suit that these bales should bear numbers 139 and 141, that the defendants were entitled to an explanation when bales numbered 739 and 741 were tendered and that the plaintiffs have given a satisfactory explanation by showing that the goods tendered were the goods contracted for.

The appeal must be allowed and the plaintiffs held entitled to damages with regard to the forty-seven bales numbered 739 and 741 on the basis of the prices realised by their sale. The claim with regard to the four bales numbered 732 must be disallowed. The plaintiffs must get their costs in the Court below and in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—Their Lordships have carefully considered this case during the adjournment, and they do not think it necessary to call upon counsel for the respondents. They think it is clear upon the facts that the first purchaser of these goods can get any number put upon them which he pleases, that is to say, that the owner of goods in the hands of a millowner can have this done. When the numbers are attached to the goods in that way, the view their Lordships entertain is correctly expressed in the judgment of the High Court printed at p. 45 of the record : —

"The numbers put by the mills on the bales at the request of the original purchasers would convey no meaning to an outsider. To Ghya and Company they indicated the width of the pieces in each bale. When the bales passed out of their hands, they were merely reference numbers. It would have been just the same if the numbers had been 501 and 502. There was no evidence that it was recognised in the market that the last two digits in the number of a bale would indicate the width of each piece."

In their Lordships' view, the numbers, when so put on, indicate really nothing except the fact that the purchaser has purchased these particular goods. They do not give any warranty or indication of the quality or description.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal fails; that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in execution of a money decree against the 1st defendant attached certain lands and a house and house-site as belonging to his judgment-debtor. That was on the 15th December 1918. Previous to this on 15th May 1916 there was a contract between the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant to sell the same property to the 2nd defendant. After the attachment the 2nd defendant put in a claim-petition which was allowed. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit to set aside the order upon the claim petition, and it has been decreed by the first Court and confirmed in appeal by the District Judge. After the attachment had been made, the 2nd defendant brought a suit for specific performance and got an order for sale from the Court and delivery of possession. The question raised in the second issue is whether the 1st defendant had any subsisting interest in the property which was attached, in other words, whether the attachment can prevail against the 2nd defendant's decree by which he got possession of the land in pursuance of the contract for sale. The Courts below held that the contract for sale did not create any title in the 2nd defendant and following the decision in Kurri Veera Reddi v. Kurri Bapi Reddi (1), they set aside the order on the claim petition and declared that the properties were liable for attachment. The decision in Kurri Veera Reddi v. Kurri Bapi Reddi (1) is based on the last sentence of section 54, Transfer of Property Act.

> "It (a contract for the sale of immoveable property) does not, of itself create any interest in or charge on such property."

These words are capable of being understood in more senses than one. One implication therefrom is that such contracts do not require registration. This decision has recently been overruled by a decision of a Full Bench in Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co., v. Muthurama Reddi (2). The principle governing the present case has been stated in Reba'a Venkata Reddi v. Mangadu Yeilappa Chetty (3), where the learned Judges point out that in English law a Judgment-creditor has no rights as against a transferee of property in pursuance of a contract entered into before the attachment. They say that it does not seem to be sound sense that when a creditor attaches property which is subject to a particular obligation, he should be able to override it. This case has been referred to with approval in Chamiyappa Tharakan v. Rama Iyer (4). It is obvious that the plaintiff could by no manner of means attach a greater interest than what his judgment-debtor possessed at the date of attachment. The plaintiff cannot even lay claim to the rights of a bona fide purchaser without notice of prior obligations attached to the land purchased (Section 3 Transfer of Property Act) as in this case there has been no sale in open market. Section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. The 2nd defendant's title does not rest upon a private transfer but upon a decree of Court based on the contract to sell and is comparable to the case of a decree based upon an award which we held in Kasi Viswanatha Chettiar v. Ramaswami Athitha Nadar (5) which was followed in Narayana Aiyar v. Biyari Bivi (6) should prevail over a purchase under an attachment prior to the award.

The plaintiff in this suit was not a party to the suit for specific performance and it is open to him to impugn that decree as being based on fraud or collusion. His proper course would be to file a suit under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to have the transfer avoided as being intended to defeat or delay creditors. In his plaint he has not put his case quite on that ground. But he has alleged that the contract of sale was invalid as being executed with the evil intention of avoiding the plaintiff's debts, and the first issue in the suit raises the question whether the decree for specific performance was obtained fraudulently. As the Courts below have not decided this issue and have disposed of the question erroneously upon the preliminary point arising out of the second issue, their decrees must be set aside and the suit remanded to the District Munsif's Court for disposal upon the first and other issues as yet undecided. Costs of the second appeal and costs in the Courts below will be costs in the cause.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s, 11—Res judicata between Co-defendants, requisites of—Mortgage—Prior and subsequent mortgagees—Intermediate mortgagee, failure of to appear and contest suit by prior mortgagee, effect of—Priority.

In order that a decision should operate as res judicata between co-defendants two conditions must be fulfilled, first, there must be an active controversy against each other between the co-defendants and secondly, the controversy inter se between the co-defendants should be necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff. (p. 391, col. 2).

Case-law discussed.

Where a prior mortgagee takes a subsequent mortgage in renewal of the prior mortgage and sues on the basis of both of them claiming to be redeemed by an intermediate mortgagee and the latter omits to appear and assert his own priority over the plaintiff. and does not raise any contest in the suit he is not thereby precluded from suing to work out his own rights on foot of his mortgage in a subsequent suit of his own. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amroati, in Civil Appeal No. 170 of 1921, dated the 31st March 1922.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. P. N. Rudru, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalamoorti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I think this second appeal must succeed. The Courts below have entirely misconceived the law applicable to the facts of the case.

One Manaji son of Ramji executed a mortgage dated 20th February 1905 in respect of his property in favour of plaintiff Laxman son of Atmaram Mali. The latter on 19th February 1920 instituted the present suit for foreclosure on foot of that mortgage. He has joined as co-defendants several persons who were interested in the mortgaged property. Amongst such co-defendants is one defendant No. 4 Narayan Baliram Ganorkar.

The aforesaid Manaji and his brother relatives with one Dallaji as their surety had executed a mortgage dated 26th May 1902 in favour of Baliram Ramchandra and Fida Ali of Chandur for Rs. 2000 inclusive of Sawai. The surety paid off the mortgage-debt. An account was subsequently made as between the surety's widow and legal representative Punai, and the mortgagors, and on 2nd March 1907 Rs. 5,775 were found due. For securing this sum a registered mortgage-deed was executed that day by Manaji and some others in the name of Mt. Punai. Gangaram was the son of Punai and was the real owner of the mortgage. They both died and the mortgages dated 26th May 1902 and 2nd March 1907 devolved on Gangaram's two daughters by name Tari and Chandri. They assigned their rights to one Gajanan Pandurang Joshi who instituted suit No. 1 of 1915 in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, on foot of the assignment. The present plaintiff was defendant No. 11 in that suit. He was impleaded in his capacity of a subsequent mortgagee but although the reality of his mortgage was challenged in the plaint still plaintiff claimed a decree against him. The present defendant No. 4 was also a co-defendant No. 8 in that suit. The defendant No. 11, however, did not appear, and allowed the case to proceed ex parte against him. On 7th May 1915 a preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed in that suit by the Additional District Judge giving to the defendants Nos. 8 and 11 along with some other defendants an opportunity to redeem the property mortgaged within six months. That decree was declared as satisfied by the payment made by defendant No. 8 i. e., the present defendant No. 4 and the property was declared as redeemed from the mortgage in favour of Gajanan by passing final decree of satisfaction on 21st February 1919 (Vide Exhibit IV D-I).

It is with the pleas of defendant No. 4 that this appeal is principally concerned. His pleas as embodied in paragraphs 1 and 3 of his written statement dated 1st March 1921 were as under :—

1. That the plaintiff be called upon to make clear the rights of the defendants Nos. 3 to 13 vaguely alleged in para 2 (g) of the plaint.
2. that the plaintiff was joined as a subsequent incrumbrancer in civil Suit No. 1-15 on the file of the Additional District Judge Amraoti. He failed to redeem the mortgage and final decree was passed in favour of the defendant. Thus he cannot set up his mortgage which is lost and he cannot sue on it."

The plaintiff in reply stated that defendant No. 4 was in possession of some of the mortgaged survey numbers under two sale-deeds dated 11th March, 1905 from Manaji. It was admitted that the present plaintiff was impleaded as a party defendant in the prior suit No. 1-15 but plaintiff denied knowledge of the fact whether the final decree for foreclosure was passed in that suit in favour of present defendant No. 4 and that if any was passed it was not legal and binding on the plaintiff. Mr. Jawahirlal Sub-Judge did not examine the defendant No. 4 closely. He should have been asked to state distinctly whether the final decree passed in his favour was one for foreclosure or for satisfaction and what position he proposed to take with reference to it if it was a decree entering full satisfaction merely. He simply framed the preliminary issue, "Is the plaintiff's suit not maintainable? and in a very summary judgment threw out the case on the ground that the present plaintiff not having appeared and set up his mortgage in the former suit or claimed to redeem the mortgage on which that suit was based he was precluded from enforcing his own mortgage. He cited Shri Gopal v. Parthi Singh (1) as an authority in support of his view.

The appeal preferred to the Court of the District Judge was also unsuccessful on the ground that it was the present plaintiff's duty to appear and establish the reality of this mortgage transaction in the former suit and that plaintiff having failed to urge his mortgage then, was barred by the principles of res judicata embodied in explanation 4 of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and that defendant No. 4 who was a co-defendant with the present plaintiff in the former suit was entitled to the benefit of the plea of res-judicata based upon the decision in that suit. The District Judge accordingly dismissed the appeal.

I think both the Judges have taken a mistaken view of the law. It is rightly contended that in deciding this question of res judicata the following principle laid down by Wegram V. C. in Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury must be followed: —"If a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants the Court will try and decide that case and the co-defendants will be barred. But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be barred as between each other by any proceedings which may be necessary to the decree the plaintiff obtained." The embodiment of this rule Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury by West. J in the leading case of Ramachandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadeo (3) has not been regarded as settled law "where an adjudication between defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to plaintiff there must be such an adjudication and in such a case the adjudication will be res judicata between defendants as well as between plaintiff and defendants. But for this effect to arise there must be a conflict of interest amongst the defendants and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants, inter se. Without necessity the judgment will not be res judicata amongst defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have collectively been defeated in resisting a claim made against them as a group." This principle was quoted with approval by Sir Stanley Ismay, J. C., in Moolchand Daulat v. Moolchand Khubchand (4) and has been followed in several decisions of the Indian High Courts. The first requisite then is that there should be active controversy against each other between the parties arrayed on the same side: Per Muttusami Ayyar Venkayya v. Narasamma (5). Secondly the adjudication inter se between the defendants should be necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff per West, J. in the above case and Wigram V.C. in Cottingham's case and Jessel M R. in Venon v. Crawford (6) and Muhammad Ahmad v. Zahur Ahmad (7). There was no conflict of interest even between the plaintiff in the former suit, and the present plaintiff as defendant No. 11 in the former suit, in view of the plaintiff's own willingness to allow defendant No. 11 a right to redeem as a subsequent mortgagee. In fact the plaintiff himself cited the mortgagee Laxman as P W. 3 and proved his interest and accepted the preliminary decree that was passed in his favour on 7th May 1915 which calls upon the present plaintiff among other persons to redeem the mortgage sued upon. Moreover the present defendant No. 4 who was defendant No 8 in the former suit did not urge in that suit that defendant No. 11 should not be allowed to redeem the then plaintiffs' mortgage on the ground that his mortgage was bogus. There was thus no active controversy either between the then plaintiff and the present plaintiff on the one hand or between the then defendants No. 8 and defendant No. 11 inter se; much less was there any adjudication inter se between the said co-defendants. If Narayan Baliram (defendant No. 8) was so very particular about excluding Laxman (defendant No. 11) from the benefits of the decree passed in that suit, he should have taken care to get his name excluded not only from the preliminary decree but also from the final decree of satisfaction passed at his own instance in the case (Ex. IV D-1). The very fact that he allowed his name to stand in the final decree for satisfaction clearly indicates that there was no conflict of interest between them too. Nor was any adjudication as between co-defendants inter se necessary for the purpose of giving the plaintiff the appropriate relief. No issues were framed as between the co-defendants inter se I fail to see how the present plaintiff's omission to assert his right as a subsequent mortgagee in the former suit to redeem the prior mortgage can operate as a bar to his enforcing his rights under his own mortgage as against persons who claim to be either interested in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption particularly when that mortgage has not been foreclosed but redeemed by one co-defendant out of a group of several co-defendants.

As pointed out in Madhorao Ghatate v. Tukaram Bapu (F. A No. 63 of 1922) by a Bench of this Court what we have to see in such cases is "whether in the previous suit" the particular question was directly and substantially in issue between the present plaintiff and the present defendants." Under rule 1 (1) of O, XIV Civil Procedure Code the issue could arise only if a fact was asserted by one party and denied by the other. The failure of the present plaintiff to appear and contest the then plaintiff's right to foreclose the property on foot of his own mortgage must be treated under r. 5 of O. VIII, Civil Procedure Code as an admission of that right. Based upon that admission a decree was passed by the Court directing the present plaintiff to redeem the prior mortgage involved in that suit. There was thus no matter in dispute between the plaintiff in that suit and the present plaintiff, or between the latter and the other co-defendants. No doubt where any contest arises between a puisne mortgagee plaintiff and a prior mortgagee defendant or there is a contest between a mortgagor and a prior mortgagee who are co-defendants, which it is necessary to decide in order to give relief to plaintiff, such contest should be adjudicated upon in the decree framed with reference to the adjudication: c. f. Srinivasa Rao v. Yamunabai Ammal (8). But where the rights of parties to the suit are admitted on all hands and further the person claiming relief himself asks for a relief subject to such admitted right (here the right of a subsequent mortgagee to redeem) there is no contest, and no necessity for any adjudication, much less, for an adjudication defining the rights of the co-defendants inter se, and consequently no bar of res judicata. If the plaintiff in the former suit instead of asking merely for foreclosure of the property on foot of his mortgage, had insisted upon claiming a decree for foreclosure of the property free of the present plaintiff's mortgage on the ground that it was bogus and the present plaintiff had remained absent and omitted to set up his mortgage lien and resist such a claim and the Court had passed a decree directing foreclosure free of the said mortgage then only the present plaintiff might have lost his right to sue on its basis, otherwise not. On this ground all the cases relied on by the lower Courts are distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In Sri Gopal v. Prithi Singh (1), the representatives of the mortgagee under a mortgage of 1876 claimed priority over all the earlier mortgages of 1872 and 1874 on the ground that the money was borrowed to pay off incumbrance created before 1871. They failed in this contention but got a decree entitling them to sell the property free from encumbrances after paying off inter alia the bond of 1871. The representatives of the intermediate mortgages of 1872 and 1874 did not set up the deed of 1874. They subsequently brought a suit on that mortgage and it was held that they had lost their priority by their failure to set it up in the action in which the issue was whether the mortgage of 1876 had priority over the mortgages created between that year and 1871. That was the issue and the representatives of the intermediate mortgagee ought to have set up their claim with respect to the deed of 1874 and not having done so lost their priority. That case does not lay down that where the prior mortgagee plaintiff who takes a subsequent mortgage in renewal of the prior mortgage and sues on the basis of both of them and claims to be redeemed by a defendant who is an intermediate mortgagee, and the latter omits to appear and assert his own priority, if any, over the plaintiff mortgagee, and does not raise any contest in the former suit, is precluded from suing to work out his own rights on foot of his mortgage in a subsequent suit of his own. What is mortgaged with a subsequent mortgagee is only a right to redeem and that right being conceded by the plaintiff prior mortgagee there was absolutely no necessity for the subsequent mortgagee to appear and set up the right which was admitted. In the case of Gopal Lal v. Banarasi Pershad Chowdhury, (9) the plaintiff pleaded that a certain person was a subsequent mortgagee and that he was entitled to sell clear of encumbrances. He obtained a decree and permission that there should be a sale failing redemption. The person whom he had declared as a subsequent mortgagee subsequently set up a prior mortgage and sued upon it. There it was held that the prior mortgagee ought to have set up his mortgage in suit in which it was alleged that he was a subsequent mortgagee and the judgment went on on the ground that the plaintiff claimed to sell the property free from encumbrances and therefore was claiming a right which affected the rights of the prior mortgagee and if the prior mortgagee desired to dispute his right to sell the property free from encumbrances, he was bound to appear to set up his mortgage and resist it. In the present case the plaintiff's claim as laid is one to enforce his own mortgage. The defendant No. 4 has the option to fall back on the prior mortgage which he redeemed by payment or to offer to redeem plaintiff. He has yet to make his choice between the two courses open to him. The property has been saved from foreclosure under the prior mortgage so that nothing has so far appeared to prejudicially affect the rights of the present plaintiff. I do not therefore think that the case of Gopal Lal v. Banarasi Pershad Chowdhry (9), has any application to the facts of the present case.

In Ajudhia Pande v. Inayat-ullah (10), the aforesaid case was distinguished on the ground that the plaintiff himself admitted the prior mortgage of the defendant and offered to redeem it. The prior mortgagee who had thus been impleaded entered no appearance and made no defence as in the present case. It was held that the prior mortgagee in spite of his omission to appear and set up his mortgage in the former suit was not precluded from subsequently bringing a suit for sale on his mortgage. Reliance was placed for this view upon the authority reported in Sreenivasa Rao v. Yamunabai Ammal (8), already cited. In this view of the case I hold that the plaintiff's suit is not barred by res judicata and allowing the appeal remand the case for trial and adjudication on the merits. The appellant will get his costs of this appeal and those of the lower Appellate Court. The costs of the original Court will abide the event.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 146 OF 1919.

Regulation V of 1827, cl. 15 (3)—Construction of document—Mortgage possessory — Special agreement prohibiting sale—Mortgagee deprived of possession—Damdupat, rule of, application of.

In the case of a possessory mortgage governed by Regulation V of 1827, under clause 15 (3) of the Regulation, unless there is a special agreement between the parties, when the bond is entered into, to the effect that the property shall not be brought to sale by the mortgagee, then the mortgagee has a right to institute a suit for the purpose of bringing the property to sale. (p. 395, col. 1.)

Under a possessory mortgage governed by Regulation V of 1827, interest was to be paid on the amount advanced, an account of rents and profits was to be made up after every year, and amount of balance was to be settled by the parties. Even if the mortgagor failed to pass the accounts, he undertook to have the property released after clearing off the total amount of balances struck in each year. It was also argued that if the mortgagor could get the money from any other source for the repayment of the debt, the mortgagee would accept the amount and release the property:—

NILKANTH BALVANT NATU v. VIDYASHANKAR BHARATI

Held, that there was no special agreement between the parties prohibiting a sale of the property under the mortgage.

In the ordinary case of a usufructuary mortgage where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property either in lieu of interest entirely, or on the terms that he must render an account of rents and profits against interest, the rule of Damdupat would apply. But when the terms of the mortgage have been departed from, and the mortgagor has deprived the mortgagee of possession, then the principle of Damdupat can no longer apply as the relationship of the parties has changed. (p. 396, col. 1.)

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to recover by sale or foreclosure Rs. 5,00,001 and interest charged upon certain immoveable properties in Belgaum, Kolhapur, Sawantwadi, Kurundwad and Satara. The suit was filed in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Satara against the mortgagors or their representatives to enforce the alleged rights of the mortgagee. Certain issues were taken up at the trial as preliminary issues, and from the decision of the Subordinate Judge on those issues an appeal was filed to the High Court (being F. A. No. 39 of 1913, the suit being No. 604 of 1910 of the Satara Court). On appeal the issues were decided in favour of the plaintiffs and the suit continued in the Subordinate Judge's Court.

It was contended by the defendants that the mortgaged property was Devasthan and Saranjam, and not liable to be mortgaged. The Judge decided this issue in plaintiffs' favour and the decision on the fourth issue would necessarily follow also in their favour. The eleventh issue was whether the claim for possession of any and which of the mortgaged properties was in time. The learned Judge held that the claim for possession of the properties in the Kolhapur State only was in time. On the twelfth issue he held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sell or to foreclose, and he passed a decree on accounts being taken to the following effect:—

"The defendants or any one of them should pay Rs. 3,31,000-0-8 and plaintiffs' costs in proportion within six months from the date of the decree. In default the plaintiffs were to recover possession of the villages in the Kolhapur State only. The claim as to other villages in suit was rejected. The learned Judge declined to allow any further interest from the date of suit until the date of the decree or the date of realization."

The plaintiffs have appealed. Three points have been argued before us:—

1. Whether the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an order for sale?
2. Whether plaintiffs were not entitled to possession of all the mortgaged properties?
3. Whether the learned Judge's decision on the question of interest was wrong?

The mortgages in this case were entered into between the years 1840 and 1844, and were subject to the provisions of Regulation V of 1827. Clause 15 of the Regulation is as follows:—

First—When a creditor is placed in possession of property by mortgage or otherwise, as security for a debt, his claim over such property shall, in the absence of other special agreement, constitute his sole security for payment of the debt, or such part of it as the said property may have been given in security for, and interest thereon is to be considered as included in the said security.

Second—If the property yield profit, and no stipulation has been made respecting the disposal of the said profit, or payment of interest on the debt, the profit shall be considered as equivalent for the interest.

Third—In the absence of any special agreement, or recognised law or usage to the contrary, either party may at any time, by the institution of a civil suit, cause the property to be applied to the liquidation of the debt, the surplus, if any being restored to the owner.

Now the various bonds which were entered into by the defendants' predecessors were all in the same form as Exh. 38 at p. 13. Interest was to be paid on the amount advanced, the mortgagee was placed in possession, an account of rents and profits was to be made up on the 1st of Ashadh Vad in each year, and the amount of balance was to be settled by the parties. If the mortgagors failed to pass the accounts, they undertook to release the villages after clearing off the total amount of balances which were struck in each year. It was also agreed by the clause which appears at bottom of page 17 that if the mortgagors could get the money from any other source for the repayment of the debt, the mortgagee should accept the amount when it was paid and should release the villages.

It has been contended by the plaintiffs that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiffs were debarred from instituting a civil suit for the purpose of causing the properties to be applied to the liquidation of the debt. We cannot agree with the reasoning of the learned Judge by which he came to that conclusion. We have to consider paragraph 3 of clause 15 of the Regulation V of 1827, and then apply it to the document before us. Unless there is a special agreement between the parties, when the bond is entered into, to the effect that the property shall not be brought to sale by the the mortgagee, then the mortgagee has a right to institute a suit for the purpose of bringing the property to sale. There is no issue referring to documents which have been construed in other cases in order to ascertain whether they contained such special agreements. It seems to have been argued before the learned Judge that it was a relevant question whether the document contained a covenant by the mortgagor to repay the mortgage money. But in my opinion, that could have no bearing on the question whether or not there has been a special agreement that the mortgagee cannot realize his security by sale. The covenant as to repayment is purely personal, and is only relevant on the question whether a suit can be brought, not against the security, but against the mortgagor for the repayment of the money borrowed. In this document I can find no evidence whatever of a special agreement such as is relied upon by the defendant. Nor can it be inferred that the parties agreed that the mortgagee should not sell merely because the mortgagors were entitled to redeem. In my opinion, therefore, the suit for sale was competent and the plaintiffs are entitled to an order for sale of the mortgaged properties in the Kolhapur State.

The plaintiffs are clearly entitled to an order for possession of those properties and they are further entitled to a decree for sale, if default is made in payment of the decretal amount.

With regard to the properties in British territory, it has been argued that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession of those properties, because they were in possession before 1902 of the mortgaged properties in the Kolhapur State, and possession of one was possession of the other. No authority has been cited before us for the proposition that if two separate properties are given over into the possession of a usufructuary mortgagee, and if he loses possession of one of the properties, possession of the other saves limitation with regard to a suit to recover possession of the first property. But in this case we need not decide that point because we think the evidence is clear that these properties in British territory were given back to the mortgagors before 1860, and no steps whatever were taken to recover possession until this suit was filed. That we think raises the presumption that the parties agreed that the security of the properties in British territory should be given up, and that the Kolhapur properties only should be considered as security for the debt.

We have been referred to a document, Exhibit 58 at p. 53, which was a petition of the then mortgagors dated 16th August 1879, appealing against an order of the Political Agent Kolhapur and Southern Maratha Country, referring them to a Civil Court for redress in the matter of the forcible recovery from them by the Jagadguru of Sankeshwar and Kolhapur of certain Inam villages situated in the Kolhapur territory. That petition and the Resolution of Government thereon dealt only with mortaged properties in the Kolhapur State, and that to some extent is evidence that the mortgagees and the mortgagors had come to some arrangement with regard to the properties originally mortgaged in British territory, so that in effect the mortgagees agreed to retain their security only on the properties in the Kolhapur territory.

It has been argued by the defendants that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that it is not proved that the properties were not liable to be mortgaged as being Devasthan or Saranjam properties. But they produced no evidence to support their contention, and there is nothing before us from which it can be shown that the mortgagors between 1840 and 1844 were not competent to alienate or mortgage the suit properties. It was particularly stated in the bond Exhibit 38 that the money was borrowed for the expenses of the Samsthan, and the mortgagors were competent to borrow for such purposes on the security of the Samsthan property. That is the only point argued in the defendants' appeal, with the exception of the question of interest which is common to both appeals.

We do not think the Judge was justified in disallowing all further interest from the date of the suit. It would follow from that decision that the plaintiffs would be debarred thereafter from claiming interest unless they could get into possession of the properties in the Kolhapur State, in which case the terms of the mortgage bonds would revive, and they would have to render account of rents and profits against the interest due. But all sorts of difficulties may arise in that case if the judgment should stand. Considering that we think that the parties agreed that the mortgaged properties in British territory should be surrendered to the mortgagors, and that the mortgagees only remained in possession of the Kolhapur properties until 1902, when they were deprived of possession, it seems to us inequitable that interest should not run on the principal amount due from the date of the suit. It is quite true in the ordinary case of a usufructuary mortgage when a mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property either in lieu of interest entirely, or on the terms that he must render an account of rents and profits against interest, that the rule of Damdupat would apply. But when the terms of the mortgage have been departed from, and the mortgagors have deprived the mortgagees of possession, then it seems to me very clear that that principle can no longer be considered as binding as the relationship of the parties has changed and the mortgagors must pay interest.

We amend the decree by directing that interest must run on the principal amount from the date of suit until realisation, and that amount of interest must be added to the decretal amount, which the defendants must pay within six months from the date these proceedings are returned to the Trial Court. In default the plaintiffs will be entitled to bring the properties in the Kolhapur State to sale. There may be difficulties with regard to the sale of the properties. So we had better leave the direction of the Judge as it stands that the plaintiffs can recover possession of the villages in the Kolhapur State. As a matter of fact it will be far simpler if they can bring the properties to sale at once after the six months expire, if default is made. If instead of bringing the properties to sale, they go into possession, they must, under the terms of the mortgage, render an account of rents and profits against the interest which becomes due.

The plaintiffs do not ask for any order as to the properties in Savantvadi and Kurundvad. They do not ask for possession of those properties as apparently they have been out of possession for a considerable period.

The plaintiffs have been on the whole successful. They will be entitled to add their costs to the mortgage amount. The defendant No. 2's appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Shah, J.—I agree. I desire to add a word with reference to the point relating to the applicability of the rule of Damdupat to the facts of this case. Having regard to the terms of the mortgage bond in this case, I think the application of that rule is excluded according to the Full Bench ruling in Gopal Ramchandra v. Gangaram Anand Shet. (1).

SESHAMMA, WIDOW AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF THE DECEASED MANCHIRAJU NARAYANA RAO alias SATYANARAYANAMOORTHY—APPELLANT

YEERANKI PEDA VENKATA RAO (DEAD) AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXII, rr. 4, 9, O. XXXIV, r. 5—Preliminary mortgage-decree—Judgment-debtor, death of before decree—Legal representative not brought on record--Abatement—Application for final decree—Second application to set aside abatement--Order dismissing first application, appeal against—Abatement set aside—Order, legality of—Jurisdiction—Appeal, second, whether maintainable—Revision.

A preliminary mortgage-decree was passed on 27th November 1918. That morning, before the decree was passed, the judgment-debtor died. The plaintiff came to know of it soon after, but no steps were taken to bring the legal representatives of the deceased on the record till 27th August 1920 when plaintiff filed an application under O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code wherein he set out the fact that the judgment-debtor had died, entered his widow as defendant and asked for a final decree to be passed. The widow contended that the preliminary decree having been passed after the judgment-debtor's death was a nullity and that in the absence of any petition to bring the legal representatives of the deceased on the record the suit had abated. Nearly seven months thereafter, the plaintiff filed another application asking that the delay in bringing the legal representatives of the deceased on the record be excused and that a final decree may be passed. The Court of first instance dismissed both petitions by two separate orders. An appeal was filed only against the order on the first petition and the Appellate Court treating the first application as one to set aside the abatement, excused the delay in filing it, allowed it and directed the suit to be proceeded with. On appeal, Held, (1) that the judgment-debtor having died before the decree the decree was a nullity and no legal representative having been brought on the record within the time prescribed by law, the suit had abated.

(2) that the order of the lower Appellate Court in setting aside the abatement was without jurisdiction, first, because it had before it no prayer to set aside the abatement and no substantial motion under O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code and secondly, because it had no jurisdiction to revise the order on the second application which was not properly before it.

(3) that the order of the lower Appellate Court though technically one under O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code and consequently not appealable under that order, was passed without jurisdiction, and was therefore, appealable, or at least open to Revision on the ground that it was without jurisdiction. (p. 399, col. 2.)

Where it is necessary, in order to do substantial justice, to brush aside technicalities, the Court will not be too scrupulous in enforcing them ; but when there are no merits in favour of the party invoking the aid of the Court and the merits are on the other side, the Court will not go out of its way to clear from the former's path technical obstacles. (p. 399, col. 1.)

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in Appeal No. 78 1922 preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Peddapuram in E. A. No. 2411 of 1920 in O. S. No. 109 of 1918.

Mr. Rama Rao for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. Lakshmama and A. Satyanarayana for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, setting aside an abatement of a suit, the order appealed against being passed under O. XXII, r. 9. In ordinary circumstances, no appeal lies against such an order, but in the circumstances of this case it is contended that the order appealed against was passed without jurisdiction and vitiated by material irregularity.

The plaintiff who is the respondent in this appeal, sued one M. Narayana Rao, in the Court of the District Munsif of Peddapur on a mortgage and on 27th November 1918 obtained a preliminary decree. It since transpired that the judgment-detor died on the morning of 27th November 1918 before the decree was passed. The plaintiff admits that, not long after the decree, he came to know of the fact of the death of the judgment-debtor, but not of the actual date of it and assumed that he had died after the decree and that therefore the decree was valid. He took no steps to bring on the legal representatives until 27th August 1920 when he filed E. A. No. 2411 of 1920 under O. XXXIV, r. 5 wherein while setting out that the judgment-debtor had died and entering his widow (the present appellant) as the defendant in the petition, he asked merely that a final decree be passed. The present appellant in her counter-petition pointed out that the judgment-debtor had died before the preliminary decree was passed, that no petition to bring on the legal representative on record had been put in time, that, therefore, the suit had abated, and that the date of limitation for bringing on the legal representatives had passed. Even after this allegation the plaintiff did nothing until 23rd March 1921 when he put in E. A. No. 911 of 1921 in which he asked that the delay in bringing on the legal representatives be excused, and that a final decree be passed. In his affidavit to that petition, he persisted in saying that the defendant judgment-debtor died after the decree and that the allegation that he died before the decree was not true.

The District Munsif dismissed both the petitions. The Additional Subordinate Judge, on appeal, held that the application, E. A. No. 2411 of 1920, may be treated as one for setting aside the abatement of the suit and that the excuse for the delay in filing such an application is reasonable and he set aside the abatement of the suit and directed the District Munsif to take it on file and proceed with it.

It is not now disputed that the judgment-debtor died before the preliminary decree was passed, that, therefore, the preliminary decree was a nullity, and that no steps to bring on the legal representatives were taken within six months of 27th November 1918 as required by the Limitation Act, then in force. It follows that the suit abated on 26th May 1919. The plaintiff, no doubt, contends that in O. XXII, r. 4 the phrase 'right to sue' does not apply after a preliminary decree is passed and that, therefore, there is no limitation to the period within which he was bound to apply to have the legal representative brought on ; but, apart from the fact that the law is at present against him on this point see Dakaju Subbarayudu v. Musti Ramadasu (1) there is the obvious rejoinder that there was, in fact, no valid preliminary decree and, therefore, the suit has not even reached the stage of a preliminary decree. Clearly then the suit abated on 26th May 1919.

The first point to be noted is that, though the plaintiff has never asked that the abatement be set aside, the lower Court, nevertheless, chose to treat his E. A. No. 2411 of 1920 as a prayer for that relief. That E. A., as already pointed out, was not put in under O. XXII at all but under O. XXXIV. Not only that ; when the present appellants' rejoinder to it pointed out that the suit had abated, the plaintiff evidently without making any enquiry chose to take the standpoint that the suit had not abated and maintained that standpoint in his second petition E. A. No. 911 and never even then asked for the abatement to be set aside. It is true that E. A. No. 911 purports to have been put in, inter alia, under O. XXII, rr. 4 and 9, but even then he did not pray for the abatement being set aside, nor does the lower Appellate Court make any reference to that E. A. in the body of its order. Had it been pleaded before it that E. A. No. 911 impliedly contained a prayer for the abatement being set aside, we cannot see why he should have thought it necessary to fall back on E. A. No. 2411 of 1920 in order to discover such an implied prayer for that relief, even in his grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff styles E. A. No. 911 merely as a petition to excuse the delay in bringing the legal representative on the record. We must hold that technically there was not before the District Munsif of the lower Appellate Court any prayer under O. XXII, r. 9 to set aside the abatement, and, therefore, the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to set it aside.

There is a further technical difficulty in the plaintiff's way. E. A. No. 911 was dismissed by the District Munsif under a separate order, and no copy of that order seems to have been put in in the lower appellate Court and no petition asking to excuse the omission to file it has been filed. There was, therefore, no proper appeal against that order filed in the lower Appellate Court. This may be the reason why the lower Appllate Court ignores E. A. No. 911 altogether in its judgment. Here also, we must hold that the lower Appellate Court had not before it any legal appeal against the order in E. A. No. 911 and had therefore no jurisdiction to set that order aside. Technically it remains in force and is a legal bar to the present appellant being brought on record as the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor.

Now, when it is necessary in order to do substantial justice to brush aside technicalities, the Court will not be too scrupulous in enforcing them; but when, as we find in this case, there are no merits in the plaintiff's favour and the merits are on the appellants' side, the Court will not go out of its way to clear from the plaintiff's path technical obstacles. As already pointed out, although the plaintiff knew of the death of the judgment-debtor, he did not make any enquiry as to when it had occurred or make any attempt to have the legal representative brought on record within the legal period, six months. He did not even in E. A. No. 2411 ask the legal representative to be brought on record and he did not do so until 23rd March 1921, nearly two years after the last day for bringing on the legal representative, and even though it had been pointed out to him on 4th December 1920 by the appellant's counter that the suit had abated, he omitted or refused to make any enquiry, categorically said that that allegation was not true, and refused to believe that there had been any abatement, and that there should be a petition to set it aside, so that even now up to date there is no petition to set aside the abatement. The lower Appellate Court's reasons for indulging the plaintiff are based wholly on unsupported surmises; that the plaintiff's pleader might have been ignorant of the law or that the plaintiff had this or that mistaken idea in his head. He announces a general plenary indulgence to parties to take their own time for applyiug for a final decree and that the "usual procrastination" of plaintiffs is a good ground for granting any indulgence to such a dilatory, negligent and mendacious party and we are not prepared to override the technical difficulties in the plaintiff's way.

We hold therefore that the lower Appellate Court's order is without jurisdiction, first because it had before it no prayer to set aside the abatement and no substantial motion under O. XXII, r. 9, and secondly because that it had no jurisdiction to revise the order on E. A. No. 911 which was not properly before it. It follows that his order, though technically one under O. XXII, r. 9 and technically not appealable under that order, was passed without jurisdiction, and is therefore appealable or at least open to revision on the ground that it was without jurisdiction. We therefore set it aside and restore that of the District Munsif with costs of the appellant throughout.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1897), s. 42, proviso—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s 167—Hindu Law—Joint family—Lease of agricultural land granted by father—Suit by son to challenge terms of lease—Ejectment—Declaration, suit for, whether maintainable—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

Plaintiff, a Hindu son, brought a suit for a declaration that certain terms in a lease of agricultural land of joint family property granted by his deceased father were not binding upon him. It was objected that as the plaintiff was entitled to sue for ejectment, a mere suit for a declaration was not competent. (p. 401, col. 1.)

Held, that as a decree for ejectment of a tenant of agricultural land could not be passed by a Civil Court, a suit for a declaration was maintainable:

JUDGMENT.—This is an unfortunate case, on the facts found. The plaintiff was the minor son of one Gitam Singh, During his minority his father granted a perpetual lease of certain agricultural land on terms highly favourable to the lessee and unfavourable to himself. It seems to have been also found by two Courts that undue influence was used by two of the defendants in obtaining this lease from the plaintiff's father. After the death of his father the plaintiff, acting through his next friend, endeavoured to obtain from the Revenue Court the ejectment of the defendants, admitting them to be his tenants but claiming that they had no higher right than those of tenants at will. When this lease was set up the attempt at ejectment in the Revenue Court failed. The plaintiff then brought the present suit asking for a declaration that the lease is not binding upon him, either on the ground that it was obtained by undue influence exercised upon his father, or, even if that plea should fail, on the ground that it amounted under the circumstances to an alienation of joint ancestral family property in the hands of the plaintiff's father, which the latter was not competent by law to make. Two Courts found in favour of the plaintiff on all points and granted him the declaration prayed for.

There was a second appeal to this Court and in this appeal the first two points taken related to the question whether the land covered by the lease was joint ancestral property and whether there had been a clear finding on the question of undue influence. On the first point the learned Judge of this Court held that there was a finding of fact in favour of the plaintiff. At any rate, the learned Judge found definitely that the property in dispute was ancestral property, belonging jointly to the plaintiff and to his father. On the second point the learned Judge of this Court held that the finding of the lower Appellate Court, to the effect that the terms of the lease were clearly prejudicial to the plaintiff's interests was sufficient in itself to make the contract of lease voidable at the plaintiff's instance.

There was, however, taken in this Court a further point which had been overruled in the two Courts below. This was based on the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act; that is to say, it was contended that the plaintiff ought in this present suit to have claimed the ejectment of the defendants and actual possession over the disputed land. The two Courts below had discussed this point, but had come to the conclusion that there had certainly been an agricultural tenancy in favour of the defendants and the latter could only be ejected by a proceeding in the Revenue Courts, and that consequently the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act had no application inasmuch as the plaintiff could not have sought relief by way of ejectment from the Civil Court in which this suit was instituted. On this ground alone the learned Judge of this Court reversed the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The question is one which comes up from time to time in one form or another and is always likely to give some little trouble. The real difficulty to our minds is whether the Revenue Court, that is to say, the Court of the Assistant Collector, was not really competent to have adjudicated upon the entire question raised by the pleadings before it whether it could not have tried out the plain issue whether the defendants were mere tenants at will in respect of this land, or whether they were holding under a covenant of perpetual lease, valid and enforceable against the plaintiff. It seems, however, to have been conceded, in the course of the abortive proceedings attempted by the plaintiff in the Revenue Court, that the said Court would not eject the defendants unless and until the question of the validity of this lease had been adjudicated upon by a competent tribunal that is to say, by suit in the Civil Court. It seems to us, therefore, whether that decision was right or wrong, it must be treated as a decision inter partes, and one which neither party is now entitled to challenge in argument. If it be once assumed that the assistant Collector could not have ejected the defendants, then in our opinion this suit was clearly maintainable in the form in which it was brought. The Civil Court could not have undertaken to eject the defendants from this agricultural holding. Any such decree by an Assistant Collector would have offended against the clear provisions of section 167 of the Tenancy Act. The learned Judge of this Court seems to have assumed that on the facts set up by the plaintiff himself the Civil Court could, if it found those facts proved, have treated the defendants as mere trespassers. This, however, is not a correct statement of the plaintiff's position. He admitted that there had been a letting of this land by his father to the defendants. His father was perfectly competent to let even joint ancestral land for a reasonable period and on reasonable terms. What the plaintiff complained of was that there had been what amounted in effect to an alienation of joint ancestral property, which his father was not competent to make, to the prejudice of the plaintiff's interest. It was those terms in the covenant of lease under which the defendants claimed to be entitled to hold, (a) in perpetuity and (b) at a low rate of rent, which the plaintiff was assailing. In our opinion relief by way of declaration could and ought to have been granted in this case. (The question whether the suit as brought did not offend against the provisions of section 167 of the Tenancy Act was never raised in the Trial Court, and could not be raised at any subsequent stage.)

We set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the lower Appellate Court with costs of both hearings in this Court to the plaintiff, including fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—In this petition the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul has found that the ballot papers of a Municipal election held in Palni Municipality are invalid und " Rule 17 (1) of the Election Rules. The Polling Officer, when giving out the ballot papers to the voters, put not only the serial number upon the back of them but also the voter's own number on the electoral roll. Consequently, any one seeing this number on a voting paper could, by a reference to the electoral roll which is available to everybody, identify the particular voter; and it has been held in Woodwards v. Sarsons (1) in an almost identical case, that the ballot papers were invalid; but in that case the electoral numbers were placed not upon the back, but upon the face of the ballot paper. It is now argued that this makes a great deal of difference, because the back and the front of the paper cannot be seen at the same time. In Madras there is no rule like the English rule enjoining on the Returning Officer the necessity of keeping the ballot papers face upwards as far as possible, and it is not suggested that the back of the ballot papers would not be visible when taken out of the box. Rule 17 (1) merely says that the paper is invalidated by any mark put upon it by which the voter may be afterwards identified. Considering the possibility and even the probability of the back of the voting paper being visible to the candidate or his agent, the fact that the electoral number is on the paper would afford a ready means of identification, and it is I think such a mark as is contemplated in r. 17 (1). No doubt, at the present election these numbers were not particularly noticed at the time of the election and, as a matter of fact the voters were not identified thereby, but the Rule does not require that the identification shall be made but merely that there is a possibility of such identification by reason of the mark. In fact, in the case already referred to Woodward v. Sarsons (1) the numbers had been identified ; but as they could have been seen by the persons present at the counting of the ballot papers, it was held that the rule, which is similar in England to that in Madras, had been violated and the votes were invalid. It was argued for the petitioner that the decision in Woodward v. Sarsons (1) cannot be applied to India, because under r. 17 (1) the mark by which identification may be had must be placed on the voting paper by the voter himself. Apparently the first part of the Rule does apply to marks put by the voter, but there is nothing in the later part to show that it is the voter himself who must put the mark by which he may be identified ; and in the absence of words restricting the meaning of the rule, I see no reason why the view held in Woodward v. Sarsons (1) with reference to a similar rule should not equally apply to r. 17 (1). There is no restriction in the words of the rule and, consequently, no restriction could be read into it without adequate reason. It follows, therefore, that these votes are invalid under r. 17 (1) : and inasmuch as all the votes cast at the election are invalid, no proper election has been held and the petitioner has not been properly elected.

"It is then argued for the petitioner that under section 9 (1) of the Madras Municipalities Act V of 1920, the petitioner who is the retiring councillor must be deemed to have been re-elected. That section reads as follows :—

> "If for any cause no councillor is elected at an ordinary election held under the previous section, the retiring councillor shall, if willing to serve, be deemed to have been re-elected."

The argument is that, as all the votes cast are invalid, there has been no election of a councillor and that, consequently, the provisions of section 9 (1) apply. On the other hand, it is contended for the respondent that this section is only applicable to cases in which an election is held but no candidates are nominated for election or no voters vote for any of the candidates. The petitioner's contention has the support of the case. In the matter of the Specific Relief Act and In the matters of Sarafally Mamooji (2) where Macleod, J. read a similar section in the Bombay Municipal Act as being applicable in the case of an invalid election. The point is not at all discussed in Macleod, J.'s judgment and it does not appear whether there are rules framed in Bombay similar to those framed in Madras for the decision of disputes as to the validity of an election. From the Madras rules framed for this purpose it is quite clear that section 9 (1) is not meant to apply to cases where an election has been held and is subsequently declared void, for r. 12 states that the Judge, on declaring an election void, must order a fresh election. It is suggested that the first portion of this rule declaring any other party to the petition to be duly elected applies to the case of the retiring councillor who would generally be made a party. It does not follow, however, that a retiring councillor would necessarily be a party and I do not think that it is the intention of this Rule. If the section applied to all cases of invalid election, there is no reason why it should not say so in terms but it purports to apply only to the case where no councillor is elected. When an election has been duly held and votes have been cast and a councillor has been declared duly elected, can it be said, when the election is declared void, that no Councillor has been elected ? I think not, for the Councillor undoubtedly was elected and would remain in office as a Councillor provided that no petition objecting to such election was put in. In this view, section 9 (1) is not applicable to the present case and consequently, a fresh election must be held and this petition is dismissed with costs (two sets).

Odgers, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Arbitration—Reference, construction of—Error patent on face of award, what amounts to—Award set aside on basis of alleged error patent on face of award—Revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

A reference in respect of disputes "concerning the acceptance of a shipment and payment of the same" is not vague and is a sufficient authority for the arbitrators to decide the question of breach of the contract and payment of damages (p. 405, col. 1).

In finding out whether there is an error patent on the face of an award courts are not to investigate beyond the award of the arbitrators and documents actually incorporated therein.

Champsey Bhara v. Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co Ltd., (1923) II Indian Appeals, 324, overruling I.L.R. 44 Bom. 780, followed

Where from an award itself or any necessary papers attached to it, it appears that the arbitrators have awarded payment of damages to a party who committed breach of a contract, there is an error patent on the face of the award, the arbitrators are guilty of a technical misconduct and the award should be set aside. (p. 404, col. 1).

Where an award is ordered to be taken off the file on the ground of there being an error patent on the face of the award, whereas there is no such error to be found on the face of the award the Court assumes jurisdiction which, as a matter of law, it does not possess, to interfere with the findings of the arbitrators and such an order is liable to be set aside in revision. (p. 403, col. 1).

Application to revise the order of the Additional Judicial Commissioner (Mr. A. H. S. Aston), dated the 22nd March 1922, in J. Mis. 469 of 1921, directing an award to be taken off the file (vide 76 I. C. 261).

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Yusifali Mahomedali contracted to purchase certain American galvanised iron pipes from Ramjibhoy and he signed the usual indent form with the usual arbitration clause. Disputes arose in connection with this consignment, Yusifali, refusing to take it up, and the matters were submitted to arbitration. After certain difficulties the arbitrators came to an award directing Yousifali to pay to Ramjibhoy Rs. 1305—6—0 with interest. This award was duly filed in this Court, whereon Yousifali applied to have the award taken off the file on the grounds given at page 8 of the paperbook. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner after considering the grounds submitted by the respondent No. 2 held in favour of the award except on one point. He held that there was a patent error in law in deciding a certain question which arose under this reference. He, therefore, directed the award to be taken off the file.

Against that order of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner respondent No. 1 has applied here in revision and as a preliminary objection to his petition it is urged by respondent No. 2 that we must hold that the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was perfectly within his jurisdiction in directing the award to be taken off the file and that we have no power to interfere.

This may quite well be the case in many matters arising out of arbitration. But we do not think it is the case where a judge disposing of an application to have the award taken off the file assumes a jurisdiction which, as a matter of law he does not possess to interfere with the findings of an arbitrator. In such a case, it is difficult to say that a judge has not exceeded his jurisdiction and that he should not be controlled.

The question, therefore, is whether, the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has so exceeded his jurisdiction. He has found that the arbitrators have decided incorrectly because he is of the opinion that the breach of the contract was committed not by respondent No. 2 but by respondent No. 1 in as much as some condition in respect of the date of shipment was not complied with by the respondent No. 1. Thus he finds that although respondent No. 1 actually committed the breach yet the arbitrators have penalised respondent No. 2 and have thus acted contrary to plain justice. No doubt if it had clearly appeared by the award itself or any necessary papers attached to the award that the arbitrators having found that respondent No. 1 had committed the breach nevertheless proceeded to inflict damages to be paid by respondent No. 2 that will be clearly a gross error on the part of the arbitrators amounting to a technical misconduct thus authorizing the judge to take the award off the file.

The learned Judge in acting as he did, followed an excellent authority. He had before him the case of Jivrai Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd., v. Chamsey Bhara (1). in which the Bombay High Court had held that where it was pleaded that the arbitrators had misconducted themselves in the way described, it is competent and even indeed the duty of the Court to consider the whole proceedings before the arbitrators and if it found that the arbitrators had so misconducted themselves it was the duty of the Court to take the award off the file. That decision was followed in several Bench judgments of this Court.

But we are now certain that the law laid down in Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd v. Chamsey Bhara (1) was erroneous because that judgment has been reversed by the Privy Council Champsey Bhara & Co. Ltd. v. The Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd. (2) and it appears from the judgment of the Privy Council in that case that the Courts are not to investigate beyond the award of the arbitrators and documents actually incorporated therein and thus where there is no error so patent on the face of the award it is not open to the Court to go into the proceedings of the arbitrator. Now, in the present case all that the arbitrators were asked to do was to decide the liability of the party in respect of the shipment of American galvanised iron pipes, on this very point namely the breach or otherwise of the conditions of the shipment and all they find is that Yusifali is bound to pay Rs. 1,305-6-0. There are no materials whatsoever, on the award for saying that the arbitrators have in any way found incorrectly. Since there is no error of law patent on the face of the award presumably they applied their minds to the proceedings before them and came whether incorrectly or not to the conclusion that they did. It is clear therefore, that had the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner had the benefit of the Privy Council's judgment referred to which was not published in India when he passed the order he did, he would not have assumed what is to all intents and purposes the position of a judge sitting in appeal on the arbitrators' finding. We therefore think that this part of the order of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner is erroneous.

The order taking off the award from the file was attempted to be supported on various other grounds, which need not be considered at great length. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has fully dealt with those points. One point was whether the arbitrators who pronounced the award were legally authorized to proceed and after hearing the arguments advanced before us we are agreed with the conclusion of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner and find that his finding in that respect is correct.

A further point taken before us was not taken before the Learned Additoinal Judicial Commissioner and that was that the reference to arbitration is not in proper, form. The reference is not perhaps very carrefully drafted but it is quite wide enough to cover the question of damages due to the breach of the contract. The effective clause of the reference recites the disputes between the parties "concerning the acceptance of the shipment of galvanised pipes and payment of the same.

Ramjibhoy and Co. saying that the notice of the refusal of the shipment ought to have been given within three days, after the receipt of the arrival notice, failing which the shipment was binding on the other party, on the other hand Yousifali contending that they could not accept the same". That seems to us to be quite a sufficient authority for the arbitrators to come to the decision that they have and to order payment of damages and a sufficient indication as to the actual disputes between the parties. We cannot, therefore, find on the ground of vagueness of the reference that the award is in any way unjustified and should be rejected.

We think that the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was in error in directing the award to be taken off the file and we set aside his order taking off the award from the file and direct that the award should remain filed with costs.

Mr. R. B. V. R. Pandit, for the Appellant.
Mr, W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that one Beharilal gifted his property to his nephews; one condition in the gift deed was that they should maintain the present plaintiff who was his permanent mistress. The plaintiff brought this suit for arrears of maintenance from the present defendant, alleging that he had not paid his quota of her maintenance.

The first Court, the Munsiff of Burhanpur, awarded the plaintiff's claim, but the District Judge of Nimar, on appeal, dismissed the suit holding that this deed of gift with the condition embodied in it is a contract between Beharilal and the defendant, to which the plaintiff was no party, and that the plaintiff has no cause of action. He relied on Seth Ramlal v. Seth Narsinghdass (1) in which it was held that a stranger to the consideration cannot enforce performance of a contract by an action thereon in his own name although he be the party avowedly intended to be benefitted thereby.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the deed of gift constitutes a trust, and reference is made to section 6 of the Indian Trusts Act II of 1882. It is argued for the respondent that in view of illustration (e) to that section, which is very similar to the present case, the present deed of gift is a gift with a condition and not a trust. I may here state that the question of a right of the plaintiff to maintenance from the estate of Beharilal as a permanent mistress under Hindu Law does not arise in the present case, because her case was not founded on that right; there were no pleadings on the subject, no issues and no evidence, the case being based on the deed of gift itself.

The learned Counsel on either side have not been able to point out any rulings on the subject, but it seems to me that the question of contract does not arise. The case quoted Seth Ramlal v. Seth Narsingdass (1) supra states that to entitle a third party not named as a partner to the contract to sue either of the contracting parties, that third party must possess an actual beneficial right which places him in the position of cestui que trust under that contract.

" Another class of implied liens or trusts arises where property is conveyed inter vivos, or is bequeathed or devised by last Will and testament, subject to a charge for the payment of debts, or to other charges in favour of third persons. In such cases, although the charge is treated, as between the immediate parties to the original instrument, as an express trust in the property, which may be enforced by such parties or their proper representatives; yet, as between the trustee and cestui que trust, who are to take the benefits of the instrument, it constitutes an implied or constructive trust only ; a trust, raised by Courts of equity in their favour, as an interest in rem, capable of being enforced by them directly by a suit brought in their own names and right. Thus, for example, if a devise is made of real estate, charged with the payment of debts generally, it may be enforced by any one or more creditors against the devisee, although there is no privity of contract between him and them (King v. Dennison (2)), and (In re West George v. Grose (3)). There is, also, a distinction between a devise of an estate in trust to pay debts and other charges, and a devise of an estate charged with, or subject to, debts or other charges. In the latter case, the devise is construed to convey the whole beneficial interest to the devisee, subject only to the payment of the debts, or other charges."

There would therefore appear to be an implied trust in the present case. The terms of the deed of gift are clear. Paragraph 9 begins by saying : "The following conditions shall govern the deed of gift," and clause (c) provides for the plaintiff's maintenance.

I am of opinion, that the view of the first Court that the defendant having accepted the gift subject to the conditions in the gift deed is bound by those conditions is correct. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is therefore set aside and the appeal remanded for decision on the point of limitation which has not been decided by the District Judge. Costs in 2nd appeal on respondent. Costs in the lower Courts to abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the income derivable from the village Khasrai Bhajanpura and the question for consideration is whether the right to receive an eight annas share of the said village belongs to the temple of Thakur Shri Gat Ashram Narainji at Muttra.

The temple in question was constructed by Pt. Pran Nath Shastri, a learned divine, a long time ago. He died in 1830. The income derived from the temple and the endowments appertaining thereto used to be applied after his death to the maintenance of religious services at the temple and the support of the Acharis or heirs of the founder. For a considerable time the endowed property was under the management of Raja Pitambar Singh, the then proprietor of the Ava estate. Some time in 1850 disputes appear to have arisen between the heirs of the deceased founder and a reference was made to arbitration which resulted in an award by which the proportion of the income to be applied to the maintenance of religious services in the temple and to be distributed among the heirs of the deceased founder was determined. In pursuance of that award an agreement was executed by the heirs of the deceased founder on the 26th of March 1850 which provided that an 8 anna share of the income of the entire property shall be applied towards the expenses connected with the temple and the support of Vaishnawas Acharis and servants of the temple and the payment of certain allowance to two other persons named therein, and the balance was to be distributed among the heirs of the deceased founder. By a subsequent agreement executed on the 2nd November 1874 the heirs agreed that a half of the total income which was then estimated to amount to Rs. 3,200 per annum, was to be applied to the maintenance of worship and other services at the temple and the other half was to be appropriated by the heirs personally. The proportion in which each of the heirs was to contribute to the expenses of the worship and services at the temple was also specified. The agreement further provided that none of the heirs shall have any power to transfer the half of the property and income aforesaid which belonged to the Thakurji, but they would have power to transfer their share of the remaining half of the property and income.

The agreement of the 26th of March 1850 expressly mentioned the village Khasai Bhajanpura as a part of the property, the income of which was to be dealt with in the manner therein specified. There was no express reference to that village in the agreement of the 22nd November 1874 but a reference was made therein to the award of the 26th March 1850 and it was provided that all the conditions entered therein shall be maintained and be enforceable among the heirs of the deceased founder.

The plaintiff claims to be one of the trustees of the temple in question. The defendants are the other trustees or heirs of the deceased founder. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the village Khasrai Bhajanpura was under the management of the Raja of Ava and that the temple was entitled to the income thereof to the extent of an eight anna share. The complaint was that the defendant No. 1 had received a larger portion of that income than he was entitled to, thereby depriving the temple of that portion which he had received in excess of his share. In the plaint a reference was made to a previous suit said to have been filed by the plaintiff through Mt. Sundar Kuar against the present defendants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra for the rendition of accounts in respect of the income of the said property from the 5th November 1902 till the 15th November 1906 and it was mentioned that that suit had been decreed on the 8th December 1909, and the appeal filed by the defendants against that decree had been dismissed in 1910. Those facts were admitted by the principal contesting defendant—respondent Jeshth Madho Achari. He contested the suit mainly on the ground that whatever was paid to him was paid voluntarily by the Raja of Ava and that the temple was not entitled to recover the same from him. The Court below accepted his contention and dismissed the claim.

In doing so it appears to have entirely disregarded the decision in the previous suits in which the nature of the title held by the plaintiff in the villages in question and the right to receive the income thereof was in issue. One of the suits was brought by Mt. Sunder Kuar the widow of Parshadi Lal one of the heirs of the deceased founder in her capacity as one of the trustees of the temple aforesaid against the present defendants—respondents on the 14th November 1904 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra for a declaration that the property in dispute including the village now in question belonged to the said temple and was a public and charitable endowment, that the idol was the absolute owner of the said property, and that the parties to the suit had no personal interest therein. That suit was decreed after a prolonged contest by the Subordinate Judge of Agra and his decree was upheld by this Court on the 28th October 1909. The finding of this Court in that suit was that the whole property in question appertained to the temple and that its income was intended for the expenses of the temple and the support of the Acharis and Vaishnawas, worshipping there. Subsequently there was another suit instituted by Mt. Sundar Kuar against the present defendant-respondent Jaishth Madho Achari for the rendition of accounts. Mt. Sundar Kuar sued in her capacity as one of the trustees of the temple Jaishth Madho Achari and other trustees were impleaded as defendants. Jaishth Madho Achari contested that suit on various grounds amongst others that the temple was only entitled to one-fourth of the income of the village Khasrai Bhajanpura. One of the issues framed by the learned Subordinate Judge was whether one-half of the income of the village Khasrai Bhajanpura formed the share of Thakurji and should go to it. His finding on that issue was that the Thakurji was entitled to one half of the income and that the defendant dishonestly wanted to reduce the share of Thakurji to one-fourth and to appropriate the remaining one-fourth to himself. He pointed out that the Ava estate collected the rent of the village and paid the income to the mutawallis of the temple. That decision was upheld on appeal, the finding being that the wakf was a public one and the temple was entitled to receive half of the income of the said village from the Raja of Ava.

It is not open to the defendant Jaishth Madho Achari to go behind those findings. In the previous suit all the trustees were impleaded and the effect of the decree of this Court was that the entire property then in question including the village now in dispute was declared to be a public endowment for religious and charitable purposes connected with the temple and in favour of the idol. In the latter suit the effect of the decree was that one-half of the income of the village now in question was declared to be the share of property of the idol and the defendant Jaishth Madho Achari was found to have no right to receive any portion of the same from the Raja of Ava or to appropriate it to his own use. A decree obtained by one of the trustees on behalf of the trust against the other trustees either for a declaration that the property in dispute was trust property or for rendition of accounts in a suit brought in the interests of the trust or for the protection of the trust property is binding as much on the trustees who are parties to the suit as on all persons interested in the trust; for as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (1) the Shebaits of a trust form a continuing representation of the idol's property. Each of the above suits was instituted by Mt. Sundar Kuar not in her private right but on behalf of the trust and as such the decision arrived at in those suits is conclusive between the parties thereto within the meaning of Explanation VI of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is urged on behalf of the defendants-respondents that the payment which is sought to be challenged was made to him voluntarily by the Raja of Ava and that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim a refund. But the payment formed part of the distribution of the entire income derived from the villages in question. The Raja kept no part of the income himself. He distributed the income in a particular manner between the persons who were considered by him to be entitled to receive the same. The dispute is virtually one between the different persons claiming a title to it and if one party has received a larger portion than he was entitled to and has thereby deprived another party of that which he ought to have received, the latter is entitled to claim from the other to the extent to which he was entitled. The Raja did not purport to make any payment to the defendant-respondent, Jaishth Madho Acharia out of any personal fund of his own. The income of the village in question was ear-marked for a specific purpose, namely, for the maintenance of the services connected with the temple and distribution of the income among the heirs in the manner settled in the previous case. The defendant-respondent Jaishth Madho Acharia was not entitled to receive payment in excess of what he was declared entitled to in the previous proceeding and the mere fact that for some years the payment had not been made precisely in the manner in which they ought to have been made would not destroy or prejudice the right of the plaintiff to receive it in the manner he was entitled to receive. The proceedings of the Court of Wards filed show that there was some dispute between the heirs of the deceased founder as to the manner in which the income was to be distributed by the Ava estate. The Court of Wards proposed to act only as a stake-holder and they did not undertake any liability for anything beyond what was payable by them on account of the said villages. That dispute having been settled by a decree of the proper Court the rights of the parties should now be adjusted in accordance with that decision. That appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit remanded to the Court below with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to proceed with its disposal in the manner required by law. Costs of this appeal including fees in this Court on the higher scale will abide the result.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) Sch. II, Arts. 19, 28, applicability of—Suit to recover ornaments from stakeholder, nature of—Declaration, suit for—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court

Article 28 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act contemplates a suit between rival claimants to the estate of a deceased person, when the relief claimed is a share of the estate and not only an item of the estate as against a third party. (p. 410, col. 2.)

Chedi v. Gulabo, 2 A. L J. 388 ; A. W. N. (1905) 134; 27 A. 622; Tika Shalim v. Chirkat Shahu, 27 Ind. Cas. 778 ; 19 C. W. N. 614, followed.

A suit to recover certain ornaments and jewellery from a stakeholder to whom they have been made over for safe custody and who is willing to hand them over to the true owner, to which other persons claiming the ornaments etc. are also impleaded as parties, is in its essence a suit for a declaration and falls within the purview of Article 19 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is, therefore, excluded from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court. (p 410, col. 2.)

Appeal against the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 25th January 1922.

Messrs. P. N. Sapru and M. N. Raina, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain ornaments and jewellery which were valued at Rs. 280. The Courts below have decreed the claim.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 have come up in second appeal and on their behalf the main point that is taken is that the suit was instituted in the wrong Court. It is their contention that the suit was of a nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and that, therefore, the Munsif in whose Court the suit was instituted had no jurisdiction to try it. If this contention were to prevail there would be the initial difficulty in the way of the appellants that no second appeal would lie. Under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure no second appeal lies in any suit of the nature cognisable by Courts of Small Causes when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed five hundred rupees. Therefore on the appellant's own showing no second appeal would lie and this appeal must be dismissed.

The learned Vakil for the appellants has, therefore, been forced to ask this Court to convert this second appeal into an application in revision and to exercise its powers on the revisional side. If a clear case of the absence of jurisdiction had been made out, I would have willingly treated this as a revision. The present, however, is not such a case.

The plaintiffs claimed to be the heirs of one Musammat Lalti deceased. Their case was that after her death she left certain ornaments belonging to her about which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 raised some disputes before the police. The police handed over these ornaments to defendant No. 3 who held them as a stakeholder. The plaintiffs served a notice on defendant No. 3 and as remarked by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court the defendant No. 3 replied saying that he was willing to deliver the ornaments to the rightful owner and that the plaintiffs should satisfy him that they were the rightful owners. On this the plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which these proceedings have arisen. In their written statement the defendants did not deny the genealogical tree set up by the plaintiffs, but disputed that the oranaments and jewels belonged to the deceased. They pleaded jus tertii and said that one Musammat Kunwar was the real owner of these ornaments which had only been lent to Musammat Lalti deceased. On this plea having been raised Musammmat Kunwar was made a pro forma defendant. It is true that the plaint was not further amended and no express relief for a declaration was added.

The learned Munsif overruled the objection of the defendants as to want of jurisdiction, being of opinion that the suit was in essence a suit of a declaratory nature and was, therefore, cognisable by a Civil Court on the regular side. On the merits he found that the ornaments had, in fact, belonged to the deceased and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover them. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court on appeal has confirmed the findings of the first Court. The reasons for holding that the Munsif had jurisdiction to try the case given by him are slightly different. He was of opinion that the case fell under clause 28 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. On the merits he agreed with the first Court holding that the ornaments were proved to have belonged to Musammat Lalti Bibi and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover them.

On the pleadings it is clear that defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 who are the applicants before me were mere pro forma defendants. They were not in actual possession of the ornaments in question and were obviously impleaded in the suit with a view to make the decree binding on them. Although no relief for a declaration against them is sought it is obvious that the chief reason for impleading them was to have it declared as against them that the property belongs to the plaintiffs, so that no further dispute might arise in future. It is also quite apparent that the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 could not possibly have been impleaded in a suit brought in the Court of Small Causes. Those persons, if impleaded, would very naturally have contended that the plaint disclosed no cause of action as no relief was claimed against them. If I were to interfere now and set aside the decrees of the Courts below and direct the plaint to be returned in order that it may be filed in the Court of Small Causes the result would be that the suit as against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 would not be maintainable there at all. I must, therefore, consider whether the plaint, as it stood, having impleaded all the defendants in the suit, was one which could properly be filed in the Court of Small Causes. In my opinion this was not so. I agree with the Munsif that the suit must be deemed to be one of a declaratory nature which is expressly exempted under clause 19 of the Second Schedule.

I must, however, point out that the reason given by the Judge of the Court below for holding that the Munsif had jurisdiction is not correct. His view was as I have said that clause 28 of the Second Schedule was applicable. That clause exempts a suit for the whole or a share of the property of an intestate. It has been held in a number of cases that that clause contemplates a suit between rival claimants when the relief claimed is to recover a share of the estate and not only an item of the estate as against a third party, This was the view accepted in the cases of Chedi v. Gulabo (1) and Tika Shahu v. Chirkat Shahu (2). Clause 28, therefore, was not applicable. But in view of the opinion expressed by me above the Munsif had jurisdiction to try it.

Furthermore there is this additional difficulty in the way of the defendants. They have not presented a proper application for revision before me and the jurisdiction to interfere under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure is after all only discretionary. The case has been fought out on the merits and both the Courts below have come to a concurrent finding against the defendants. It is an accident that the appeal was actually heard by the Judge of the Small Cause Court in whose Court the suit ought to have been filed as contended by the defendants. He on the merits too has agreed with the finding of the first-Court. Under all these circumstances therefore I decline to interfere even on the revision side. The result therefore is that this appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Execution of decree—Decree against mortgagor's property—Amount deposited by mortgagee—Deposit, whether enures to benefit of all interested parties—Mortgage satisfied—Mortgagee, right of, to withdraw deposit.

A Mohammadan widow professing to act for herself and her minor children transferred certain property. The transaction was, however, challenged by the children by a suit and a decree was passed which provided that on their paying their share of the purchase-money within a certain time, they would be entitled to recover possession, but if they failed to do so, their suit would stand dismissed. Shortly before the expiry of the time a mortgagee from one of the children paid the sum in Court to save the property. Subsequently his mortgage having been discharged, the mortgagee applied for a return of his deposit. The application was opposed by a transferee of the mortgaged property :—

Held, (1) that the mortgagee had an absolute right in the protection of his own property to make the deposit and so prevent his security from becoming valueless. (p. 412, col. 2)

(2) that the benefit of the deposit enured to all parties having an interest in the condition of the decree being satisfied and the mortgagee could not be allowed to withdraw the deposit without giving the transferee an opportunity of paying the money, such payment being treated as within the period allowed by the decree. (p. 412, col. 2).

Appeal from the judgment of the Bombay High Court, dated the 22nd September 1920.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C., and Raikes, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunnre, K. C., and McNair for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bombay of September 22, 1920, which set aside an order of the Subordinate Judge of Thana, dated October 5, 1918.

The appellant derives such title as he has to the property in dispute from the widow of Balabhai, a Mahommedan resident in Bombay. When she sold the property, the widow professed to act for herself and as guardian of her minor children. The transaction was, however, challenged by Banemiya, the only son of Balabhai then surviving, and by others representing the rest of the family, by a suit raised in 1914 in the Thana Court, in which they claimed that the sale by the widow should be set aside in so far as the shares of the son and daughters were concerned. In that suit, which ultimately came to depend before the High Court of Bombay, Banemiya and his co-plaintiffs, on February 26, 1918, obtained a decree aganist the appellant which is thus expressed :—

"The plaintiffs will have six months within which to pay their share, i. e., 10-16th of the Rs. 1,250 and the Rs. 1,200, with added interest as directed in the lower Court's judgment."

"If within six months the plaintiffs pay the sums due from them they are to recover possession of the land in suit. But if within that time the plaintiffs do not pay the sums due from them then the suit to stand dismissed with costs."

Prior to the date of this decree Banemiya had, on July 21, 1915, mortgaged his share of the property to one Dattatraya R. Gandhi, for Rs. 2,000. On September 15, 1916, he had sold a five-annas share to Narayan, a brother of Gandhi, who in turn transferred it to one Motilal Ratansi. Subsequent to the decree Banemiya contracted, on June 10, 1918, to sell to the respondent all his remaining interest in the property and undertook to obtain an assignment in his favour of the right, title and interest of the heirs of his sister who had died. By these transactions Banemiya, for himself and the other plaintiffs (assuming he was authorised to act for them), deprived himself of all interest in the conditional decree of February 26, 1918. In these circumstances the mortgagee, Dattaraya R. Gandhi, realising that the security which he held over the property would become valueless if the condition specified in the decree wss not purified, on August 22, 1918, or four days before the money fell to be paid, presented an application in which on the narrative that Banemiya had failed to pay the sum required and that he estimated the sum at less than Rs. 4,000, prayed that the said amount might be ordered to be received for payment to the appellant according to the High Court decree and paid to him. The money was duly deposited in Court and a notice to this effect was signed by Mr. R. B. Gogate, Sub-Judge.

No question has been raised as to the sufficiency of the amount to satisfy the appellant's claim nor is it open to doubt that the appellant would have been entitled to uplift the whole sum of Rs. 4,000 or as much of it as represented the Rs. 1,250 and Rs. 1,200 with added interest which formed a first charge on the shares of Banemiya and his sister.

The appellant, however, made no application for payment to him of the sum deposited. Instead of doing so he entered into an agreement dated October, 3, 1918, with the two brothers Gandhi, the substance of which was that in consideration of Rs. 5,000 paid by the appellant to them, they agreed to withdraw the application under which the Rs. 4,000 had been deposited and to claim the return of the said sum to the depositor. In terms of this agreement, an application in the name of Gandhi was duly lodged on October 4, 1918, in the Court of the First Class Sub-Judge at Thana. The applicant prayed for the return of the deposit made by him on the ostensible ground that as the amount of his mortgage had been repaid there was now no possibility of his being involved in loss. The application was opposed by the respondent. He maintained that the payment made by Gandhi had fulfilled the condition in the decree, and offered to pay the amount of Rs. 4,000 to the appellant on the footing that such payment should be treated as equivalent to the payment made by Gandhi. The Sub-Judge overruled the respondent's contentions and allowed Gandhi to take back the money and it was, in fact, uplifted by him. The respondent thereupon appealed to the High Court, which set aside the order granting leave to Gandhi to take back his money and allowed respondent an opportunity of paying the money within a specified short period such payment to be treated as within the period of six months allowed by the decree of February 26, 1918.

Various contentions were put forward by the appellant in support of his appeal from this order: (1) He contended that on a sound construction of the decree the sum that was provided to be paid by the plaintiffs in that suit fell to be paid to the appellant and that a deposit in Court did not satisfy the condition in the decree. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that while the condition would have been satisfied by a payment to the appellant in person, which he accepted, it was equally satisfied by a payment into Court, and that the latter was, in the circumstances, the appropriate mode of satisfying the condition. (2) It was contended that a deposit made by another than a party to the suit did not satisfy the condition, and that the mortgagee, who was not a party, had no right in a question with the appellant to make the deposit. Their Lordships agreee with the learned Judges of the High Court in rejecting this argument for the reasons they state. They are further of opinion that the mortgagee had an absolute right in the protection of his own property to make the deposit and so prevent his security from becoming valueless. To the extent of the value of his mortgage granted by the plaintiffs in his favour he had acquired their rights, and the mortgage-deed expressly authorises him to charge on the mortgage property any expenses which the mortgagee might be required to make for his protection.

(3) Lastly, it was contended that the mortgagee had an absolute right to withdraw the deposit. If no other interests were in question but those of the mortgagee and the appellant, this would no doubt have been the case. But it cannot be overlooked that the real object of the application for the withdrawal was to defeat the claims of the respondent who was the only other person that had an interest in the condition expressed in the decree being satisfied. Their Lordships think that the benefit of the deposit having been made before the expiry of the time limit necessarily enured to all parties having an interest in the condition being satisfied. The legitimate interest of the appellant was to obtain payment of the sums to which he was preferably entitled and this was secured to him by the deposit. Just as the plaintiffs' suit would have stood dismissed if the deposit had not been made, so equally the decree provided that if the sums in question were paid the plaintiffs were to recover possession of the land in suit. The respondent in virtue of the agreement of June 10, 1918, of which he subsequently obtained a decree of specific implement, is now in right of this decree and entitled to enforce it against the appellant. As, however, the money deposited by Dattatraya had been actually uplifted by him before the order of the High Court was made, the condition which the Court imposed on the respondent appeared to be the only method by which the position which had been inverted by the appellant's action could be restored so as to do justice between the parties. Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the decision of the High Court was right and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

When a suit is brought and the Court has to make up its mind as to whether it is within its pecuniary jurisdiction, all that it can rely on is the valuation of the subject-matter which is given in the plaint. (p. 414, col. 2).

It is open to a defendant when he appears to answer the suit, to raise the plea that the suit has not been properly valued and to show, if he can, that the Court in which the suit has been brought has no jurisdiction to try it. But if no such plea is taken by defendant when he has had the opportunity of raising it, it cannot be said that the Court has acted without jurisdiction. (p. 414, col. 2).

A decree cannot be set aside by a separate suit brought for the purpose, except on the basis of fraud or of something akin to fraud. (p. 415, col. 1).

Where a decree is passed ex-parte against a defendant after due service of summons, a suit to set aside the decree on the ground that the suit was undervalued and the Court which passed the decree had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, is not maintainable. (p. 414, col. 2).

Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bijnor at Moradabad, dated the 26th May 1921.

Mr. Raza Ali, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing the learned Counsel for the appellants in this case we are clearly of opinion that the appeal must fail.

The relevant facts to be stated are as follows :—

In the year 1882 one Muhammad Rahmat Ali executed an agreement whereby he undertook to pay to his daughter-in-law Musammat Amina Khatun a sum of Rs. 15 a month for food and clothing. This payment was to be made to her during her life-time.

In order to secure the performance of this undertaking Saiyid Rahmat Ali hypothecated a 5 biswas muafi share in the village named Phondapur and charged this property with the allowance which he had contracted to give his daughter-in-law. It was distinctly provided by this agreement that if Rahmat Ali failed to pay the said monthly allowance of Rs. 15 any month, the lady was to be entitled to take possession of the property which was charged and to realise the income thereof under her own supervision and to spend the same for her food and clothing.

Pausing here, it is clear beyond all doubt that the lady if she took possession was to be entitled to bring to her use the entire income of the property upon which her allowance had been charged during her life-time.

KHUDAJIATUL KUBRA v. AMINA KHATUN

It is apparent from the judgment in this case that Amina Khatun has had on more than one occasion to bring suits to enforce this agreement.

Rahmat Ali himself has died but he has left daughters, Musammat Khudajiatul Kubra and Musammat Atiqatul Kubra, who are the plaintiffs in the present suit.

The other issue of Rahmat Ali is Sahib Saqib Hussain who is married to Musammat Amina Khatun.

In the year 1920 Musammat Amina Khatun brought a suit against the present two plaintiffs, Musammat Khudajiatul Kubra and Musammat Atiqatul Kubra, for possession of a 2½ biswas share of the property in Mauza Phondapur.

It appears that these ladies were in possession of this 2½ biswas share, that being one-half of the 5 biswas share upon which Rahmat Ali had created the charge in favour of his daughter-in law Musammat Amina Khatun.

Full particulars of this case are not before us. All we have on record is the judgment of the Munsif. There are also one or two copies of certain statements which were made in the course of this case.

According to the finding of the Court below the lady Amina Khatun, alleged apparently that a sum of Rs. 54|- odd was owing to her on account of arrears of the allowance to which she was entitled and she asked to be allowed to enforce the agreement by taking possession of the property charged with her maintenance including the 2½ biswas of this property which were in the possession of the present plaintiffs at that time.

According to what is stated in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, this suit was decreed ex parte, but after due service upon Khudajiatul Kubra and Atiqatul Kubra.

In execution of that decree, possession over this property, has passed to Musammat Amina Khatun.

It is important to observe that neither of the defendants in that suit has ever made any attempt to challenge the decree in appeal.

Instead of doing this they have launched the suit out of which this present appeal has arisen with all sorts of allegations directed against Musammat Amina Khatun with respect to the conduct of the earlier suit in the Munsif's Court. It is said that the suit was brought collusively and fraudulently, and it is also sought to be made out that the decree of the Munsif under which possession passed to Amina Khatun is altogether void for want of jurisdiction.

With regard to this plea of want of jurisdiction the case which was put for the plaintiff was this, namely, that the value of this 2½ biswas share which has passed into possession of Amina in execution of decree is Rs. 7,000. It is pointed out that this being the value of the property in suit in the case which was tried by the Munsif the Munsif had no jurisdiction to give a decree for possession inasmuch as his pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to suits of a value not exceeding Rs. 1,000 or at most Rs. 2,000 if he has been specially invested with higher powers.

The question really is whether these plaintiffs are entitled to maintain a suit on this allegation. We are clearly of opinion that no suit of this kind can be maintained to set aside the Munsif's decree on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

It is perfectly clear on all hands that when a suit is filed in a Civil Court the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court is primarily determined by the valuation which the plaintiff puts upon the subject-matter of the suit.

It may be, that sometimes the value of the suit is exaggerated and sometimes it is underestimated, but at any rate, when a suit is brought and the Court has to make up its mind as to whether it is within its pecuniary jurisdiction, all that it can rely on is the valuation of the subject-matter which is given in the plaint.

Of course, it is open to a defendant when he appears to answer the suit, to raise the plea that the suit has not been properly valued and to show, if he can, that the Court in which the suit has been brought has no jurisdiction to try it. But clearly, if no such plea is taken by a defendant when he has had the opportunity of raising it, it cannot be said that the Court has acted without jurisdiction. The Court has assumed jurisdiction on the basis of a statement made in the plaint upon which it is bound to rely, a statement which has not been challenged or corrected in any way; and so, it is not possible to argue as has been argued here that the decree passed by the Munsif in this case was altogether void for want of jurisdiction in the Munsif.

In this connection we may draw attention to the provisions of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, Act VII of 1887. That section lays down that unless an objection to the over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit has been raised in the Court of first instance it shall not be entertained by an Appellate Court unless, for reasons to be recorded in writing, the Appellate Court is satisfied that the suit in appeal was wrongly valued and that the wrong valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. This enactment operates in spite of anything contained in section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure which corresponds to section 99 of the present Code. It is clearly contemplated there that any objection which is to be raised on the ground of pecuniary jurisdiction must be taken in the Trial Court at the earliest possible opportunity and where the objection is not taken it is not to be entertainable thereafter unless the Appellate Court is satisfied that there has been some miscarriage of justice on the merits.

If this is the law in so far as it concerns procedure in appeals, it seems to us that in no way ought it to be possible for a party against whom a decree has been passed in the circumstances we find in this case, to be able to go to another Court and institute a fresh suit for the purpose of having the decree set aside. If this sort of thing were allowed there would be no end to litigation. It is perfectly well understood of course, that the decree of a Court may be set aside by a suit brought, but it is also the rule that no such decree can be set aside except on the basis of fraud or of something akin to fraud. In the present case, although there were allegations of fraud made in the plaint, no case of fraud whatever has been made out and for this reason therefore we hold that this suit, to set aside the decree which was passed by the Munsif on the 7th of May 1920, is not maintainable. This finding of ours really puts an end to the whole of the case. It has been suggested to us that we ought, in any case, to allow an account to be taken between the plaintiffs and Musammat Amina Khatun on the ground that she is entitled under the agreement only to a sum of Rs. 15 a month, whereas, the present profits accruing from the property upon which this allowance is charged, are greatly in excess of that sum. We think it inexpedient to say anything about this claim except that the suit as framed was not a suit for accounts.

Another suggestion has been made to us that, in any case, under the terms of an award which is printed at pages 22 and 23 of the record, we ought to pass a money decree against Saiyid Saqib Husain the second defendant who is the husband of Musammat Amina Khatun. It is not clear to us however what decree for money could be passed against Saqib Husain and again we have to draw notice to the fact that no such relief was claimed in the plaint.

We are satisfied therefore that this suit was a suit which ought not to have been entertained and which though for other reasons, was rightly dismissed by the Court below. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (b)—Receipt of mortgage money—Registration.

A receipt showing that the whole of the mortgage money has been paid does not require registration under section 17 (b) of the Registration Act, unless the receipt mentions that the mortgage has been extinguished thereby. (p. 416, col. 1.)

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 49 of 1922, confirming the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Karwar, in Suit No. 261 of 1920.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the Judge was right in holding that the two receipts showing that the whole of the mortgage money was paid did not require registration. If it had been mentioned that thereby the mortgage had been extinguished then they would come within the provisions of section 17 (b) of the Indian Registration Act. The plaintiff was entitled to show that the mortgage money had been paid, and if he succeeded he would undoubtedly be entitled to recover the mortgaged property. But while he was proving the payment it was not necessary for him to prove that the passing of the receipts would extinguish the mortgage, and that was the distinction referred to in the decision in Shidlingappa v. Chenbasappa (1), where it was held on the facts of the case that receipts passed by a mortgagee for sums paid on account of the mortgage debt and exceeding Rs. 100 each, were not inadmissible in evidence for want of registration under Act III of 1877, section 17. The learned Chief Justice said (p. 238):—

"Undoubtedly the payment reduces the sum due at the time on the mortgage, and thus modifies the account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; but it does not operate to limit or confine within narrower limits the right or interest of the mortgagee in the land, which is simply to have the payment of the principal and interest secured on the mortgaged premises by some one or other of the remedies available for that purpose."

When the money has been paid, the need for the security has gone.

The appeal, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

Pre-emption decree, compliance with—Short payment—Costs, whether can be deducted.

It is the duty of a person holding a decree for pre-emption to take all precautions to ensure the carrying out of the terms of the decree.

A pre-emptor who has been awarded costs is entitled to deduct the amont of those costs from the pre-emption price at the time of payment. If, however, he does not choose to do so, and fails to pay the full amount mentioned in the decree within the period prescribed, there is no compliance with the terms of the decree.

Kanhaya Lal v. Muhammad Shafi Khan, 18 Ind. Cas. 600 ; 141 P. L. R. 1913 ; 3 P. W. R. 1913, referred to.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 3rd December 1919.

Mr. Obedulla, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.— Kapuria Mal and Mussammat Indi instituted a suit against Wali Mohammad and others claiming to be entitled to pre-empt immoveable property that had been sold. On the 25th of March 1918 a decree was passed in their favour. The amount the decree-holders had to pay in order to obtain possession of the property was Rs. 99, and they were entitled to Rs. 19-10 as costs of the suit. The pre-emption price had to be paid into Court by the 30th April 1918. The opposite party preferred an appeal to the District Judge which was dismissed, the time for the payment of the pre-emption price was not extended ; indeed no time was fixed by the learned District Judge. The plaintiff decree-holders had, on the 18th of December 1917, paid in a sum of Rs. 15 as a deposit. On the 23rd of April 1918, a further sum of Rs. 83 was paid, thus making a total of Rs. 98.

WALI MAHOMED v. KAPURIA MAL

Subsequent to this the decree-holders took possession of the property and realized the costs amounting to Rs. 19-10. Wali Mahmmad then drew the attention of the 1st Court to the fact that the pre-emption price had not been paid into Court within the prescribed period, and that therefore the decree was null and void. The learned Munsif found this to be the case and holding that the pre-emption decree was null and void directed that possession must be given to Wali Mahammad. The decree-holders then preferred an appeal to the District Judge claiming that they had paid the full amount of Rs. 99-0-0, having paid Re. 1-0 0 on the 28th of August 1918. It has been found by both the Courts that this sum of Re. 1-0-0 was never paid, and in any case it was not paid within the fixed period. This is a question which cannot be gone into in Second Appeal. We have it then that the pre-emption price had been short paid to the extent of Re. 1-0-0.

The learned District Judge, however, accepted the appeal, holding that inasmuch as the pre-emptors decree-holders were entitled to take credit for Rs. 19-10-0, the amount of the costs that they had been allowed, there had been a sufficient compliance with the original decree.

Against this decision Wali Mohammad has come up to this Court through Mr. Obedulla, and I have heard Mr. Durga Das on behalf of the decree-holders respondents.

My attention was drawn to Kanhaya Lal v. Mohammad Shafi Khan (1). In that case the pre-emption price had been short paid by one anna, and it was held that the pre-emption decree had not been complied with and that the pre-emptor could not, therefore, take possession of the land. This case has been held by the learned District Judge to be inapplicable although the learned District Judge has given no reason for coming to this conclusion. He has based his decision on the various decisions cited in the Law of Pre-emption by Ellis, 3rd edition page 371. The statement of the law relating to deduction of costs from purchase-money is thus given by Mr. Ellis. Where the plaintiff has been awarded costs he is entitled to deduct the amounts of costs awarded him from the purchase-money at the time of payment. In support of this proposition he has cited decisions of the Chief Court and the Allahabad High Court. It seems to me that the facts of the present case are not on all fours with the facts of the cases cited by Mr. Ellis. I have no doubt that a pre-emptor, who has been awarded costs, is entitled to deduct the amount of those costs from the pre-emption price at the time of payment. In the present case the pre-emptors did not do this. Had they, when they paid the sum of Rs. 83 into Court deducted their costs therefrom, they would have been within their rights, although they had not been specifically authorized by the decree to do this. As a matter of fact they appear to have been under the impression that they had paid the whole of the pre-emption price, namely Rs. 99-0-0. They, therefore, obviously never intended to deduct from the pre-emption price the amount of costs that had been awarded to them. This is further indicated by the fact they subsequently sued out execution for Rs. 12-10-0 for costs that had been awarded to them. The learned District Judge appears to have held that inasmuch as they could have, had they so desired, deducted the whole of the Rs. 19-10-0 from the pre-emption price at the time of payment, although they did not do so, the payment of Rs. 98, leaving Rs. 19-10-0 cost still unrealized, was a sufficient compliance with the decree. In this view I am unable to agree. No doubt, the short payment was due to a mistake. Nevertheless it was the duty of the decree-holders to take all precautions to ensure the carrying out of the terms of the decree, and there can be no doubt that the full payment of the pre-emption price was not made in the prescribed period.

I, therefore, accept this appeal with costs and setting aside the order of the learned District Judg restore that of the learned Munsif.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 29 OF 1923.

MOTICHAND GIRDHARSHET—
DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

CHANDRABAI—PLAINTIFF— RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mayukha—Regenerate Castes—Illegitimate children—Maintenance—Marrige expenses.

There is no direct prohibition against illegitimate children of Hindus of the regenerate castes governed by the Mayukha being entitled to maintenance, nor does the maintenance cease when they come of age. The illegitimate children, however, are not entitled to marriage expenses. (p. 418, cols 1 & 2).

Appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Alibag, in suit No. 34 of 1920.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee and S. C. Joshi (with Messrs. M. N. Talpade and P. S. Bakhale), for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is a suit by the plaintiff No. 1 to recover arrears of maintenance and future maintenance for herself and her three sons, and her daughter, and also marriage expenses of plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4. The first plaintiff was the kept mistress of one Girdhar Madhowji and the other plaintiffs were her children by him. The parties come from Alibag where they are subject to the Vyavahara Mayukha and it is contended before us that illegitimate children under the Mayukha would not be entitled to any maintenance. However, we agree with the decision of the learned Judge that it does not appear from the Mayukha that there is any direct prohibition against illegitimate children in the case of the regenerate castes being entitled to maintenance, and considering the authorities which have been referred to, it would be going too far if we were to lay down that in the Districts, which are governed by the Mayukha, illegitimate sons are 'not entitled to maintenance.

With regard to the quantum of maintenance, we think that as under the Will of Girdhar, Chandrabai, plaintiff No. 1, was to be allowed Rs. 100 annually as maintenance, she ought to be allowed that sum now. Therefore, we alter the decree of the lower Court by directing that plaintiff No. 1 should get maintenance at Rs. 100 a year. We see no reason to alter the decision of the lower Court with reference to plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

With regard to marriage expenses allowed by the decree to plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4, no authority has been cited for such an allowance. That must be deleted.

It was also contended that in the case of illegitimate sons the maintenance ceased when they came of age. But no authority for such a proposition has been cited, and it must be taken that the right under Hindu law of illegitimate sons to maintenance is a substitute for any right which they might otherwise have had to share in the family property. We do not think therefore that maintenance should cease when plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 come of age. However, if, in future circumstances alter, we give the first defendant liberty to apply at his own expense, if he thinks he can make out a case for reducing the amount of maintenance.

In the circumstances of the case the appellant must pay the respondents' costs of the appeal and cross-objections.

Shah, J.—I agree. I desire to deal with the argument that has been urged on behalf of theappellant that the illegitimate sons of his father Girdhar are not entitled to maintenance according to Hindu law. The deceased Girdhar was a Vaishya. So far as the Mitakshara is concerned, it is clear that they would be entitled to a simple maintenance (see Mitakshara, Ch. I, Section XII, para. 3. Stokes' Hindu Law Books, p. 426). The Vyavahara Mayukha is silent on this point. (See Stokes' Hindu Law Books, pp. 55 and 56, Ch. IV, Section IV, para. 32 and Mandlik's Hindu Law). It has been argued that the author of the Vyavahara Mayukha does not mean to adopt the view of the author of the Mitakshara. I am unable to accept that contention. It seems to me that the texts of Brihaspati and Gautama mentioned in para. 30 of the same section in the Vyavahara Mayukha refer to a son born by a Shudra wife. The subject of dasiputra is dealt with in para. 32. It is, therefore, true to say that Nilkantha is silent on the question of the right of the illegitimate sons of a Brahmin, Kshatriaya and Vaishya. It is, however, a recognised rule in this Presidency that so far as it may be reasonably possible the Mitakshara and the Vyavahara Mayukha should be harmonised, when they are not inconsistent with each other. According to this rule it would be fair to hold that Nilkantha accepts Vijnaneshwara's view on this point; or else he would have expressly said so. The reference to this subject in para. 32 of Ch. IV, section IV, is made in such a manner as to indicate that Nilkantha does not mean to dissent from Vijnaneshwara's view on this subject. This view is further confirmed by the fact that Mitra Mishra expressly accepts this view in the Viramitrodaya. (See Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastri's Translation, p. 130, and Vira Mitrodaya, Calcutta edition of 1875, p. 623). It is clear that the view taken in the Mitakshara must be accepted on the point.

As regards the argument that the maintenance should be limited to the period of minority, it may be mentioned that there is nothing in the texts bearing on this point in the Mitakshara or in the Vyavahara Mayukha to justify this limitation.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE NO. 1 OF 1923.

May 16, 1923.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Rankin.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 38, 69—Reference under s. 69 form, contents, and competency of—Application under s. 38, nature of.

A Small Cause Court is competent to make a Reference to the High Court, under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, upon an application made under section 38. (p. 420, col. 1).

In order that a Reference under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act may be in the proper form, there must be a statement of the facts of the case signed by the Judges who heard it; the point on which there is a difference of opinion must be formulated, and statements of the reasons assigned by each Judge in support of his view. (p. 422, col. 1).

An application under section 38 of the Act is a stage in the suit which is not necessarily terminated by the decree, and attracts the operation of section 69. (p. 421, col. 1).

Case-law considered.

Reference heard by the Sixth Judge, Calcutta Small Cause Court, on the 18th August 1922 and New Trial Application heard by the Officiating Chief Judge and the Sixth Judge on the 8th March 1923.

Messrs. B. K. Ghosh and D. N. Mitter, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Surita, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882. The suit, which was brought by the buyer against the seller for damages for breach of an indent contract, was instituted on the 18th July, 1922. The trial took place before the sixth Judge who dismissed the suit on the 18th August 1922. On the 7th September, 1922, the plaintiff made an application under section 38 before the Chief Judge and the sixth Judge who directed notice to issue. The matter was adjourned from time to time till the 16th February 1923, when the application was heard in the presence of both sides. There was a further hearing on the 22nd February 1923, when the Court reserved judgment. On the 8th March 1923, two separate judgments were delivered one by the Chief Judge, the other by the sixth Judge. They disagreed in their conclusions. The judgment of the Chief Judge narrates the history of the case, contains an exposition of his view of the law, concludes with the expression of opinion that the suit should have been decreed and formulates two questions which are referred to this Court. The judgment of the sixth Judge similarly contains a statement of facts, an exposition of the law, and an expression of opinion that the suit had been rightly dismissed by him. We have to consider whether the Reference thus made is in conformity with section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and in this connection two points require examination, namely, first whether a Reference under section 69 is permissible on an application under section 38, and secondly, whether the Court has in this case drawn up a " statement of the facts", within the meaning of section 69.

As regards the first point, we are of opinion that the Small Cause Court is competent to make a Reference under section 69 on an application under section 38. Section 38 is in these terms.

" Where a suit has been contested, the Small Cause Court may, on the application of either party, made within eight days from the date of the decree or order in the suit (not being a decree passed under section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure), order a new trial to be held, or alter, set aside or reverse the decree or order, upon such terms as it thinks reasonable, and may, in the meantime, stay the proceedings."

Section 69 is in these terms :

" If two or more Judges of the Small Cause Court sit together in any suit, or in any proceeding under Chapter VII of this Act, and differ in their opinion as to any question of law or usage having the force of law, or the construction of a document, which construction may affect the merits, or if in any suit or any such proceeding, in which the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds five hundred rupees, any such question arises, and either party so requires, the Small Cause Court shall draw up a statement of the facts of the case, and refer such statement, under section 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the opinion of the High Court, and shall either reserve judgment or give judgment contingent upon such opinion."

The decision of Garth, C.J., and Wilson, J. in Nusserwanjee v. Pursutum (1) is an authority for the proposition that an order rejecting an application for a new trial subject to the decision of the High Court on certain point or points referred, is not a contingent judgment within the meaning of section 69, and points of difference between the Judges at that stage cannot form matters for Reference. In support of this view reference was made to the decision of Couch, C. J. and Pontifex, J. in Hall v. Joakim (2). On the other hand, the decision of Peacock, C. J. and Mitter, J. in Isan Chandra v. Haran Sardar (3), points to the opposite conclusion. The Madras High Court in Oakshort v. The British India Steam Navigation Co. Ltd (4), followed the decision in Nusserwanjee v. Pursutum (1). The later decisions in Madras, however, have uniformly adopted the contrary view : Seshammal v. Munusami (5), Rangiah Naidu v. Rungiah (6), Lodd Govindass Krishnadass v. Rukmani Bhai (7) and Ramasamy Aiyer v. Madras Times Printing and Publishing Co., Ltd. (8). In this conflict of judicial opinion, we must turn to the language of the statute and ascertain its plain meaning.

Section 69 authorises a Reference when two or more Judges of the Small Cause Court sit together in any suit and differ in their opinion as to any question of law or usage having the force of law or the construction of a document, which construction may affect the merits. The term " suit " is not defined either in the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act or in the Code of Civil Procedure, and its meaning cannot be determined apart from the context. The decisions in Gagan Chand v. Caspersz (9) and Batasu v. Jaiti (10) show that the term "suit" sometimes includes the appellate stage, while section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code 1908 speaks of an appeal before His Majesty in Council as a suit. We are not unmindful that, notwithstanding this, it has been held that an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is not a suit within the meaning of section 10. Nainappa Chetti v. Chidambaram Chetti (11). In Shayama Charan Mitter v. Debendra Nath Mukerjee (12), it was held that the term suit includes even execution proceedings, though Venkata Chandrappa Nayaninaru v. Venkatarama Reddi (13) might be invoked to
